I am prepared to see some differences between the opposing Front Benches, but I would resist Opposition Members' demands that we should expand activity in the Health Service to meet all the demands placed on it now or in future. On treatments involving new technologies —particularly GIFT—some may feel that, because of their ethical difficulties, because they are expensive, because as yet the success rates are poor and because some would say that they are treatments for people who are not ill in the strict sense, they should not be part of NHS provision at all. The Government do not agree with that. We see no cause to ban such treatments from the Health Service, provided that their practice is properly regulated. There is a fully funded NHS in-vitro fertilisation clinic in Manchester, as the hon. Member for Barking may know, and many of the others are partly funded. It is for the local health authorities to decide whether that work is of sufficiently high priority to put off something else.

I hope that the House will agree with me when I say that we should not forget that all the latest techniques cannot help everyone. I do not believe that people's status is determined by whether they have children. Childless people are not, in any way, lesser people. We all have our contribution to make to society. Although for many women that contribution is by bearing and bringing up their children, for others it is by other means. To be childless is not to be less of a woman, less of a man or less of a citizen. I deeply hope that that thought may offer a little consolation to some of those who are listening tonight.

It being Ten o'clock, the motion for the Adjournment of the House lapsed, without Question put.

STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS, &c.

Question agreed to.

Northern Ireland Housing Executive

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Neubert.]

10 pm

Mr. Roy Beggs (Antrim, East): May I place on record my thanks to you, Mr. Speaker, for permitting me to draw attention to the misleading information supplied to me by the director of operations—the deputy chief executive—of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive on behalf of its chairman.

On 7 December 1987 my Ulster Unionist colleagues, my hon. Friend the Member for Antrim, South (Mr. Forsythe) who is here tonight and will, I hope, catch your eye, Mr. Speaker, my hon. Friend the Member for Belfast, North (Mr. Walker), the mayor of Lisburn, Mr. Bleakes, and myself, met the chairman and senior officers of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive at the housing centre in Belfast. It was not a social call and we declined to accept any hospitality prior to a formal business meeting. It was an opportunity to raise specific matters and to have them dealt with on behalf of constituents.

At that meeting I referred particularly to problems in my constituency and to the problems being experienced at the Windmill estate, Carrickfergus, where windows larger than the original windows had been installed in some properties. I had been informed that new venetian blinds and curtains, fitted to suit the original windows, became a total loss to the tenants who could not afford to replace them after the imposed change in window size. I sought information and assistance for my constituents.

The director of operations, the deputy chief executive, replied on behalf of the chairman of the Housing Executive about the four areas of concern that I had raised at the meeting. His letter, dated 18 December, dealt with the specific issues of redevelopment proposals at Tullygarley, Larne, the Windmill estate, Carrickfergus, Green Walk, Rathcoole and Ballystrudder. He gave a detailed response and for the information of the House I should like to place on record his response to the problems at the Windmill estate, Carrickfergus:

"At present, there is an ongoing planned external maintenance scheme at Westmount Avenue, Windmill, Carrickfergus which includes for the replacement of front and rear panels and front and rear windows. However, from the date the proposals were submitted to Building Control until the contract was awarded, regulations in relation to lighting and ventilation changed with the result that the demands of our original windows did not now satisfy the current Building Regulations, and so large windows were installed in the first five dwellings and curtains and venetian blinds no longer fitted. The contractor has now come to an agreement with the tenants by way of compensation, and in view of the publicity surrounding this contract, the Building Control Officers have now agreed that we can revert to the original specification and provide windows of a smaller size to those being replaced."

I work closely with all the councillors in my constituency. Fortunately for me, in east Antrim we have no Sinn Fein councillors to work with. I, in turn, endeavour to enlist the support of councillors and undertake to keep them informed.

Early in the new year, on 8 January, I copied the relevant reply from the Housing Executive about the Windmill estate to the mayor of Carrickfergus, Alderman Jim Brown. Because of the repeated references in that reply, I copied it to the district building control officer at the town hall in Carrickfergus and asked him for his comments, which were as follows:

(1) There is no minimum size requirement regarding windows in the Building Regulations.

(2) There has been no change in the Building Regulations regarding minimum window size since Building Regulations were introduced in 1973.

(3) The Building Regulations do not require that buildings erected under former control, e.g. Bye-laws, be brought to current standards."

How can those points be reconciled with the statement I received on behalf of the chairman of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive? Is it not more than a coincidence that an application for building regulation approval arrived at the building control department in Carrickfergus borough council on 8 December 1987, a day after my visit to the Housing Executive headquarters in Belfast?

The building control officer's fourth point was this:

"Application for Building Regulation approval was not received until the 8 December 1987. This followed my becoming aware of the work which was being carried out following press reports of the controversy in early December, 1987. I then drew to the attention of the N.I.H.E. and their agents that an application was required for the work which was being carried out."

So the executive was aware that no application had been properly made. The fifth point was:

"Since there was no requirement under the Building Regulations, to change the window size in the first instance, I did not subsequently agree that windows of the original size would be satisfactory. There was no necessity for such an agreement!"

Again I was very concerned at the apparent contradiction in that statement.

I am a simple man, brought up to believe every word from my mother's lips. She often said, "Now come on, son —tell the truth and shame the devil," and I always tried to please her. I believe that even when the truth hurts it must be told. It is vitally important that hon. Members should be completely confident, and be able to place their trust in their dealings with other hon. Members and with civil servants in our various Government Departments. They should even be able to place their trust and confidence in their dealings with officers employed in quangos such as the Northern Ireland Housing Executive.

Since applying for and being granted this Adjournment debate, I received the following correspondence, dated 29 January 1988, from the director of operations. I do not know whether to believe it, but here it is:

"Dear Mr. Beggs,

I wrote to you on 18th December 1987 responding to a number of matters which you had raised when representatives of your Party met with the Executive on 7th December 1987.

In that reply (paragraph 2), I referred to the external maintenance scheme for Westmount Avenue, Windmill, Carrickfergus and I gave an explanation for the change of window size in the first five dwellings of the project.

I have now been advised that my reply on this matter was inaccurate. The information was provided by the Executive's professional Consultants responsible for the project and the Executive Officer who prepared the reply had no reason to believe that the information provided to him was incorrect. It was inconceivable that the Consultant would allow the project to proceed on site without seeking formal Building Control approval.

The Executive acknowledges that neither the Building Regulations, nor Building Controls were in any way responsible for the change of windows which occurred to five dwellings in Westmount Avenue.

I am most concerned that the information given to you was incorrect and offer my sincere apologies."

I, too, am most concerned that I should have received such a response in the first instance. It should never have been necessary for that officer, at his level, to have to come back with such a response. However, if I had not asked for comment by the building control officer in Carrickfergus council, the misleading information would not have been detected. This experience has shattered the confidence of elected members of my party in the Northern Ireland Housing Executive. It makes one believe that it is necessary to look closely at every reply one receives.

It is not unreasonable for some of us to ask how many similar cover-ups have gone unchallenged. I do not think that anyone could consider that to be an unreasonable thought to harbour. I am not so ungracious as not to accept the follow-up letter of explanation and apology, dated 29 January, from the executive.

From this singularly disgraceful experience, my party colleagues believe that no expense must be spared by the Minister in providing full and detailed answers to questions raised in the House regarding activities in the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, which requires more thorough scrutiny than occurs at present. The Minister answered questions on this matter, on 3 February 1988, from my hon. Friend the Member for Londonderry, East (Mr. Ross), whose disappointment and dissatisfaction I share. The costs likely to be incurred in making available the information sought through those written answers is well worth it.

I bring this matter to the attention of the House and of the Minister. I trust that he will agree with me that it should never have been necessary for me to bring this matter to the House or for him to be here to deal with it. It is inconceivable that such inaccurate information should have been relayed to a Member of this House. I trust that the Minister will assure the House that such action as is necessary will be taken to ensure that it can never happen again, and that the so-called professional consultants who proffered the advice in the first instance are reprimanded. Otherwise, I am sure, that some of us could legitimately feel that those who supplied the information had been apt pupils of Sir Robert Armstrong in being economical with the truth, or guilty, as another distinguished gentleman once said, of terminological inexactitude.

10.15 pm

Mr. Clifford Forsythe (Antrim, South): I am glad to have the opportunity to support my hon. Friend the Member for Antrim, East (Mr. Beggs) in this matter. My remarks will be short, and I hope to the point.

I must admit that I speak more in sorrow than in anger. Along with my colleagues on this Bench, I have endeavoured to work a system which I find undemocratic and generally unresponsive to the needs of my constituents. It is a shock to find that our efforts to iron out general housing problems by having a full and frank discussion with top officials of the body responsible for housing in Northern Ireland have been exploited by deflecting our relevant and specific questions with what has subsequently turned out to be misleading information.

It is even more surprising that that should have happened at the meeting referred to by my hon. Friend, which took place on 7 December. It was attended not only by senior officers of the Housing Executive, but by a representative number of the board members, including the board chairman.

I remind the House and the Minister that this is the second time recently that the conduct of that body has been raised in this place. It was last raised by the hon. Member for Belfast, South (Rev. M. Smyth). On that occasion he was concerned that Members of Parliament, all of us from Northern Ireland, had been told that we could not raise any matter on behalf of our constituents without producing to the Housing Executive a letter of authority from the constituent concerned. I am glad that that mistaken impression was subsequently corrected and each of us received a letter of apology.

However, the matter is much more serious. If a body under the control of a Minister who is responsible to this House—we should remember that those who attended the meeting included the chairman of the board of the Housing Executive—is prepared through carelessness, laziness or, worse still, deliberate intent to mislead other Members of this House, that must call into question the rights and privileges of this House. Those rights and privileges were fought for and established over the centuries and have been jealously guarded by this illustrious House at all times.

It also unfortunately raises the question: has it happened before? Has it happened in other similar bodies in Northern Ireland, either knowingly or unknowingly? Those questions are probably impossible to answer without a great deal of investigation.

We hope that the Minister in his reply will give us a categorical assurance that he will do all in his power to see that it does not happen again. For our part, we will be extremely careful in future to see that it does not happen again. I only hope that we do not have continually to come back to the House seeking Adjournment debates to get the truth from the Housing Executive.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (Mr. Richard Needham): The information given to the hon. Member for Antrim, South (Mr. Forsythe) was, as he rightly said, incorrect. Mr. Cameron wrote to him apologising fully for having given the hon. Member wrong information. Mr. Cameron, whom Opposition Members know well, deeply regrets that, and I am absolutely convinced that there was no intention in his letter to the hon. Member to do anything other than give him the facts as they were presented to him.

As the hon. Member pointed out, a consultant employed by the Housing Executive was undertaking the work. The hon. Member raised the matter with the Housing Executive, on the basis that some of his constituents had complained that the larger windows had been placed in the buildings, which meant that their blinds and curtains did not fit. When the Housing Executive inquired of the consultants why this had happened, quite frankly, it got a cock and bull story. The Housing Executive deeply regrets that it fell for that line, and wrote to the hon. Member as it did.

The chairman of the Housing Executive is known to Opposition Members. In my dealings with him, even though I have occasionally taken hospitality from him, I have found that it has not in any way altered his strenuous defence of his right to question the Government's policies in relation to the money and back-up that the Housing Executive requires. He is a man of great personal integrity and determination and feels very strongly that hon. Members should be fully informed about what goes on in the Housing Executive.

The Housing Executive has 170,000 houses to manage, spends approximately £500 million per year and does about 400,000 repairs each year, and things do go wrong. The chairman regrets that, and I am sure that the officers of the Housing Executive regret that. If there are ways to improve the relationship between the Housing Executive and hon. Members, I am sure that the executive would be only too willing to accept that. Of course there will be occasions when hon. Members, write to the executive, as there are when we write to our local housing authorities, and sometimes receive replies which we do not find to our taste. Having said that, I am not saying that information should not be given to hon. Members promptly, politely and properly, and it should be correct in every detail.

I inquired today how many letters had been received from hon. Members for Northern Ireland since the election. Some 3,600 have been received, and some 3,400 from councillors. The executive does its best, but the best sometimes falls short of the ideal.

Rev. Martin Smyth (Belfast, South): Would the Minister say that it is coincidental that the letter to my hon. Friend arrived the day after the Order Paper was published? Will he acknowledge that most of those letters refer to simple items and press for cases to be considered? Does he share my concern about important matters such as a contractor being given further contracts when he was not insured? We were fobbed off with the sort of answer that had been put to the chairman, that such practice is detrimental to the public interest, to the taxpayers and to the Housing Executive.

Mr. Needham: If there are cases in which the hon. Gentleman feels that contracts may have been given without proper consideration, I should take that immensely seriously. It is crucial that that sort of construction is carefully monitored. I know that that view is fully understood by the chairman, the board and the officers of the Housing Executive. Having said that, I accept that it has not always got it right. If the hon. Gentleman presses me on whether it is a question of conspiracy on the one hand or a cock-up on the other, I think that, when mistakes were made, they were more likely to have been as a result of inadvertence rather than some deeply laid plan to avoid giving proper and sensible advice to hon. Members.

Nevertheless, I accept that hon. Members have every right to raise matters in the House if they feel that incorrect information has been given. I welcome that, because it is extremely important that the Government know exactly what is going on. Hon. Members are best able, in dealing with their constituents, to discover the facts on the ground.

I am sure that hon. Members will accept that the Housing Executive in Northern Ireland has done a remarkable job over the past few years in raising the standard of public-sector housing and in effecting repairs. However, that does not give grounds for complacency.

I accept the point that the hon. Member for Antrim, East (Mr. Beggs) has made. We shall look, as will the chairman, at what can be done. If hon. Members think that steps could be taken to improve relationships with the Housing Executive at local, regional or central level to make communication easier and more efficient, we shall look at that.

On behalf of the Housing Executive, and Mr. Cameron, I apologise for the fact that the hon. Member for Antrim, East was given incorrect advice. I have looked into the matter carefully. I do not believe that there was any intention to give that advice. Nevertheless, the wrong advice was given and I apologise to the hon. Gentleman and to the House.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at twenty-seven minutes past Ten o'clock.

PRAYERS

[MR. SPEAKER in the Chair]

PETITIONS

Road Transfers (Harrow)

9.35 am

Mr. Robert G. Hughes (Harrow, West): I should like to present a petition on behalf of residents in the Heights, Gaylor road, Dabbs Hill lane, Silverdale close, Martin drive, Mallet drive, Doncaster gardens, Doncaster drive and the Link in my constituency. It is signed by nearly all the residents of those places who object to the plans being put forward to the Boundary Commission that their road should be transferred to the London borough of Ealing on the basis that the residents are to the south of the railway line. They take the view that they were there before the railway line and object to being transferred to the borough of Ealing because they do not like Ealing's policies or rates and its education is terrible. They want to stay in Conservative Harrow.

To lie upon the Table.

Rate Capping (Waltham Forest)

9.36 am

Mr. Harry Cohen (Leyton): I should like to present a petition on behalf of the residents of Waltham Forest about rate capping there. The cuts imposed as a result of that rate capping are not acceptable to the community. The petition says:

"Wherefore your Petitioners pray that your honourable House should support local services in Waltham Forest and withdraw selective rate limitation."

The petition, which I support, contains the signatures of approximately 5,250 local people, but that is just the tip of the iceberg of local concern. The Government have treated my borough very badly, and severe cuts in social services, education and other public services are a consequence. I support my local residents who have petitioned the House.

To lie upon the Table.

Motor Vehicles (Wearing of Rear Seat Belts by Children) Bill

Order for Second Reading read.

9.37 am

Mr. Stephen Day (Cheadle): I beg to move, That the Bill be now read a Second time.

The Bill requires the compulsory restraint of children under the age of 14 in the rear of cars in which restraints are fitted. The Bill will not require retrospective fitment. It would enable the Secretary of State to introduce regulations prescribing the description of seat belts to be worn and the manner in which they are to be fixed and worn. Regulations may also exempt children of any prescribed description and vehicles of a prescribed class. A driver who fails to comply will be liable to a maximum fine of £100. In effect, the Bill adds a new section 33C to the Road Traffic Act 1972.

I should like to place before the House two basic arguments in support of the Bill. The first is the case for the restraint of children and the second is the case for legislation. The 1986 casualty figures show how much at risk is the child who is carried unrestrained in the rear of a car. In that year, 89 per cent. of child car-occupant casualties were seated in the rear—that represents 8,560 children—and 91 per cent. of fatalities were children seated in the rear of vehicles.

The largest casualty group was of children aged between five and 13 years. That group accounted for 65 per cent. of the total and only 8 per cent. of them wore restraints in accidents. Surveys conducted by the Transport and Road Research Laboratory show that only 17 per cent. of those children travelling in the rear wore a restraint.

Accident research has shown that unrestrained children are more at risk from head injury than adults and that unrestrained children suffer head injury in 80 per cent. of accidents. Swedish research carried out by Volvo, Nielsen shows that ejection from a vehicle is a common cause of injury. Everyone who has seen the video produced by the Parliamentary Advisory Council for Transport Safety which used dummies to show the horrific injuries that a child may suffer will understand how ejection from a car can cause extremely serious injuries.

Other research by the Transport and Road Research Laboratory shows that the use of child restraints can reduce the incidence of fatal injury by about 75 per cent. and that of serious injury by about 50 per cent.

The Bill's effects will be gradual as older cars without restraints are gradually taken off the road. The exact effects of the Bill are therefore likely to be small at first although it is difficult to estimate how many rear restraints are currently available in the back seats of cars. However, reductions of about 50 serious and fatal injuries might be expected in the first year, rising to reductions of about 300 as more belts are available. As time passes, that figure may improve.

I should have thought that the House would welcome any measures to reduce those injuries. It is not surprising that parents who have seen their children injured because they were not restrained are perhaps the most determined to see that the legislation succeeds as it, hopefully, proceeds through the House. That is understandable when we realise the anguish that those parents have endured, having seen their children suffer.

[Mr. Stephen Day]

It is also very important that we should understand what happens in a car accident. That would help us to understand the anguish suffered by parents who have experienced tragedies. Some hon. Members have told me in the corridors of the Palace of Westminster that an unrestrained child in traffic cannot be at much risk. I do not think that it is widely realised that in a 30 mph frontal crash, a 15 lb. baby would be thrown forward with a force of 450 lb. That is 30 times the baby's weight. We can therefore understand how such serious injuries can be inflicted.

Similar legislation to that contained in this Bill was introduced in Victoria and New South Wales in 1981 and 1982 respectively. The evidence there showed that the use of restraints increased and casualty rates were significantly reduced. The case for the restraint of children in the rear, no matter whether we agree with legislation, is unanswerable. There is a definite case and a need for children to be restrained. As Dr. Gordon Trinca of the Australian College of Surgeons said:

"In no country have desired levels of wearing been reached without enactment of legislation making such use compulsory. Where laws have excluded children, the wearing rate for children has been much lower."

I now want to consider whether we should legislate. Any law in a free society must obviously have public support. I would be the first to accept that. Laws are inoperable in a free society when they do not have that support. However, I have no doubt that there is widespread support for the aims of the Bill inside and outside the House.

A recent opinion poll carried out by Gallup in August last year, showed that 91 per cent. of drivers were in favour of compulsory restraint of children in the rear. We should not forget that drivers would be directly affected by the effects of the legislation. Interestingly, 92 per cent. of the general public—whether they drove or not—supported the principle in this legislation and welcomed the compulsory restraint of children.

While all hon. Members may have reasons to question the accuracy of various opinion polls, figures of 91 per cent. and 92 per cent. showing such a level of support show that we have the trend right. When that level of support is reflected among the driving public and the general public, the figures show that there is wide support for the legislation.

I believe that the public will willingly comply with this legislation, if it becomes law, in the way that they complied with legislation on front seat restraints. We can expect a great improvement in usage rates. At the moment we know that people take risks. Most people know that it is sensible to ensure that a child is restrained if restraints are available. However, if we are honest, those of us who are parents have been guilty of taking risks. Perhaps mother has a lot of shopping and is in a hurry. It is easy to forget to restrain children, or to think, "It is only just down the road, it doesn't matter this time." People know that they are taking risks if they do that.

However, people knew that they took a risk if they did not wear a front seat belt when legislation was introduced about the wearing of front seat belts. I believe that, once this Bill becomes law, people will comply with it. The British people are a sensible, law-abiding community. That is a fair combination which will ensure that the law would be upheld.

The Bill also has widespread support in the House. Two hundred and ten hon. Members responded to my letter asking for support today—we must recognise that that represents almost one third of all hon. Members in the House. One hundred and seventy-five hon. Members agreed with the principles in the Bill; 18 were undecided and only 17 replied that they were against it.

Equally, the Bill has all-party support. I want to thank the hon. Member for Huddersfield (Mr. Sheerman), who is in the Chamber. I hope that he will make a contribution later. I thank him for his work on my behalf on the Bill and for his work with the Parliamentary Advisory Council for Transport Safety without whose help I would not have been able to present the Bill to the House this morning.

I would particularly like to mention the co-ordinator of PACTS, Jean Breen, for her invaluable help. The hon. Member for Norwich, South (Mr. Garrett) campaigned hard last year on this issue and asked a number of questions in the House.

I must also mention Mrs. Christine Burn and her daughter, who organised a "belt up in the back" campaign. As for outside organisations, I am pleased to say that the Bill is supported in principle by the Traffic Committee of the Association of Chief Police Officers of England, Wales and Northern Ireland; the Association of London Borough Road Safety Officers; the Automobile Association; the British Medical Association; the British Paediatric Association; the Casualty Surgeons Association; The Child Accident Prevention Trust; the County Road Safety Officers Association; the Guild of Experienced Motorists; the Institute of Advanced Motorists; the Institute of Road Safety Officers; the Institution of Mechanical Engineers; the Parliamentary Advisory Council for Transport Safety; the Royal Automobile Club; the Royal College of Nursing; the Royal Society for the Prevention of Accidents; and the Royal College of Surgeons. The evidence of support for the legislation is widespread, which in itself should be justification for its enactment.

The only serious opposition that I have so far heard represents an honourable but — I say this with due deference to my hon. Friend the Member for Southend, East (Mr. Taylor) — a minority viewpoint: that such laws are an interference with the rights of the individual. How on earth can that argument apply to legislation governing children? It is a mystery to me how anyone can argue that the Bill is an interference with personal liberty. It sets no precedent; the Children and Young Persons Act 1933 established a parental duty to provide children with food, shelter and other basic requirements. Similarly, controls on the consumption by children of alcohol and tobacco have been with us for years. If it is wrong to legislate in this instance because it is an interference with personal liberty, why on earth are parents required by statute to ensure that their children are adequately educated? Is that an interference with personal liberty?

The case against the legislation—if, indeed, there is a case — cannot be substantiated on grounds of interference with personal liberty. Many of our laws seek to protect children, and to ensure that their parents fulfil their responsibilities. The Bill is no great threat to personal liberty, although it is certainly a threat to the dangers that face children who are unrestrained in the backs of cars.

I contend that the need for the legislation is proven, and that its public acceptability is undeniable. There remain, however, some practical details of which I feel that hon. Members should be aware, and on which I can give some practical assurances.

Why, it may be asked, does the Bill refer to "a child under the age of fourteen years"? The Bill aims to provide protection for children who cannot make considered judgments about their safety. The limit of 14 years mirrors exactly that used in the front seat belt legislation for children in section 28 of the Transport Act 1981, under which parents have a legal responsibility for their children's safety until they are 14.

What about school runs, on which a number of children are carried to school by their parents? The Bill requires the use of rear seat belts only when they have been fitted, and the driver must restrain only as many children as there are appropriate restraints. The Bill does not prohibit the carriage of unrestrained children in the rear where restraints are not available. It is designed—this sums it up nicely—to protect life, not to inhibit lifestyles.

Questions may be asked about enforcement. The traffic committee of the Association of Chief Police Officers supports in principle the compulsory use of restraints in the rear for children, and, as with compulsory front seat belt wearing, there is every probability that this measure will be self-enforcing. Typically, seat belt offences are detected as a result of some other traffic offence when the vehicle is stationery, so a police officer should be able to detect non-compliance relatively easily. I do not believe that it will be necessary for him to do so very often, because I agree with the Association of Chief Police Officers that the Bill will be self-enforcing.

A number of parents have told me that they support my ideas—but what if little Tommy undoes his seat belt, as he is probably wont to do frequently? My reply is that the Bill contains a reasonable excuse clause, which will allow the courts to take such circumstances into account. The Bill is not a sledgehammer; it is intended as a serious attempt to bring home to people their civic duty and, more important, their duties to their children.

It has been argued that, if a driver wishes to carry three children in the rear of a car that is fitted with only two seat belts, he will be faced with a difficult and unacceptable choice: which child should be left unrestrained? My Bill does not materially affect such circumstances, or, indeed, create that moral dilemma. It applies only to cars in which seat belts are already fitted. For parents who are running around with three children and only two belts, the obvious answer is to fit a third belt. If they feel that they cannot do that, the moral dilemma already exists. Surely it is unreasonable to argue that, because three, four or five children are carried in the back of a car with only two restraints, none of the children should be restrained.

It has also been argued that five children sitting in a row on the back seat unrestrained can all sit on the seat, but if some of them are restrained, others cannot. The idea of a family of young children, or a group of five friends, sitting neatly in a row, unrestrained, for the entire length of a journey, is unbelievable. Children sitting unrestrained in the backs of cars bob all over the place. As a motorway driver who used to do 40,000 or 50,000 miles a year, I have seen them bobbing around in the back probably more than most hon. Members.

It is sometimes suggested that the use of restraints by children will lead to their entrapment in accidents and car fires. It is important to be clear about this. The independent assessors' analysis of the effects of compulsory front seat belt wearing found no significant increase in the small number of drowning accidents; nor did they find any increase in the number of casualties involved in fire accidents. During the past five years, the Department of Transport's vehicle inspectorate division has seen only six cases of entrapment in severe accidents. No fires were involved, and no injuries due to entrapment by seat belts.

In August last year, there was widespread press coverage of a tragic accident in which a young child strapped in the back of an Austin Metro was burnt to death. Subsequent investigation by experts revealed that no child restraint had been fitted to the vehicle.

I believe that this is a sensible and practical piece of legislation. It is fair in application and sincere in intent. It is a mild Bill. It is not authoritarian and it is not a threat to personal liberty. It is not heavy-handed, but it is an encouragement to greater child safety. On that basis, I would have thought that the house should welcome it and I commend it to the House.

Mr. George Robertson (Hamilton): I congratulate the hon. Member for Cheadle (Mr. Day) on his speech and on the choice of subject for his private Member's Bill. It is a furrow that many people have ploughed before and it is not an easy one. Recognising the faces of hon. Members present in the Chamber today takes me back to when we considered the wearing of seat belts before. This is a subject that unites hon. Members who probably do not agree on any other subject. They come together in the belief that this area needs desperate action.

Today is Comic Relief day. Our television screens this morning were filled with sober announcers wearing red noses. Newspapers today are filled with pictures of politicians and other prominent personalities with the familiar red bulb on their nose. As I came to the House this morning I saw a large number of children on their way to school wearing them as well. People have been magnetised by today's event, not so much by the general problems of aid and relief for Africa, which will be the beneficiary of the generosity, as by the pictures of small children who are the innocent victims of famine in Africa and other parts of the world.

British people respond easily, quite justifiably and rightly, to the dilemma faced by children all over the world who suffer because of famine, pestilence, disease and war. Therefore, it is appropriate that the House of Commons should be considering a measure of this sort today. We are not considering the protection of adults or vast numbers of people who would undoubtedly benefit if they wore rear seat belts; we are considering children up to the age of 14 who are the innocent victims of their own carelessness or perhaps the inability of their parents to control them or strap them up.

I am the chairman of an organisation called the Seat Belt Survivors Club. It is organised within the umbrella of the Royal Society for the Prevention of Accidents. It was established almost 10 years ago to draw attention to the benefits of wearing seat belts and to move beyond the technical and statistical arguments that exist for the wearing of seat belts in motor vehicles. We asked those who have been the victims of road accidents but beneficiaries of wearing seat belts to write to us with their experience. I, the Minister, his predecessor, the leader of the Liberal party, or whatever it is called this week, and hon. Members on both sides of the House qualify for membership of the club because they are able to participate as human beings, never mind as politicians, because they were wearing a seat belt.

Some of the most effective letters I have seen have been received since front seat belts became compulsory. I have been approached by individuals, and the organisation has received letters, from people who have said, "We never wore a seat belt before the law made it obligatory. We were either too lazy, did not think that it would matter or resisted it because it confined us in the car." We all used to hear such arguments. Those letters have then gone on to say, "The law said that we should wear a seat belt and we believe that that is a sensible thing to do. We are law-abiding citizens and we wore the belt. We are able to talk today or to write this letter because, in a road accident subsequent to the legislation, we were restrained by a seat belt and are alive when we would have been dead without it."

That is one of the most effective arguments. Those of us in the House today will remember the previous long, dreary, monotonous and usually futile debates on seat belts. We remember the interminable objections raised by those who held up civil liberties and other arguments in opposition. We now realise that it is not a controversial matter. People simply get into their cars and put on their seat belts. For the vast majority it is now an uncomfortable experience to drive any distance without it.

On top of all of that, there is the enormous saving of lives and the prevention of serious injuries. We are not dealing with the cold statistics, projections or estimates that we were considering previously. We are now talking of between 200 and 400 human beings who would have been killed but who are alive because they were wearing a seat belt. We are talking about the 7,000 people who were protected from serious injury because they were wearing a seat belt, largely because they were forced by law to do so.

It is difficult to give the House a picture of what that means in human terms. One of the most effective speeches during the previous lengthy debates was made by the hon. Member for Bury St. Edmunds (Sir E. Griffiths), with whom I probably disagree on everything. His views are well to the right of Genghis Khan. Before he became a Minister, his view was that compulsion was not advisable and he would not have supported it. However, his experience as a Minister, going to hospitals and talking to casualty surgeons converted him. For somebody who took such a robust view—I am sure that his view was even more robust than that of the hon. Member for Southend, East (Mr. Taylor)—to be converted by the facts is a salutary lesson to us all.

This measure is simple. It should be uncontroversial, uncomplicated and wholly beneficial. We are talking about 1,000 children who are killed or seriously injured in cars today because they are unrestrained.

The arguments deployed by the hon. Member for Cheadle are powerful and difficult to contradict. If one looks at the transportation of anything in something as lethal as a car one can see a comparison. If we wanted to send a valuable china object through the post or some eggs in a box we would not send them without them having been carefully and strongly packed to ensure that they would not move about. Yet we allow ourselves to carry fragile children—they are as fragile at 30 miles an hour as eggs in a wooden box—without any restraint or padding. Anybody who thinks about wrapping up a fragile birthday or Christmas present and concludes that it should be done thoroughly and effectively makes the argument for restraining children in cars.

The issue then comes to why we should make it compulsory. Is it not an obligation on parents to ensure that their children are restrained in cars? Should it not be for the children to be taught from an early age that wearing seat belts, like road safety, is the norm? Of course, the answer to that is yes. Of course, every parent should be obliged to do that. As the hon. Member for Cheadle said, we do not often allow that decision to be left to parents without the supervison and the back-up of the law.

Even those of us who are passionate supporters of seat belts—those of us who are convinced, because of direct experience, of the value of seat belts — know how difficult it is to get children to wear them in the back of cars. I confess — with rear belts in my car and even before it is made obligatory—that I find it difficult to persuade my three children, on every journey, to wear what I know to be beneficial to them. I know that my children, and 90 per cent. of other children, will obey the law if it lays down that it is the norm. The law is a back-up to parents, which is often necessary to ensure that they take their responsibilities seriously. It takes them off the hook of the inevitable problems of getting children to do what is in their best interests.

Some in this debate, as in previous debates, will deploy the civil liberties argument. It is a strong argument, and we heard it interminably in previous debates on this subject. I am not in favour of imposing unreasonable restrictions on people's personal liberties or civil rights. That is not something that Parliament should always do. However, as the hon. Member for Cheadle said, we are acting on behalf of children, not adults. Once children reach the age of 14 they can make their own decisions and take their own risks, although it must be said that those risks and responsibilities place burdens on the rest of us if they end up in hospital after a road accident. That is not the issue that we are considering; we are interested only in children in the back seats of cars and in ensuring that they are protected, at least until they are old enough to take decisions for themselves.

Even if the civil liberties argument had validity and even if it had power — we saw how quickly this argument faded away with regard to front seat belts—in the case of children under 14, where rear seat belts are available, we are not arguing that that in any way affects the civil liberties of the driver or of the parent, and certainly not those of the children.

The statistics often speak for themselves. However, the people who cannot speak for themselves are the casualties. I was one such casualty 12 years ago. I often think "serious injury" is not an adequate description. In the vast majority of cases it describes not people such as I who have recovered, but those who are permanently disabled, maimed or disfigured for the rest of their lives. Road accidents are horrifying; they often take place at high speeds and involve multiple collisions. Those multiple collisions involve nearly 960 unrestrained children under the age of 14. Their effect can be brought to life only by seeing the individuals affected. We have an obligation to reduce that carnage.

I should like to associate myself with what the hon. Member for Cheadle said in congratulating the Parliamentary Advisory Council for Transport Safety. It, with all the other organisations involved in this matter, has done much to alert the public to the dangers involved. Not only that—scaremongering is easy, and it is easy to portray the agonies involved—but it has drawn much attention to the remedies that are available, which are simple, easy, effective and publicly acceptable. Jean Breen, who has worked assiduously on behalf of the organisation, has done a great service to those who in the past would have lost their lives but who in the future will be saved.

This is a popular measure. It was supported by over 90 per cent. of the population in a recent opinion poll. It is necessary and, on this appropriate day, it is humanitarian. If we can make a small impression on the carnage and tragedy of road accidents involving children, the House will have done a great service.

10.14 am

Sir Anthony Grant (Cambridgeshire, South-West): It is always pleasant and agreeable to find myself completely in accord with the hon. Member for Hamilton (Mr. Robertson)—whether I be left or right of Ghengis Khan matters not. I suspect that the hon. Gentleman is a few degrees to the right of Karl Marx.

I start by declaring an interest. I have the honour to be the president of the Guild of Experienced Motorists. Membership of that body is open to anyone who has driven for at least 10 years without serious conviction for driving matters. As my hon. Friend the Member for Cheadle (Mr. Day) said, it supports the Bill.

I congratulate my hon. Friend not only on bringing forward this important measure but on presenting it with great sincerity and clarity and by meeting the arguments. He has rendered a great service to road safety.

I can add a further survey to those that my hon. Friend mentioned. The Guild of Experienced Motorists carried out a survey of its members last year on rear seat belts. Surprise, surprise—the result what that 90 per cent. of its members came out in favour of the compulsory wearing of rear seat belts. It must be remembered that those people are drivers whom it might be expected would take a different point of view, but they bore in mind the incontrovertible fact that seat belts have saved lives, that they will continue to do so and that they have prevented serious and minor injuries.

The evidence is that there has been a 30 per cent. reduction in death and injuries since the seat belt legislation was passed; a 25 per cent. reduction in hospital admissions; a 39 per cent. reduction in brain injuries; a 53 per cent. reduction in facial wounds; and, for the economically minded, saving of £130 million.

Mr. Gary Waller (Keighly): Will my hon. Friend say from what source he has obtained those figures? They seem to be at odds with many others that are available.

Sir Anthony Grant: The figures are mainly derived from Government research. I obtained them from the Parliamentary Advisory Council for Transport Safety.

Some 9,000 children were killed or injured in 1986—those are Government figures. Government research has shown that child restraints have reduced fatal accidents by 15 per cent.

Apart from those bare statistics, one can see from one's own experience—if one takes the trouble to investigate them—the dangers that exist for children in motor cars. A little time ago in my constituency at the Rosie maternity hospital, we had an example of those dangers when Essex county council produced a little chute, down which we precipitated no less a person that the Under-Secretary of State for Transport. We simulated a speed of 15 mph. He was precipitated down the chute clutching a doll to his bosom. He is an athletic man, but despite his efforts, at that speed, at an impact of 15 miles an hour, without restraint, the doll came out of his hands and the head was knocked off.

If that happens at 15 miles per hour, to an energetic chap like the Minister, we should consider the risks to other passengers. Mothers often suffer from the delusion that if they are clutching their baby and cuddling it tightly it will somehow save him or her. Alas and alack, the contrary is true. The results are misery, death and injury.

Let us look at what has happened overseas, where there has been effective child restraint legislation. In Michigan, in the United States, there has been a 25 to 50 per cent. reduction in injuries. In Victoria, Australia, where the law is similar to the Bill, injuries to children have gone down by 17 per cent. In New Mexico, the fatality rate is down by 33 per cent., and in Tennessee deaths have been reduced by 15 per cent. The evidence from overseas completely supports the Bill.

Why should we not extend the seat belt law to children in rear seats? As my hon. Friend the Member for Cheadle said, the only issue is freedom. There is no greater lover of freedom than I. All my political life I have believed that there is far too much bureaucratic interference in our lives. I believe in the sanctity of the individual, I detest the nanny state and I have some sympathy with those who want the freedom to injure themselves of their own volition through idiot schemes, provided that they do not interfere with other people. However, children are different. They need a nanny. They cannot decide for themselves, and we are responsible for them.

For a long time, the law has recognised that fact. As the hon. Member for Hamilton (Mr. Robertson) said, we are not allowed to starve children, to deny them shelter, make them drunk, or to allow them to be uneducated. Legislation has recognised those factors for many years. Therefore, why on earth should it be an infringement of freedom to ensure that children are not killed, maimed or injured in such dangerous things as motor vehicles?

Many details in the Bill need to be sorted out. My hon. Friend the Member for Cheadle mentioned some of them, but the Bill contains provisions for regulations to be made to deal with all exceptional cases. The original seat belt legislation made exceptions for people who were too fat, too small, or claustrophobic. Those matters can be dealt with by regulations and they can be sorted out, discussed and debated in Committee.

Today's debate is about a basic principle. I believe that if one child's life is spared, or one child is saved from horrific injury, the Bill is worth while. If only those who are opposed to the Bill could see the horrors of children in the hospitals in my constituency who are injured, and if only they could share the grief, misery and remorse of the parents whose children are suffering in that way, they would join me in giving the Bill an enthusiastic Second Reading.

10.22 am

Mr. Ronnie Fearn (Southport): I congratulate the hon. Member for Cheadle (Mr. Day) on a sensible Bill. I am delighted to give it my wholehearted support. If it becomes law it will save the lives of many young people and protect thousands more from serious injury.

We have heard some of the figures for accidents involving children, and they make very sad reading. In 1986, 70 children were killed in car accidents and more than 9,500 were injured—89 per cent. of those injured were occupying rear seats. It is undeniable that if the Bill had been in force at that time those figures would have been dramatically lower. Many of those injuries were caused by the child hitting the back of the front seat of the car. Another common cause of injury was ejection from the car. Both of those types of injury would have been much less likely if the children concerned had been restrained by seat belts.

Naturally, it is extremely difficult to estimate the effects that the Bill will have on the number of serious accidents, but the Parliamentary Advisory Council for Transport Safety has done research that shows that this legislation could result in 50 fewer serious and fatal injuries in the first year. It also shows that that figure could be expected to rise to 300 when seat belts become more widely available. Parliament cannot ignore that finding. We have a duty to take action to save lives whenever possible and we are grateful for that opportunity today.

The Bill has the support of many of the most widely respected motoring organisations, including the AA and the Guild of Experienced Motorists, which has already been mentioned. I believe that the Government also look favourably on this matter. The Department of Transport road safety review states that of rear seat belts

"should be kept in mind as a possibility for at least the long term—and sooner—if the general climate of opinion and the extent of voluntary use favour it."

I believe that public opinion is now in favour of taking this action.

Most people now accept that the strong rules on the wearing of seat belts in front seats have been beneficial. Although a stubborn few still refuse to wear them, most people accept that it is a wise law that has saved many lives. If we insist on seat belts for adults in the front seats of cars, it is inconsistent for us not to insist on children wearing rear seat belts when we know how many lives can be saved and how many serious injuries can be prevented by such a measure.

This is a wise Bill because it has taken account of the world as it is, not of the world as we would wish it to be. If the Bill is enacted it will be illegal to drive a car containing a child passenger who is not restrained, if that car has rear seat belts. At present, at least 2 million cars are equipped with rear seat belts, and since rear seat belts have been compulsory in new cars since 1987, that number will increase.

The Bill, sensibly, will not force undue expense on motorists but will ensure that the use of rear seat belts becomes the accepted norm. Similarly, those with large families will not be penalised because the Bill recognises that cars may have to carry more children than the number of seat belts.

My spokesmanship on health issues has taken me into many hospitals throughout the country. I have seen children with smashed faces in hospital wards. Many of those children were in the rear seats of cars that had no seat belts. If the Bill can prevent such injuries for only a small percentage of those children I, for one, will be grateful. I can see no serious practical objection to a Bill that will do so much to save the lives of young people under 14, and that has been carefully drafted to avoid serious objections and difficulties. I urge the House to support the Bill and to take a major step towards saving lives.

Sir Philip Goodhart (Beckenham): I entirely agree with the hon. Member for Southport (Mr. Fearn). I join him in congratulating my hon. Friend the Member for Cheadle (Mr. Day) on his preparation and presentation of the Bill. I also agree with the hon. Member for Hamilton (Mr. Robertson), and I am delighted that he was preserved by his seat belt to be with us today.

I have no doubt that the introduction of seat belt legislation has been an important factor in the welcome decline in the number of people killed on our roads in recent years. I have absolutely no doubt that if the Bill that has been so ably prepared and presented by my hon. Friend the Member for Cheadle reaches the statute book, it will play an important role in significantly reducing the number of children killed and injured on our roads.

Why has it taken so long to bring forward the measure and to get seat belt legislation on to the statute book in the first place? From the time that a seat belt clause first appeared in Government legislation back in 1973, it took about 10 years for the wearing of seat belts to become mandatory, and a further five years before this private Member's Bill appeared. Hon. Members are anxious to press the Government of the day to take urgent action to tighten up safety laws to prevent other types of accidents — for example, railway, aircraft, tube, and ferry accidents—but we are strangely reluctant to do so in respect of road accidents. It took us 10 years to activate seat belt legislation, when we knew that its introduction would save hundreds of lives a year. We know that a small change in the law relating to breathalysers will undoubtedly save more lives.

If we could find time to deal with legislation to introduce automatic safety and speed cameras on our roads, we could, for the first time, effectively enforce our speed regulations. However, I expect that it will take another 10 years before the House gets around to the installation of automatic speed cameras.

Why are we so reluctant to deal with the problem of road safety? There are two reasons. The first is that official road safety statistics are presented in the best possible anodyne fashion. They are produced late. Indeed, they are produced months or years after they might make any great impact.

In its important report on road safety, the Select Committee on Transport made some sensible recommendations for the improvement of the presentation of road safety statistics. I know that they are sensible because I drafted them myself. Such improvements could be brought into effect without any further action by the House or any further legislation by the Government. I hope that action will soon be taken. I fear that, so far, the recommendation made by the Select Committee on Transport has been totally ignored.

The second reason is that, sadly, many hon. Members are bad drivers. My hon. Friend the Member for Cambridgeshire, South-West (Sir A. Grant) is the president of the Guild of Advanced Motorists. I am sure that he never infringes the traffic laws. The fact that many hon. Members are dreadful drivers has imposed a parliamentary road block on the improvement of road safety. After all, it is embarrassing, if one has made a stirring speech in favour of road safety, and one is arrested for speeding a few days later. Undoubtedly, that produces in many hon. Members an ambivalent attitude to the enforcement and tightening up of traffic laws.

I remember when, many years ago, that great parliamentarian Aneurin Bevan was beginning to take an interest in road safety and made one or two interesting speeches on the topic. He was later spotted by a member of Clement Attlee's family, breaking the law as it turned out. He was taken to court and never took an interest in road safety again. I suspect that many of us are inhibited in that fashion.

Although I expect that my hon. Friend the Member for Cheadle will get unanimous support for his Bill, there are clearly many parliamentary hurdles ahead.

I make two pleas to my hon. Friend the Minister. I ask him to redouble his efforts to ensure that the presentation of road safety statistics is made more effective in the near future. I ask also for an assurance that, if my hon. Friend's Bill runs into difficulties in Committee, or if it falls at one of the many of the parliamentary hurdles that still lie ahead, he will use his best endeavours to ensure that the basic principles of the measure are introduced in Government legislation in the next Session. Of course, I realise that he cannot commit the Government in any way today, but I hope that he will assure the House that, if problems arise, he will use his best endeavours to make sure that the measure is adopted. Parliament will not be doing its duty if we fail to protect our children.

Mr. Barry Sheerman (Huddersfield): After having been part of campaigns for various safety measures over the years, one has the impression that a small group of eccentrics insist on having reunions in the Chamber to talk about issues about which they feel reasonably obsessive. That small group of hon. Members, many of whom have got to know each other very well, have been joined by a few new faces in this Parliament. They meet regularly.

Most of us feel proud that, at some stage, we have made a contribution not only to the making of great speeches —many great speeches are made in the Chamber—but to providing the votes that change people's lives in such a dramatic way. None of us has any reason to be ashamed of our record over the past few years. On an all-party basis, we have helped to save lives and prevent deaths and serious and disabling injuries.

My hon. Friend the Member for Hamilton (Mr. Robertson) talked about what we mean by "serious" injury. I advise him that by a disabling injury, we mean never being able to walk without pain again. If one talks to surgeons and to the people who suffer such injuries, one learns that that is what they mean by serious injury.

Today is the day of Comic Relief. I make no apology for returning to that topic, which was raised by my hon. Friend the Member for Hamilton. Today we have all seen lots of happy children going to school dressed up with their red noses. It is a super day because they are raising funds for children in Africa. The most common killers of young children in Africa are disease and starvation. Our country is not like Africa. Many of the diseases that were common killers of children have disappeared from our country, thank God. However, worthy as it is, the Bill will not stop the most common killer of children in this country, which is not cancer, leukaemia, heart malformation or disease, but death on the road. It is not even the subject that we are discussing. Most of the children who die on our roads are pedestrians or are on bicycles. There are strategies and ways in which we could tackle that problem, not by law, but by much greater efforts in other ways.

However, we are debating this excellent small Bill, promoted by the hon. Member for Cheadle (Mr. Day). I add my congratulations to him on his work. It is easy to stand up in the Chamber and make a speech, but there is a lot of work involved in private Member's Bill. Like other hon. Members here, I have had a private Member's Bill on this subject and we all recognise that it takes a lot of time and effort and does not get one any Brownie points with the Whips. However, it is a good Bill which certainly deserves support.

Our children went to school today with red noses, and the tragedy is that some of their parents will not see them come home. Some of their parents will pick them up on the school run and will kill their children. Some children will not come back from that day of fun. We cannot stop that. It will happen today as it happens every day. Parents will get the news, hear the knock on the door and see the unfamiliar sight of a policeman on the doorstep and they will wonder what on earth could have happened. That is the chilling fact of the deaths that we in this House have taken so much for granted.

Last week, and on previous weeks, the House was full for private Members' legislation when we discussed important issues, such as life before birth and the freedom of information. However, sometimes on a day such as today, when we are discussing something that will help children to live—children who have personalities, who already have all their faculties, and who are dearly loved by their parents—I look round and notice that quite a few of our colleagues do not seem to think that important enough to turn up for the debate.

Mr. Roy Beggs (Antrim, East): I assure the hon. Gentleman that although there is only token representation from Northern Ireland on the Ulster Unionist Bench, my hon. Friends, like many other hon. Members who are absent, are fully behind the Bill and, if they were present, they would congratulate the hon. Member for Cheadle (Mr. Day) on introducing this important measure.

Mr. Sheerman: I thank the hon. Gentleman. He is right in part. I was trying to say that the amount of attention received by this issue—the greatest killer of children in our country — should have greater priority among a number of our colleagues. I say that about my party, the Conservative party and, indeed, all parties in the House. If we are seriously to tackle all the other problems of the killing of people on British roads, we must upgrade this subject in terms of its profile and priority on the parliamentary agenda.

[Mr. Sheerman]

It is seven years since I introduced the Safety of Children in Cars Bill. As we know, it did not succeed. It was not as high in the ballot as this Bill, from the hon. Member for Cheadle, which was number five. Although my Bill did not succeed, we managed to use it again in the Transport Act 1981, so it survived in an unusual and unique way. It became law, having been accepted by the Government. I give credit to the then Minister and his Under-Secretary who have moved on to greater things, for their efforts at that time. Although I should not suspect such things on an all-party occasion, I suspect that there was the belief that, by accepting the children-in-cars element, the compulsory legislation to make adults belt up in the front seats of cars might be downgraded and bought off. However, in the same piece of legislation we also managed to obtain the passage of an amendment on that subject.

We should give the general safety of children a high priority. I should like to give the House a few statistics. We shall have too many today, so I shall go through them quickly. When presenting a paper at a recent conference on the safety of children, not far from this House, the pre-eminent expert, Barbara Sabey — most hon. Members will know that she is a senior person in the Transport and Road Research Laboratory — pointed out that road accidents are a tragic and, for the most part, avoidable loss of young life. During 1986, more than 41,000 child casualties were reported to the police. Weighting that statistic dramatically, it is equivalent to over half the population of an average-size parliamentary constituency — in fact, perhaps, the constituency of Southend, East. Possibly thousands — maybe even tens of thousands — more accidents went unreported. Until the health sector improves its accident reporting systems, we shall never know exactly how many there are.

Road accidents are the biggest cause of accidental death among children. According to a paper produced by the Child Accident Prevention Trust only this week, they are the most severe type of accidents, largely because of the forces involved and because hard and heavy metal objects hit frail and small human bodies. Nearly 3,000 children suffer disability as a result of such accidents and about 10 per cent. are left permanently disabled. It is clear that we give too little priority to this problem.

However, we should not talk only about the problems because we have some solutions, such as the Bill. Other possibilities include a national pre-school traffic club. I hope that the Minister is still giving his earnest attention to that. The education and training of children is one of our deficiencies. We do not get through to the child at home or to the family and, despite all our efforts, we do not get through to the child in school.

In recent weeks I have been discussing with the Minister and other hon. Members the fact that it is about time that we went back to the example set by the Americans in the 1960s and made a British version of a programme such as "Sesame Street". It was wonderful entertainment; children loved it but they learned at the same time. We are the pre-eminent television programme-makers of the world. Why should we not make our own version of "Sesame Street"? Why not get the BBC and commercial companies to make a programme which, sugaring the pill, delivers a consciousness that could do so much to teach children about the number one hazard to survival in their lives?

There are other important issues. Manufacturers should have introduced pro-pedestrian car designs long ago. There is also today's issue of the wearing of rear restraints by children. That is important because it is the first, quickest and surest step in cutting down these dreadful casualties. It is quick, easy, acceptable and popular. Surely there cannot be many more recommendations for a piece of legislation. We can move on from today. Let us get children in cars out of the way and move on to other issues which are equally, and sometimes more, important.

The hon. Member for Cheadle said that the Bill is a natural progression of the safety of children in cars legislation, which requires all children under the age of 14 to be restrained if seated in the front seats of cars. We knew that it was the first step because we were practical people, and we knew that without that first step it would be far too idealistic to introduce restraints for children in the rear seats. However, we got anchorage points in rear seats and we then moved on to the fitting of rear seat belts. We now have a great opportunity to get this little Bill into law.

This will be a powerful piece of legislation. The original aim of our provision was to improve the safety of children in the front seats of cars, the most dangerous place to be unrestrained. Careful monitoring has shown that it has been successful. Front seat belt usage increased almost overnight from 50 per cent. to over 90 per cent. for the five to 13-year-old category. That resulted in a net casualty reduction of 15 per cent. That happened in the year following the introduction of the legislation and I have no reason to believe that it has not been maintained. As expected, the provision did not have any significant casualty reduction effect on child casualties in the rear seats, where most children sit and where most are injured.

Earlier this week, a report was published by an expert working party of the Child Accident Prevention Trust, which said that an increasing use of restraints for children in the rear is the only key to the improvement of in-car safety. The report stated:

> "As 90 per cent. of child car occupant casualties are seated in the rear where restraint usage is only about 30 per cent., it has to be concluded that the only way to reduce child casualties is to increase markedly rear restraint use."

Although the report recommends a number of complementary measures to increase usage, such as the need for the widespread introduction of child restraint loan schemes, priority is given to the need for the introduction of the Bill.

A few bouquets are in order. Thanks to the efforts of the Minister, road safety officers and other organisations, such as the "belt up in the back campaign" and the "That's Life" programme, the myth that it is safe to sit unrestrained in the rear seats of cars has been largely dispelled. All those efforts have played a crucial part in developing a positive public attitude about the value of seat belts and the need to wear them in the rear, but, just as we found when we were talking about adults in the front seats of cars, that is not enough. All our efforts got the wearing rate up to 30 per cent., but not much beyond. That is when legislation became the only step forward. The hon. Member for Cheadle was right. This is not an impetuous piece of legislation. It is not a heavy-handed piece of legislation. It follows the natural progression of events and circumstances over a long period.

I do not wish to detain the House any longer. Although only some states in the United States have legislation for adults to wear seat belts, every state has legislation for children to wear seat belts. Children under 14 are not responsible for themselves. Society and their parents are responsible for them. We must look after children who are too young to protect their own interests and to understand the consequences of jiggling around in the back seat of a car travelling at any speed. As the guardian of those young people, the House must pass the Bill.

Legislation has been introduced all over the world and it has been effective. The Bill is practical. It applies only to cars in which restraints are fitted, and it does not require additional expenditure by parents. That is important, but, ultimately, it is a matter for the Department of Transport, in consultation with other bodies.

Some hon. Members may want to know more about the important group of children aged between one and four. That is a difficult age group because adult seat belts are not ideal for young children between one and four. It is better to have a properly designed seat for children between the ages of one and four, but an adult seat belt is far better than no seat belt. In consultation, the Department of Transport can discuss the problems of the one-to-four age group properly and can get the matter right when the Bill goes into Committee, which, I believe, is a possibility.

I have tried to present some of the facts. None of us believes that the safety of children and adults is merely a matter of emotion. It is a matter of emotion when one sees people in hospital and hears of children dying unnecessarily or being maimed for life, but none of the measures that I have put forward has been based on emotion. I, PACTS and most of the organisations at the forefront of the compaign for seat belts for children believe that we should talk about effective measures based on science and technology and on the experiences of other comparable countries. This is an important issue and I hope that the hon. Member for Cheadle will have every success with his Bill.

Mr. Gary Waller (Keighley): I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Cheadle (Mr. Day) on his good fortune in obtaining a high place in the ballot, and also on the sincerity with which he introduced his Bill.

So far in our debate, arguments have been used in an appropriate way and I welcome the fact that nobody's sincerity has been impugned, as has sometimes happened in the past. I wish to put forward a different viewpoint for that put forward so far, but I hope that those who disagree with me will accept my commitment to road safety and my sincerity in saying that I feel just as strongly about the need to reduce the number of avoidable deaths.

My hon. Friend the Member for Cambridgeshire, South-West (Sir A. Grant) said that the only arguments against the introduction of this Bill related to freedom of the individual. I am sorry that he has had to leave us, because that is not the case. I do not intend to rely on any arguments relating to freedom of the individual. I agree with those hon. Members who said that some issues transcend the issue of freedom of the individual.

Of course it is necessary to protect children. It is sometimes necessary to protect children from the foolishness of their parents or of adults. My one concern about the Education Reform Bill is that many aspects seem to rely considerably on parental choice. We must also consider those children whose parents may not have such a commitment to education. However, that is a side issue, upon which I do not want to be drawn. I use it to illustrate the fact that I believe that the issue of freedom is not one upon which we should rely when considering the safety of children under the age of 14.

I hope that everyone will accept that probably the most important thing we can do to improve road safety is to improve driver behaviour. Of course, some accidents are caused as a result of vehicle malfunction, and others as the result of civil engineering failings on the road, but the majority of accidents are essentially attributable to failings in driver behaviour. If we could improve such behaviour, we could substantially reduce the number of accidents, casualties and fatalities.

It was rather interesting that when I mentioned to a number of people, particularly women, that I hoped to speak in this debate, they reacted with almost exactly the same words, "When I have got the children in the car I always drive carefully, as if I had a crate of eggs in the back." I am sure that that analogy sounds familiar to several hon. Members.

The individual's driving behaviour alters according to their perception of possible danger. Such risks are considered greater if a vulnerable cargo is being carried. When eggs—or children—are being carried, the brakes are applied that much earlier before the bend, overall speed is moderated and the driver stops when the lights change to amber rather than accelerating as one might when driving alone.

Mr. Austin Mitchell (Great Grimsby): The hon. Gentleman is treading common ground because we all believe in better driving and better safety. Is the essence of the hon. Gentleman's argument that the more vulnerable the cargo the safer the driving, and that therefore children in the back should not have seat belts?

Mr. Waller: If the hon. Gentleman allows me to develop my argument, he will find out.

The assumption is that the crate of eggs or other cargo in the back is loose and may topple forward with disastrous consequences. Let us suppose that the crate was roped down and attached to the car or was prevented from moving forward in the event of de-acceleration. Is it not more than likely that one's behaviour would be modified? The driver may not revert to the style he adopts when driving alone, but, nevertheless, his perception of potential risks would be adjusted, at least subconsciously.

Mr. George Robertson: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Waller: I will give way later.

In such circumstances my speed may increase by the odd mile an hour and I might round the bend with a touch more elan. Indeed, I might apply the brakes a fraction later than I would if my cargo was more vulnerable. I am sure that all drivers adjust their driving behaviour according to the cargo and the passengers they have on board. Perhaps if they are driving their elderly grannies their driving style is quite different from that when driving someone of their own age.

Sir Anthony Grant: I apologise to my hon. Friend for my absence at the beginning of his speech. Of course people drive more carefully if they have children in the back. However, what we must consider is the fact that, no matter how carefully people drive, they are likely to be involved in an accident where someone else is to blame. In those circumstances, a mother may be driving along carefully and slowly, but, without any fault on her part, there may still be a much greater risk to her children.

Mr. Waller: I am absolutely delighted that my hon. Friend has made that point, because it is intrinsic to my argument as it develops. Shortly, I will discuss what happens when another motorist is involved.

I accept that changes in mental attitude may vary only marginally, but marginal changes are of the essence. Serious injuries or fatal accidents only occur once in several hundred thousand vehicle miles. One of the official documents that I have seen has calculated that a fatal accident or serious injury occurs one in every 1 million vehicle miles. However, the difference between a near miss and total disaster is sometimes slight. Therefore, a driver's behaviour needs only to be modified a touch just once in all those hundred thousand miles for different consequences to ensue.

Let us take the analogy of a crate of eggs a stage further. We must not consider this issue just from the point of view of people in the car. In this connection, the argument by my hon. Friend the Member for Cambridgeshire, South-West is relevant. Apart from drivers and passengers in cars, pedestrians are especially vulnerable. They are not protected by a steel shell, and if hit by a vehicle it is flesh and bone that feel the impact.

Let us suppose that an elderly and infirm person is crossing the road slowly, step by step, and a car is bearing down fast. As a witness to that potential tragedy what would be my thoughts? If I had time to think, I might hope that the elderly person would see the car and be able to take evasive action. However, if that was a forlorn hope, I might fervently wish that the driver of the car was driving with extra caution. One reason why a driver might do so could be because a vulnerable cargo, such as a crate of eggs, was loose on the back seat. I believe that that analogy is a fair one.

One sometimes sees the sign, "Drive carefully — children on board" in the rear window of cars. The drivers of those vehicles need no such sign; they modify their behaviour because the risk is considered greater. Everyone argues that children in cars are safer if restraints are worn, and it is argued that that fact should be drilled into people. Indeed, the document "The Safety of Children in Cars" published by the Child Accident Prevention Trust states:

"A complementary intensive education and publicity effort to explain the need for their use and the provisions of the proposed law should commence immediately."

Nothing could more effectively change a motorist's assessment of risk and his subconscious approach to driving than a campaign that states, "Cut the risks: make sure your kid is belted up."

Some may doubt that behaviour is adapted according to one's perception of risk, so let us consider some examples. Every schoolboy knows that the invention of the Davy safety lamp by Sir Humphry Davy saved countless miners' lives. Sir Humphry's new lamp burned with a cool flame below the ignition point of methane. However, did it save lives? It turns our that every schoolboy is wrong. The invention of the lamp encouraged mining in methane-rich atmostpheres into which miners would not have previously ventured. After the introduction of that lamp there was an increase in the amount of coal mined, but also an increase in the number of explosions and fatalities. Miners perceived the dangers as being less and were prepared to venture into more risky situations. Unfortunately, they were sometimes lulled into a false sense of security.

Similar examples can be seen every day. Someone who stands on the top of a tall step-ladder manoeuvres with extreme care, but if a woman stands on a low stool to clean windows, that is when she topples over the breaks her leg in three places. The low stool seems much safer.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: Will the hon. Gentleman give way on that point?

Mr. Waller: I wish that the hon. Gentleman would allow me to finish my argument. I will come to the end of this stage of my argument and then I will give way with pleasure.

The rock climber who has never used ropes may decide to use them on a particularly difficult climb. When he believes that the risks are so diminished he is likely to do things that he has never done before. His chances of making a fatal error are increased. The equipment may be good, but it may not be so good as to make him invulnerable if he subconciously thinks that if he falls it will prevent him from being injured. Furthermore—this is particularly significant—if he does fall, the rope may save his life but can do nothing to help the chap 15 feet below him whom he hits as he falls down. Here, we may think of the old person crossing the road without the same protection as that of the driver and his family belted up in their fine shiny, super-safe new car.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: The logical conclusion of what the hon. Gentleman is saying is that the greater the risk, the greater the attention to safety. Applied to children in cars, that theory reduces itself to the argument that we should put the children not on the bonnet, because that would obscure visibility, but on the bumper, because then they are exposed to more risk and the driver would drive even more safely.

Mr. Waller: There is always a danger in taking any argument to its logical conclusion. I admit that many safety measures are consumed because we take greater risks. As an illustration — I would not for a moment suggest that this should happen — drivers would probably drive more safely if they had a bayonet pointing at their heart. I am not suggesting that that should happen, because if accidents occurred, they would be more serious. However, accidents would happen more rarely than they do now.

We must look not just at the casualties when accidents occur but at the number of accidents that occur. For example, statistics from insurance companies showing how insurance premiums have risen show that there has been a considerable increase in the number of accidents during the last few years. Unfortunately, these statistics are not collected in any systematic way. We have only casualty figures, and I would have liked to have accident figures.

Mr. Sheerman: The hon. Gentleman knows that there has been a great increase in cars on the roads in the period about which he is talking. Let me take him back to his risk compensation theory, which he has been propounding for years, but relatively unsuccessfully. The most vulnerable driver on the road is the motor cyclist. He is the most likely to have an accident if he is unwary or a little bit stupid and the evidence is that, as a group, they are the most reckless drivers on the road, and get killed in their thousands. What price the hon. Gentleman's risk compensation theory there?

Mr. Waller: I do not follow the exact point that the hon. Gentleman is making. I agree that motor cyclists are vulnerable, and one reason is that a high proportion of the accidents in which they are involved are caused by other road users, although I accept that many motor cyclists are young and relatively inexperienced on the road, and that is why my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary is so anxious to introduce measures to try to reduce the toll.

In developing my analogy, I have moved a little far from what happens on the road, so I shall now move back to that point. We can illustrate the fact that driver behaviour varies, whether the risk is increased or reduced. Let us take the example of a top rally driver. Whatever the terrain, his speed is such as to give the average passenger quite a nasty shock. I do not know whether many hon. Members have driven with a rally driver, but I know that it is quite a hair-raising experience. However, that driver has a secure, full harness to hold him steady and to protect him if the car goes off the road. If one took away that full harness, I am prepared to guarantee that the average speed over any course would be reduced. That would be a good thing if one happened to be in his path.

Recently, there have been some tragic accidents to spectators alongside international rallies. In only the last few weeks, in the Paris to Dakar rally, a number of fatalities were caused. Few situations are so dangerous as to be a pedestrian in the path of a driver whose equipment leads him to believe that he and his passengers are safe.

Let us see what happened after front seat belts became compulsory, because there has been a great deal of thought about our experience over the last five or so years. Professors Durbin and Harvey were commissioned by the Department of Transport to carry out an analysis of the comparative statistics before and after. In the two years following the introduction of compulsion there was—I want hon. Members to listen carefully to this—a 40 per cent. increase in the number of cyclists killed in accidents. This increase did not take place in accidents with heavy goods vehicles, for which seat belt wearing was not made compulsory.

On page 51 of their report, Durbin and Harvey say:

"There remains strong evidence of a substantial increase in numbers of cyclists killed in accidents with cars."

There was thus clear evidence pointing in the direction that drivers were imperceptibly taking more risks, with disastrous results for other road users. Others in greater peril were those in cars who were not belted in. On page 51 of the report, Durbin and Harvey say:

"The fact remains that we find the large proportionate increase in rear seat passengers killed hard to understand . . . We must therefore leave the sharp rise in the number of rear seat passengers killed as an unexplained mystery, at least until more evidence is available."

That epitomises the problem faced by those who oppose the seemingly sensible approach of compulsion.

It is easy to detect those who are saved because of seat belts. They write letters to Transport Ministers arguing in favour of compulsion. Those who are killed because drivers take one risk too many do not write letters. They are not able, like the hon. Member for Hamilton (Mr. Robertson), to say what has happened to them. That is the great difficulty and the point that we must not forget.

Durbin and Harvey said that they were "reluctant to accept driver behaviour as an explanation since this would be expected to lead to a corresponding increase in numbers seriously injured and there is evidence of no such increase."

However, there is serious doubt over the non-fatal injury statistics, because they are, as has already been said, so unreliable. Injuries are counted as serious if somebody breaks a finger or stays in hospital for one night. On the other hand, the Transport and Road Research Laboratory states that 59 per cent. of serious injuries to cyclists are never reported to the police.

The only statistics which are 100 per cent. reliable are the statistics for fatalities. Those favouring seat belt compulsion over many years conceal their feelings if they deny that the fatality statistics for motorists in the period following the introduction of compulsion in 1983 have been a serious disappointment. In 1977, the then Transport Minister, Mr. William Rodgers, forecast that 1,000 lives a year would be saved, a figure echoed for some time by Mr. David Ennals, now Lord Ennals. By 1982, the Department of Transport suggested a figure of 700 or fewer and, on the day of the debate of the renewal in regulations in January 1986, the British Medical Association was talking about 200 fewer deaths, which rather contrasts with one or two of the figures that we had heard before.

Mr. Day: My hon. Friend may be correct in saying that the results of the legislation have not been what we would have hoped for and expected. Nevertheless, they were good, and resulted in a reduction in the number of deaths and injuries.

Mr. Waller: Even organisations which were strongly in favour of seat belt compulsion, like the BMA, were, at the end of the day, able to claim the saving of only 200 lives. With such small figures, the whole process must be put in doubt.

Mr. Day: Two hundred is not small.

Mr. Waller: I am not saying that 200 is small. I am querying whether the saving of 200 exists at all or, as I shall show in a moment, can be attributed to other factors.

The Lancet ruefully admitted:

"There will be regret that the evidence on deaths is not more one-sided, and disappointment that the measure has fallen short of its promise."

I am afraid that this Bill could fall short of its promise as well.

As for savings in casualties, there is evidence that the savings following early 1983 can be attributed not to the wearing of seat belts but to the introduction of the evidential breath-testing machinery. There was a significant drop in the number of drivers killed who were found to be over the drink-driving limit. The number of drivers killed between 10 pm and 4 am—what are often described as the drink-drive hours—fell by 23 per cent. as compared with a drop of only 3 per cent. at all other times of the day. The Department's statisticians attributed all the savings to seat belts. I suggest that the evidence points in a very different direction and that the overwhelming bulk of the savings can be attributed to the introduction of the evidential breath test.

[Mr. Waller]

It is hardly surprising that, since compulsory seat belt wearing was introduced, the Cyclists Touring Club and Friends of the Earth, which originally favoured compulsion, have expressed serious doubts. Many of their leading members now express outright opposition to it, because they see what the effects on other road users can be.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Transport (Mr. Peter Bottomley): I have spent a lot of time with Friends of the Earth and the Cyclists Touring Club, and that is not a point that either has put to me. If my hon. Friend has evidence, or is in contact with them, perhaps he could arrange for me to see what they are saying.

Mr. Waller: I should be delighted to do that. I was careful to say that the organisations as a whole do not necessarily oppose the legislation. The hon. Member for Huddersfield (Mr. Sheerman) knows that those who represent the Cyclists Touring Club and Friends of the Earth on the committee which he chairs, who previously supported compulsory seat belt wearing, took a different line when the regulations were renewed recently.

In 1981, the Department of Transport evaluated the experience of compulsion in other countries. It anticipated that there could be a disadvantage for other road users arising from altered driver behaviour if they perceived the risks to be less. The paper which was produced accepted the findings of Dr. John Adams of London university, that pedestrian casualties increased in every one of the eight countries which had introduced compulsion, and described the statistical odds against achieving such results as one in 256. It warned that the increased casualty rates for pedestrians were "alarming" and noted:

"Since pedestrians account for 20 per cent. of casualties in Britain and the law effect seems positive for them"

—in other words, seat belt compulsion causes more pedestrian casualties—

"closer scrutiny is called for."

I take that latter phrase as a "Yes, Minister" warning against over-hasty legislation.

Mr. Bottomley: I hesitate to interrupt, because I want to hear what my hon. Friend has to say about the Bill, but I think that it is helpful to the House if I occasionally produce a bit of information. On page 84 of "The Casualty Report: Road Accident Great Britain, 1986", we are given pedestrian deaths in 1976 as 2,335 and in 1986 as 1,841. It gives the all-severities injuries in 1976 as 68,509 and in 1986 as 60,875. If that is a one-in-250 chance—because those 10 years bridge the introduction of compulsory front seat belt wearing and there are only 170 countries—there is something slightly curious in John Adams' calculation.

Mr. Waller: I a glad that my hon. Friend has said that. It enables me to clarify what we are talking about. We were talking about the situation in eight countries before we made seat belt wearing compulsory in Britain. I am sure that my hon. Friend the Minister would be the first to say that matters have changed in many respects. For example, regulations have been introduced to protect pedestrians in the event of their coming into contact with a car by making cars safer. A series of things have been happening at the same time.

Mr. Sheerman: What are they?

Mr. Waller: Campaigns have been run to warn people against drink-driving, which is the most dangerous driver behaviour. I am glad to say that they are having an effect.

The Lancet, which is a reputable publication produced by people who see the effects of accidents and who have been broadly in favour of legislation, referring to Dr. Adams' work, said it was

"unhelpful of the Department of Transport to have suppressed an evaluation supporting his doubts."

I am sure that if my hon. Friend the Minister had been in the Department at that time, he would not have suppressed the document.

What should be our conclusions? First, driver behaviour is the most likely reason for accidents. We all agree about that. Indeed, I see my hon. Friend the Minister is nodding on the Front Bench.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I am nodding in agreement.

Mr. Waller: Yes.

Secondly, motorists' behaviour may be modified by the risk that is perceived to apply to drivers and passengers. That applies especially to child passengers. Thirdly, any saving in casualties as a result of accidents is likely to be offset by an increase in accident numbers. That has been shown.

Fourthly, it is not acceptable to transfer the burden of risk from the best protected to the most vulnerable. Fifthly, it is not acceptable to legislate, even if one believes that the net effect may be positive—some have said that it is — if it means that other road users become casualties. One major motoring organisation has argued for compulsion on the grounds of this so-called net effect. It was prepared to trade off casualties among cyclists and pedestrians for savings, as it saw it, among car drivers. I hope that, when it comes to legislation, such a concept will be anathema to all hon. Members.

Mr. Day: The Bill is about restraining children in the back seat. I suggest that my hon. Friend is advancing an argument, the validity of which I do not accept, about restraining drivers. He is not advancing an argument against restraining children, who are not in control of the car.

Mr. Waller: I am sorry if my hon. Friend was not listening. I said that drivers' behaviour is affected substantially when they have passengers, especially child passengers. of course a child will be better off, in the event of an accident, if it is belted up in the back, but who is to say that there will not be more accidents and that the victims will not be other road users? That is the nub of my argument.

It is wrong if parents are unable to assess the evidence and reach their own judgment. We should not introduce legislation that can do harm, even if it is more difficult to quantify than the good which the legislation appears at first sight to do. Although I shall not obstruct the further passage of the Bill today, I shall continue to throw light on its deficiencies.

11.29 am

Mr. Austin Mitchell (Great Grimsby): I rise primarily to congratulate the hon. Member for Cheadle (Mr. Day) on introducing this important Bill, which makes a major contribution to road safety. He could not have chosen a better subject for a private Member's Bill because it provides concrete help, will save lives and is perhaps, although it should not be, too small for the Government to pursue. It is an ideal subject for a private Member's Bill. I shall be brief and then I shall belt up here on the back seat of the House.

We should not debate too long because Fridays tend to be hon. Members' playtime. It is the day for cause-pushers or quibblers, like the hon. Member for Keighley (Mr. Waller). It is also the day for hon. Members who are never called to speak during the week to vent their frustration by giving inordinately long speeches, as the hon. Gentleman did, and for those of us who have Front Bench responsibilities and are never called because senior spokesmen hog the time on our subject and we may not speak on any other because we are Front Bench spokesmen.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Is that why the hon. Gentleman spends all his time trying to bring television into the House of Commons? Is it so that his constituents can see that he is here, although he is not speaking?

Mr. Mitchell: That would not be an argument for television because television would only demonstrate my impotence, which I am not anxious to do publicly. On Fridays speeches tend to be long for those reasons, so I shall try to be brief.

I am a member of the Seat Belt Survivors Club. Wearing a seat belt saved my life and since then I have been a passionate advocate of seat belts. Despite all the alarms and fears of quibblers, the introduction of that legislation has made an enormous contribution to saving lives. We shall make a similar smaller contribution today by passing this Bill. There cannot be a more important objective than to save the lives of children who would be killed, maimed or seriously injured if the Bill were not passed. I do not want to be emotive about this, but saving lives is one of the highest purposes of Parliament and far more important than many of the other enormous issues such as unemployment, foreign policy and schools legislation, which we debate during the week.

There is no intellectual case against this legislation and the hon. Member for Keighley proved that at some length by his arguments. Essentially he argued that a greater feeling of safety produced greater risks. To assert that, he is trading the concrete saving of lives by the seat belt legislation because he is arguing that it makes people feel more secure, so they take risks. It is demonstrable that the compulsory wearing of seat belts has saved innumerable lives and averted an enormous number of injuries. I shall not go over the statistics again.

Mr. Teddy Taylor (Southend, East): Tell us a few.

Mr. Mitchell: The hon. Gentleman merely wants to delay the Bill and I shall not gratify him in that way. There has been a 30 per cent. saving in deaths and injuries to front seat passengers; a 20 per cent. saving in deaths and injuries to drivers of cars and light vans; a 39 per cent. reduction in brain injuries; a 53 per cent. reduction in fatal wounds; and a 40 per cent. reduction in injuries to the lungs sustained by front seat passengers. All those are concrete gains from that legislation.

The hon. Member for Keighley is proposing that those savings be traded for his hypothetical fears and statistical quibbles about a hypothetical risk effect. That risk effect is a statistical quibble which is not borne out by significant statistics. The Department of Transport and the various independent assessors of the legislation have concluded that there is no significant rise in the number of pedestrians, pedal cyclists and rear seat passengers seriously injured since the introduction of the seat belt legislation. There is no evidence of changes in the level of reporting of serious casualties during that period.

Mr. Waller: Would the hon. Gentleman say the same about those killed?

Mr. Peter Bottomley: If the hon. Gentleman will not, may I?

Madam Deputy Speaker (Miss Betty Boothroyd): Order. One intervention at a time.

Mr. Mitchell: I am happy to give way to the Minister.

Mr. Bottomley: From 1984 to 1986 the number of cyclists killed decreased by 20 per cent. Those are the three years following the introduction of compulsory seat belt wearing. I am prepared to accept that the level of cycling will also be an influence, but the raw death figures for cyclists have decreased by 20 per cent.

Mr. Mitchell: I am most grateful to the Minister. It is exactly that sort of statistic that refutes the quibbles of the hon. Member for Keighley. In favour of the quibbles he advocates that we discard the gains made by the seat belt legislation. That is the essence of his argument. It is paradoxical, downright wrong and certainly does not apply to this Bill.

The Bill is intended to protect children in the back seat, not drivers. To prove his argument the hon. Gentleman must be able to argue that parents driving children who are belted up in the back seat will proceed to behave wholly irresponsibly — as if there were no children or no proverbial carton of eggs in the back seat.

The hon. Gentleman would have to say that the fact that children were belted up was an incentive for parents to behave in that way. That argument is so plainly ridiculous that the hon. Gentleman did not venture to put it, but it is the logical extension of his position. It is not only wrong but — perhaps I should not say insane — crazy.

I cannot see why the hon. Gentleman is wasting the time of the House with arguments at that level of intelligence. It is much the same as the argument that has been put to me by a few individuals which is that as the Labour party represents people with large families and inferior cars, we should oppose the legislation. The argument is that if the legislation is introduced, it will put at risk anybody with three children, one of whom cannot be belted. In other words, because some people have three children we should put the lives of two children who can be belted up at risk. That is the logical extension of that particularly crazy amendment. When the hon. Gentleman put his argument he should have worn a red nose.

Once again, we are far too late with the necessary progress. We lagged behind for over a decade with the compulsory seat belt legislation and we lost innumerable lives as a result. We are now late again. This legislation has been introduced and is widely in force in Australia, New Zealand, Canada and the United States. This is an important reform and once again the only opposition comes from the vast tribe of quibblers in their little reservations, arguing that the last bastion of freedom is the freedom to be catapulted into a windscreen and that it should be reserved for children.

Mr. Waller: I am sorry that the hon. Gentleman has sunk to the sort of abuse which some of his colleagues would regret. At the time of the debate in 1986, the hon. Gentleman said that he was worried about the statistics on the increase in the number of casualties among cyclists. If he was worried about the statistics then, why is he not worried about them now?

Mr. Mitchell: I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman for carrying with him a pocket compendium of my speeches. He would need a furniture van to bring them all into the Chamber, because my speeches tend to be long, but he will not provoke me into making this one longer. The hon. Gentleman's argument is wrong and unjustified.

I would have preferred the Bill to go further and to require the fitting of rear seat belts in all cars which do not have them. That would be an important safeguard, but we delayed too long in prescribing the foundation for such legislation. We should make up for that by making the fitting of rear seat belts compulsory. That might help the Bill to say that it is a moderate, middle-of-the-road measure—halfway between the extremism of the hon. Member for Keighley and the hon. Member for Great Grimsby. I would be prepared to argue that on the same paradoxical basis as the hon. Member for Keighley has used.

I strongly support the Bill, and I hope that the House will give it an uncontested Second Reading.

Mr. Toby Jessel (Twickenham): The hon. Member for Huddersfield (Mr. Sheerman) said that the Bill is partly an emotional matter. I find it difficult to speak on the Bill without emotion because, just over 12 years ago, my only child—a girl aged five—was killed in a crash on the M4. Even now, after such a long time, it is difficult to speak about it.

At that time, and during the following five years, I tried to force myself to see whether some good could come from the accident. During those long five years, until about 1981, working closely with my hon. Friends the Members for Faversham (Mr. Moate), for Beckenham (Sir P. Goodhard), for Cambridgeshire, South-West (Sir A. Grant) and some others, hardly a month went by without our making some attempt to get parliamentary support for what we believed to be so necessary. Because it took five years longer than it should have done, thousands of deaths and tens of thousands of serious injuries occurred which could have been prevented. But we battled away, and in the end we achieved the legislation.

People now take it for granted that front seat passengers should wear seat belts. Had the legislation not been passed in 1981, many people would have been killed or injured since. We can argue about the precise number, but no one disputes the fact that, on balance, it would have been substantial.

Since 1981, I have shut up on the subject. My colleagues and I had done our job, and had seen the results. There seemed to be no point in reopening old wounds. But now there is. The Bill introduced by my hon. Friend the Member for Cheadle (Mr. Day), on which I warmly congratulate him, could, if enacted, save more lives—this time of children. I hope that it will receive full support and not meet unnecessary obstruction.

The hon. Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell) said that there was no intellectual case against the Bill. I agree with him. The first and most obvious point to make is that in aircraft it is compulsory to wear belts on take-off and landing. It is the law under the air navigation orders. Hardly anyone objects to it. No one seems to find that law objectionable in principle. An airline chief steward who lives in my constituency told me that, in his experience of 20 years, only one passenger had refused to wear a seat belt. The plane did not take off until that passenger had been removed.

I remember the "freedom fighters" who, in 1971 and 1972, battled against the compulsory wearing of crash helmets by motor cyclists. They said that it would be a monstrous interference with the freedom of young motor cyclists if they could not rush round with the wind streaking through their hair. The motor cycling magazines ran a huge campaign urging motor cyclists to write letters to Members of Parliament. Many of us disregarded those letters because we gave greater weight to the views of the middle-aged mothers of those young motor cyclists, who wrote fewer letters but of whose views we were well aware. That law was passed 15 years ago, and it has prevented about 120 deaths and 80 serious injuries a year.

Similar arguments about freedom are used today. They are nonsense, because they do not take into account the wide range of meanings of the word "freedom". It is a big word with many shades of meaning. There are the great liberties of speech and religion and the freedom from having one's country occupied by another. As my hon. Friend the Member for Cambridgeshire, South-West said, none of us would yield on those freedoms. But the word "freedom" is also used in relation to many petty regulations. On minor matters including driving on the right side of the road and allowing a cyclist cling to a car to pull himself along, none of us would want freedom. It is worth sacrificing some "freedom" to ensure major benefits in safety. It is philosophical nonsense to apply the word freedom merely because we use the same word, to apply to lesser matters. We should have the wisdom to discern between the two in our process of legislation.

My hon. Friend the Member for Keighley (Mr. Waller) is a barrister——

Mr. Waller: No, I am not.

Mr. Jessel: I am sorry if I have offended my hon. Friend. He sounded like a barrister. Lawyers often use their forensic skills to try to secure the acquittal of guilty people by making mere possibilities sound like probabilities. But when legislating on matters involving human risk we must look at the probabilities and not the possibilities, and take the expert advice and look at the statistics. My hon. Friend the Member for Keighley talked about people standing on the top of ladders with buckets. His speech was anecdotal.

It is a curious facet of human nature that people who on most matters seem to have plenty of common sense seem totally incapable of weighing the size of one risk against the size of another. This week I had a letter against the Bill from a constituent who was concerned about the risk to a child in the back of a car if the car caught fire. She was afraid of that risk. No doubt my hon. Friend the Member for Keighley, who said that parents ought to be allowed to choose and decide, would honour her request to be allowed to assess that risk for herself. However, the number of car crashes in which the car catches fire is only one in 400. Clearly, the risk of a child in the back of a car losing his or her life as a result of the car catching fire is much lower than the risk of being killed or severely injured as a result of being in a head-on collision while not wearing a safety device.

Are we to allow such parents to be the ones to weigh up a risk if they do not assess it in any sort of mathematical way; if such parents just go by hunch or instinct, and that is to the detriment of the chances of saving the life of a child and does not make sense. Some people are not sensible about weighing up relative risks.

In the preface to one of Dale Carnegie's books—not "How to Win Friends and Influence People", but in one of his other books—he writes about an outbreak of smallpox in New York between the wars. In a populaton of 7 or 8 million about seven or eight people died from that outbreak. There was enormous publicity and a stampede of people rushing around trying to jump the queues to get smallpox vaccine before anyone else. In the same year, 50,000 people died in New York because they had the wrong diet and suffered heart attacks that could have been avoided. Because the smallpox epidemic had a huge amount of publicity, people were not capable of weighing up the relative risk.

The same thing happens with different aspects of road safety. The House has a duty to support the Bill. I hope that no one will obstruct it.

11.53 am

Mr. Eric Martlew (Carlisle): I am sure that the whole House applauds the contribution by the hon. Member for Twickenham (Mr. Jessel), bearing in mind the pain that it must have caused him to speak on this subject. The hon. Member for Keighley (Mr. Waller) advanced a most bizarre argument and one which, when I was looking forward to this debate, I never thought about. At one time I was a safety officer and occasionally I met someone in industry who said that it would be much safer if guards were removed from all the machines. I suspect that it was someone like that who was in charge of safety at Chernobyl, and we know the effects of that.

Superficially, it could be argued that I have an interest in this safety legislation because I represent the constituency of Carlisle, which has the largest and the best seat belt manufacturer in Britain. That firm is, of course, Kangol. Not only is that company our largest seat belt manufacturer, but its work force belongs to the Transport and General Workers' Union of which I am a member and by which I am sponsored.

The Bill will not result in any extra work for people in the seat belt industry. That is because it is only in cases where seat belts are fitted that parents will be required to insist on their children using them. The Bill will not create an extra financial burden on families, nor will it mean that families will have to change cars or give up holidays, as has been suggested for families who want to join BUPA. It is a mild Bill and perhaps hon. Members would have supported a Bill that was a little stronger. However, we realise that it is necessary to support the Bill. My hon. Friend the Member for Huddersfield (Mr. Sheerman) said that few Members were in the House and that that suggested that the House was not very concerned about the issue. I suggest that it is because hon. Members thought that nobody would be callous enough to speak against this legislation. Hon. Members have gone back to the constituencies, happy in the belief that the Bill will go to Committee.

The reason I am here today has nothing to do with the fact that there is a seat belt manufacturer in my constituency. I am here today as a result of an incident that happened to me the day after the 1987 general election was announced and before I was a Member of the House. I have a very marginal constituency and in the event I have a majority of 71. My brother agreed to come over from Canada to help me fight the election. The day after the announcement my brother arrived in this country with his two children and I drove up the A74 to Prestwick airport to collect him. I put the children in the back of the car, which was a Y-registered Cortina. It was not an old car, but it did not have rear seat belts. I was about to start off when my six-year-old neice began to complain bitterly and to cry. She said that we should not drive because she was not belted up. My brother explained that the law in Canada states that young children must be safeguarded in the rear of cars. They must be belted up.

That was the first time that the matter had been brought to my attention. I have no children and was not used to the situation. Perhaps the hon. Member for Keighley will take comfort from the fact that I drove very carefully down the A74 on my way home. I am sure that if my hon. Friend the Member for Hamilton (Mr. Robertson) were here he would agree that the A74 is probably one of the most dangerous roads in Britain. Indeed, perhaps the hon. Member for Southend, East (Mr. Taylor) would agree with that. If there was ever an insult to the Scottish nation it must be the fact that the M6, which is a fine three-lane motorway, bypasses my constituency and stops at the Scottish border where it becomes that terrible road the A74.

Mr brother and his family and I got home safely. However, during the election campaign I was driving along, minding my own business, thinking of other things when someone, travelling at about 50 mph, ran into the back of my car. Fortunately, the children were not in the back at the time. As a law-abiding citizen, I was belted up. My car was written off. I shudder to think what might have happened if the children had been in the back. The accident was not caused by my careless driving, it was caused by the careless driving of the person behind me. I have no doubt that the children would have been seriously injured and would have become two more statistics to add to the thousands of children who were injured in that kind of accident last year. Indeed, matters might have been worse and they might have become part of the fatality statistics.

I discussed these matters after the election. When I said that someone should do something, I was told that I was the Member of Parliament and I should do something about it. That is why I am glad to be spending this Friday morning supporting the hon. Member for Cheadle (Mr. Day) and his private Member's Bill.

I hope that no one will oppose the Bill today. If it fails to reach the statute book this will be a sad day. We should be in no doubt that children will be killed unnecessarily if the Bill does not reach the statute book. Some people may argue that persuasion is better than legislation. Indeed, we may hear that argument later. However, the reality is that no matter how we try to persuade people, young people will not receive the necessary protection that they deserve. Prior to legislation only 30 per cent. of people used front seat belts. However, once legislation was introduced, more than 95 per cent. of people used them. If we are to protect children whose parents may not be as thoughtful as they should be, we must pass this Bill.

We must give credit to organisations, including the Department of Transport, which have done all that they can to persuade people to ensure that children are secure in the back of cars. In particular I want to mention the Kwik-Fit organisation which launched a campaign last month which, with certain provisos, gives free safety seats for the rear seats in cars. That must be applauded. Unless legislation is introduced, we shall not reduce the number of accidents.

Another argument that opponents of the Bill might put forward is that it interferes with personal freedom. That could be argued if we were considering making it compulsory for adults to belt up in the rear of cars. However, that case cannot be made for children. It has already been stated that there is legislation to stop children from smoking, to stop them from drinking and to forbid sexual activity with children under the age of 16. I am sure that no one would suggest that that is only the thin end of the wedge and that the next move would be to ban smoking or drinking by adults. I even understand that there is an early-day motion about banning sexual activity, but I do not suppose that that will gain approval.

Let us examine the precedents. In 1956, as can be seen from Hansard, there was a big debate during consideration of the Agricultural (Safety) Bill about whether children should be allowed to drive tractors and other agricultural machinery. At that time, about five children per year were killed driving tractors. The backwoodsmen said that to legislate against children driving tractors was a denial of personal liberty, and should not be allowed. One hon. Member, who represented East Grinstead, showed a photograph of five-year-olds driving tractors, and said that any well-adjusted five-year-old was capable of doing so. Thirty years ago, the House decided that those children needed protection, and the figures show that the legislation worked. In the 1950s, we were losing five children a year who had been driving agricultural machinery. Over the past five years, only one child has been killed in such circumstances.

I ask the House to give the protection of the law to the children of my constituents, and to those of all the constituents in Britain, so that my Canadian niece will not have an advantage over British children. Other countries have put these laws into operaton. That proves that they work, and that there is no reason for the House not to accept this Bill today.

Mr. Teddy Taylor (Southend, East): I thank the hon. Member for Carlisle (Mr. Martlew) for what he said about Southend, and about the A74. When I represented a Glasgow seat, I thought that the condition of the A74 was one of our greatest national scandals, until I moved to Southend and I found that the roads there were infinitely worse.

I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Cheadle (Mr. Day) on bringing forward a Bill that commands such massive support on both sides of the House. In fairness, I must say that any Bill that claims to try to stop cruelty to animals, to be kind to pensioners or to make children safer will receive considerable support. I accept that children's safety is a very emotive issue. As the father of three young children, I am well aware that ensuring their safety is a nightmare of which every parent is constantly aware. However, while there is obviously a deep-rooted desire in the House to pass Bills to stop cruelty to animals, help pensioners or make children safer, we must be very careful about the way in which we use laws, as opposed to campaigns or persuasion. There are several things that we must avoid.

First, we must avoid at all costs what I would call the Esther Rantzen disease, calling for Parliament to abandon pillar boxes and lamp posts on the basis that old age pensioners may bump into them at night. Parliament is constantly being asked to pass laws that do not make a great deal of sense.

Secondly, we must avoid doing what we were asked to do by the hon. Member for Hamilton (Mr. Robertson) —passing a law because he was unable to persuade his unruly children to do what they were told. There is a danger of our passing laws because parents appear to be unable to persuade their children to do what they think is right.

Thirdly, we must avoid putting forward laws that may appear acceptable on the basis of statistical information, but do not necessarily stand up to examination. Several people have written to me making the point mentioned by my hon. Friend the Member for Cheadle, in his excellent opening speech, about 91 per cent. of child accidents affecting those sitting at the back. I hope that my hon. Friend the Minister, who seems to be being flooded with statistics today, will give us some guidance on how relevant that figure is, bearing in mind the number of children who travel in the back seat.

I have considerable sympathy with the gut reaction of my hon. Friend the Member for Keighley (Mr. Waller), whose excellent and carefully argued speech was unfortunately not received with the sympathy that it deserved. A number of people feel very strongly that the concept of accident-free motoring will encourage worse driver behaviour and will create more accidents, not necessarily for drivers, but for others on the roads.

I wish to persuade the Whips immediately that neither I nor my hon. Friends have any intention of trying to talk out this Bill. Therefore, I shall put the one basic point that I hope my hon. Friend the Member for Cheadle and the Minister will bear in mind. As a Parliament, do we have a right to pass a law to force people to do something that in certain circumstances will create additional dangers for children? That has to be faced up to.

I frequently take my children to hockey practice or school or collect them from school. On such occasions, I often have four or sometimes more children on the back seat of my Rover car. If I were to select three of them and afford them the privilege of a seat belt, the two others would be sitting on top of the three belted children. Surely they would be in additional danger. In my view they would be in more danger than if they were all sitting on the same level. I hope that hon. Members will think carefully about that. If there are three belted children on the back seat it creates a plateau on which others travelling in the back have to sit. On the basis of common sense, that creates more danger.

Most of the countries that have passed laws of this sort have had different ages in mind. Will it make toddlers more careful if we put an adult seat belt on them? In my car, we used to have one of those splendid seats for toddlers where one has virtually to put a new chair on the back seat. To pass a law forcing a toddler to put on an adult seat belt will not be a recipe for greater safety.

Is it logical to fix the age at 14? I have a youngster who is 13 who is bigger than me and I have an old mother who is certainly much smaller than both of us. If anyone deserves protection, it is someone who is smaller and more at risk.

Hearing all the statistics that are put forward reminds me of someone trying to explain the benefits of our trade figures with the EEC. I wish to make it abundantly clear that my hon. Friend the Member for Cheadle believes in the Bill passionately and presented it fairly and reasonably. However, I hope that he will bear in mind that in certain circumstances the Bill will create additional dangers for children.

It is wrong that a law should force such a situation upon us. In those circumstances, it would be infinitely better if, before passing such a law, we ran a publicity campaign in which my hon. Friend the Member for Cheadle and all his hon. Friends on both sides of the House could try to put across their views to the general public. We could see whether that led to any improvement rather than introducing a criminal law which certainly, in the views of a minority, including myself, will make things worse rather than better.

12.8 pm

Mr. Clifford Forsythe (Antrim, South): I congratulate the hon. Member for Cheadle (Mr. Day) on introducing the Bill. I assure him of my support and the support of my colleagues in his endeavours to bring it into law. However, I and my colleagues have one disagreement and disappointment with the Bill, which is that it does not apply to Northern Ireland. I have already made that point to the hon. Member for Cheadle.

I do not wish to rehearse the arguments we have already heard. However, the arguments that apply to children in Great Britain should also apply to children in Northern Ireland, which is part of the United Kingdom. I cannot understand why the law will not apply to Northern Ireland.

Mr. Day: I appreciate what the hon. Gentleman is saying. If it were possible to extend the Bill to include Northern Ireland, I would do so. I hope that the hon. Gentleman will appreciate that I am amending an existing Act that does not apply to Northern Ireland.

Mr. Forsythe: I intend to suggest how it could be extended. Perhaps the Minister will also make suggestions on the matter.

The children of Northern Ireland should receive the same treatment. Parents in Northern Ireland feel exactly the same about their offspring as hon. Members and the other citizens in Great Britain feel about theirs.

The argument about whether adults should wear seat belts is completely irrelevant; we are talking about children. The hon. Member for Keighley (Mr. Waller) lost me in his arguments. If we are considering whether children should wear rear seat belts, it is irrelevant, even though it may be a good argument, to talk about people climbing up cliffs and placing a bayonet in front of the driver to prevent crashes.

We all realise that children, under and over 14, do not pay much attention to what is going on when they are sitting in the back seat of a car. They are not terribly worried about safety. They put their trust in the adult who is driving. It would be useful if children were restrained by seat belts—it would be for their own benefit and safety.

Most sensible people will support the Bill. One must not worry only about drivers. Pedestrians, because they are more nimble than cars, can suddenly walk out into the middle of the road. If an accident occurred, it would be the fault not of the driver but of the pedestrian.

It has been mentioned that Australia has legislation about front and rear seat belts. It has been suggested to me—perhaps someone could confirm this information—that in Australia when rear seat belts are fitted it is the responsibility of the rear seat occupant to ensure that they wear the belt; it is not the responsibility of the driver. It would be better if it were the responsibility of the adult driving the car to ensure that children are restrained in the back of cars.

We shall support the Bill, but I should like to return to the fact that it will not apply to Northern Ireland. That is my only disagreement with it. I point out to the hon. Member for Cheadle that page 5 of the Farm Land and Rural Development Bill, which has just gone to Committee, says:

"An Order in Council under paragraph 1(1)(b) of Schedule 1 to the Northern Ireland Act 1974 (exercise of legislative functions for Northern Ireland) which states that it is made only for purposes corresponding to the purposes of section 1 above," which refers to the negative resolution, can be applied to Northern Ireland.

Fact sheet No. 15 from the Library says:

"From 1986, certain Acts relating to Great Britain have contained clauses providing that legislation for Northern Ireland to the whole Act (or part of it) might be issued under para. 1(1)(b) of the Northern Ireland Act 1974, but that such legislation should be subject to the negative resolution procedure."

That is how it can be applied to Northern Ireland. I am disappointed that it has not been done up to now. I ask the hon. Member for Cheadle to consider that point in Committee. I hope that the Minister will also examine that possibilities. I commend the hon. Member for Cheadle for presenting an excellent Bill.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Transport (Mr. Peter Bottomley): First, I assure the hon. Member for Antrim, South (Mr. Forsythe) that the interest in the protection of children in the rear of cars that he expressed on behalf of his hon. Friends will be passed on to my ministerial colleagues. If at any stage I am moved to hold responsibility for Northern Ireland, I shall carry with me my personal interest in child restraint. I am not advertising for a job; I am simply making a declaration.

Like other hon. Members, I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Cheadle (Mr. Day) on his work in bringing the Bill before the House. The Government are keen to see how public and parliamentary opinion has moved on the subject of protection for children in the rear of cars. I also pay tribute to the work of PACTS. Its work on transport safety has helped many people to be alive today. It has also helped people avoid injury, or greater injury. It brings together Members of Parliament, people in relevant professions and car manufacturers who have facts to give.

My hon. Friend the Member for Southend, East (Mr. Taylor) is interested in facts. He said, rightly, that legislation should be based on facts as well as on emotions. My hon. Friend the Member for Keighley, (Mr. Waller) put forward, in some cases fairly, the possibility of risk compensation. We all accept that we sometimes compensate for the degree of perceived risk. We have experience of that on roads in our constituencies. People tend to treat dangerous roads with caution but have disrespect for roads that appear to be safe. Crashes and collisions often occur where, on the face of it, they should not have happened.

The risk compensation theory or, to the real aficionados, the homeostasis is incomplete. If it worked completely, the anti-skid treatment on road surfaces at junctions would not work. Everyone would realise that they could brake later or harder and still have the same chance of a crash. However, in some cases it needs to be taken into account, and certainly we have to guard against over-confidence.

Two days ago I was launching the Government's proposals for more comprehensive testing and training for motor cyclists. Mr. Mike Read of RoSPA, who has done great work, both personally and with that organisation, in avoiding accidents on the roads, made the point that people who have one day's initial training should not regard themselves as fully trained motor cyclists. It is necessary to guard against the dangers of exuberance and inexperience.

The words of my hon. Friend the Member for Keighley (Mr. Waller) will be taken into account. It is up to those of us who have the job of presenting information and statistics and looking after the research that the Government fund to make sure that we publish information, warts and all, whether or not it happens to back up my prejudice or somebody else's prejudice.

It is not the job of a Government spokesman to sum up a debate on a private Member's Bill, but it is my responsibility to demonstrate that I have listened to the points that have been made by all hon. Members.

We have seen examples of how the number of casualties has been reduced. It is now accepted that, if it were tied to front seat belt wearing, the death rate of cyclists would have continued to rise in the years following 1983. It has not. When research is done it is important to try to repeat it, or, at least, to look for the facts that will test whether an hypothesis or an apparent piece of evidence stands up as a long-term trend.

My hon. Friend the Member for Cheadle put forward a case for the wearing of child restraints. Too high a proportion of people in the back of cars are not restrained. More people have the opportunity to put on seat belts because, following the introduction of compulsory anchorages, only new cars with the compulsory fitting of child restraints or rear seat belts can be sold in this country. Page 56, paragraph 10.7, of the "Casualty Report: Road Accidents in Great Britain 1986" states that, of the 205 unrestrained babies seen in the 1986 survey, 168 were carried on the lap of an adult.

No one who has seen the PACTS video, which was kindly financed by the General Accident Insurance company and which contains the Transport and Road Research Laboratory's demonstration of what happens to a baby in that position, and no one who has seen film showing a dummy on a parent's lap in a crash would ever again knowingly expose his or her baby to that risk. A brave and forthright speech was made by my hon. Friend the Member for Twickenham (Mr. Jessel). Anyone who has heard him talk of the tragedy in his family would be foolish beyond words to leave their own child exposed to risk, now that they have the benefit—if I may call it that—of someone else's experience.

The House of Commons represents the people of this country. Hon. Members have the same experiences as those of other people in this country. It is not our responsibility to make the use of roads risk-free—we can only aim as far as reasonably practical towards that—but even if we adopt my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State's relatively modest target to cut road casualties by one third by the year 2000—that gives us 11 years and 11 months—we can probably cut out 5,000 deaths of and injuries to children if they start to wear restraints in the back of cars in which they are fitted.

My hon. Friend the Member for Cheadle is not asking the Government to use the powers that they already have to propose regulations to require adults to wear seat belts in the back of cars. My hon. Friend spotted a quirk in the law whereby the Government can require adults to wear seat belts in the back of cars, but they do not have the power to require children to do so.

At no stage during the debate on the Road Traffic Act 1972, which my hon. Friend's Bill seeks to amend, did anyone say that we specifically want to exclude chidren from the regulation that requires people to be restrained or protected in the back of cars. It is a quirk. My hon. Friend's Bill will fill that gap. Exemptions have been referred to. I give a commitment. If the Bill is passed by Parliament, the Department of Transport, with the various advisory and professional bodies, and my hon. Friend the Members for Keighley and for Southend, East, will carefully look at making the regulations under the Bill as suitable as possible to meet all known cases.

Some such cases can be described now—for example, the problem of large families. It is not my hon. Friend's intention to exclude large families from travelling in small cars. Although that may not be the most sensible thing to do if one has an option, many families do not have that option. It is not the intention of the Bill, nor would it be the Government's intention in putting forward regulations, to ban school runs. We may have our individual views on whether it is sensible to take more than three, and even up to eight children, in one car, but I do not think that the regulations would interfere with that.

If the Government have the power to lay regulations, it would not be our intention to do that in such a way that people would be forced to install rear seat belts, other than those required by law at the moment. However, that is not a commitment for ever, because moods change and people's understanding of the issues varies. I do not think that anyone would sensibly consider trying to lay regulations for adults until at least half the cars have restraints fitted. As the anchorage points became compulsory only in 1981, and the legislation requiring new cars to be fitted with adult restraints or child belts came in only last year, we are probably four or five years away from repeating this debate over adults.

My hon. Friend the Member for Cheadle did not spend much time discussing the ease of fitting. To those parents who are considering the installation of child restraints, I am sure that all hon. Members would give the message, "Don't think about it: do it."

If people have any doubts, they can ring the free phone telephone number, 0800 234 888. One need not be a parent to use that number — any godparent, member of the family, or grandparent could do so. We will arrange to send any caller the leaflet "Protect Your Child in the Car", which gives illustrations of the various types of restraint that are available. Such restraints are easy to fit.

I believe that it was the hon. Member for Carlisle (Mr. Martlew) — it could have been another Opposition Member — who talked about the Kwik-Fit scheme. I should correct that by saying that Kwik-Fit will sell a child seat and refund the money in full when the seat is no longer needed. I do not want to be a walking advertisement, but Kwik-Fit has may centres where people can obtain rear restraints that are capable of fitting people of all sizes and ages. The grandmother or children of my hon. Friend the Member for Southend, East will all fit in the same belt. Many other places provide such belts, including Mothercare, car accessory shops such as Halfords Ltd, and garages.

The reason that there is so much more provision of these restraints is, as has been mentioned, the work of the "That's Life" programme, which has done more than the Government. "That's Life" helped to encourage parents to buy a million rear restraints in 1986 and a million rear restraints in 1987. That is probably twice or three times as many as would have been sold otherwise—if it had been left to my mouth close to this microphone.

Parents are responding, but the real question that the House must face is whether the responsibility of parents for their children goes further, and whether it is right to have the prompt of legislation so that parents will automatically use restraints. We still have to get parents to buy restraints by persuasion and campaigning. The Bill will do nothing to require parents to fit the restraints.

The hon. Member for Hamilton (Mr. Robertson) talked about the Seat Belt Survivors Club. Many of us are honorary members of that club and perhaps we should write to Rospa, presumably in Birmingham——

Mr. Robertson: Yes, but there is no free phone.

Mr. Bottomley: I see. There is no free phone. We must pay for our own stamp.

The hon. Gentleman also asked when obligation requires compulsion. Parents have an obligation to protect their children. Any hon. Member who is in the House late in the evening fears a phone call from his family saying that there has been a car crash. Our first thought is not whether the car is all right but whether the members of our family are all right. Nearly all of us, unless we have a car that is as old as mine, insure our cars comprehensively. There is no obligation to do so, but we do it because we are concerned, to some extent, about the car. However, most of us would happily accept the destruction of even a new car if we heard that a member of our family had not been injured in a crash. The best way of secondary protection for a child or, indeed, an adult in a car is a seat belt or a specialist restraint that is geared to the age of the child.

My hon. Friend the Member for Cambridgeshire, South-West (Sir A. Grant), speaking both as an experienced individual and as president of the Guild of Experienced Motorists, said that restraints save lives and reduce injuries. My hon. Friend the Member for Southend, East asked whether the fact that 90 per cent. of injuries involved children in the rear of cars tied in with the proportion of children in the rear of cars. The answer is yes, but, predominantly, younger children are in the rear of cars. The large 13-year-old child is more likely to be in the front beside the driver.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: Will my hon. Friend say, from his long experience, whether wearing an adult seat belt makes a child under three more secure?

Mr. Bottomley: I am grateful to my hon. Friend for reminding me about his second question. The answer is yes. There is little virtue in putting a child under the age of one in an adult seat belt, because a child of that age cannot sit up by himself. If an adult seat belt is the only thing available, it provides better protection than leaving a child unrestrained.

For children up to nine months, I advise parents to get an infant carrier, many of which now fit into the three-point harness. Between the ages of nine months and four years, the best solution is a specialist car safety seat. Beyond the age of four, although it depends on the size of the child rather than his exact age, it is better to use a booster seat or a specialist cushion with the seat belt.

The hon. Member for Southport (Mr. Fearn) gave us his views on behalf of the alliance. I am glad that he described the world as it is. It is full of parents who know that they ought to have child restraints and that they ought to use them. They need that extra push which will transform the wearing rate.

More demonstrations should be carried out, such as that mentioned by my hon. Friend the Member for Cambridgeshire, South-West at the Rosie maternity hospital. If more of us were put on a sledge and dropped from the top of a small ramp, with a reasonably heavy doll or a dummy child in our arms, we should soon realise what was involved. I want to take this a stage further. We should be put in a sledge and sent down a 12 ft ramp without a dummy doll and without wearing a seat belt. Few people would complain afterwards because their heads would have been smashed in. That is what happens to children. What parent would deliberately hold a child head down, 5 ft above a glass table and then let go? That represents far less of an impact than a car stopping dead at 25 miles per hour.

Eighty per cent. of the crashes and collisions that produce injury in this country occur in built-up areas, even though they contain only 40 per cent. of the traffic. If I were given a choice between driving with a child unrestrained on a motorway or in a built-up area, I should prefer to have the child unrestrained on the motorway and belted up in the built-up area. The real dangers are in the built-up areas. Low-speed crashes can kill and injure children.

My hon. Friend the Member for Beckenham (Sir P. Goodhart), a long-term member and supporter of PACTS, asked me to represent the statistics and information in a more effective way. I shall accept his encouragement. I am doing my best, but I need to do better. Often, we underestimate the power of commissioning research, the results of that research and the annual digest of statistics, which tend to come out in an indigestible lump, although there are many good articles. I recommend hon. Members to read the "Casualty Report: Road Accidents in Great Britain 1986". It is subtitled "The Casualty Report" but I have subtitled it "Accidents happen to vehicles, casualties happen to people". Perhaps my hon. Friend might be willing to discuss how we can present this information in an effective way.

The hon. Member for Huddersfield (Mr. Sheerman) deserves tribute for his co-leadership of PACTS and for the way in which he puts the arguments across, both inside and outside the House. The hon. Member for Huddersfield was right to state that we are trying to save people's lives by protecting their lives. The allusion he made to the happy children involved with Comic Relief is important because road deaths are the biggest killer of young people. It is overtaken by various other things such as smoking, later on, but between the ages of 15 to 25 roads pose the greatest threat to young people.

Effective measures put forward by Government will cut the road casualty toll. A total of 5,382 people died on our roads last year—enough to put a dead body on every seat at the festival of remembrance at the Royal Albert hall each November. Every one of the 100,000 places available at Wembley for a cup final could be filled at least three times over by those who are injured. Among those deaths and injuries are children in the backs of cars. There are some 9,000 injuries and hundreds of deaths each year.

The House must consider whether the Bill provides sensible and effective powers for the Government to lay regulations. Those regulations would be loose and there would be plenty of opportunity, if it came to that, to argue that the Government were being too slow or too unambitious—I suspect that that is the truth. We must consider whether the Government should have those powers now.

My hon. Friends the Member for Keighley and for Southend, East rightly cautioned the Government about saying, "There is a problem, here is the legislation. No matter what the cost, bring in the manny state." However, I repeat what my hon. Friend the Member for Cambridgeshire, South-West said: children need nannies. For children's protection I believe that there can be no doubt that belting up is effective and that legislation would get many more parents to do what makes sense for their children.

I do not believe that a great deal more can be said on behalf of the Government. If it had come to a vote, I certainly would have voted in favour of the Bill. I believe that it is a pity that, when the Government were given powers to legislate for adults in the rear of cars, those powers were not used. Therefore, people should not be worried about the Government being over-anxious to use every opportunity to take such powers. Indeed, perhaps the Government stand to far back I believe that the powers, if given to Government, would be used sensibly and there would be full consultation so that people would not be harmed and the result would be that many children would be saved.

Let me illustrate the rate of danger to children. In each of the years since 1980, between 37 and 58 children have been murdered. In the years since 1980, between 60 and 81 children have died, unrestrained in the backs of cars. That puts the issue into perspective.

Mr. Tony Lloyd (Stretford): I add my congratulations to the hon. Member for Cheadle (Mr. Day) on introducing this important Bill. The Under-Secretary said that there was an unintentional gap in previous legislation and that it should not have been necessary to introduce the Bill as primary legislation. The hon. Member for Cheadle has chosen to bring forward this sensible, overdue legislation and that redounds greatly to his credit because this is his first stint in Parliament. I hope that his contribution to safety on our roads is recognised by the House.

The roads are less safe than they should be. On a different occasion we will have a debate on the Government's responsibilities and the pace at which we should be moving. As a mark of compliment to the Minister, perhaps it is almost uncharitable, I always get the feeling that there is a road safety Minister trying to get free of the shackles of a Government who wish to underfund the infrastructure. Perhaps that feeling will guarantee, ultimately that he will find himself in Northern Ireland and will then be able to help the hon. Member for Antrim, South (Mr. Forsythe). Perhaps I should not push too hard on that today.

This legislation is extremely important. We are talking not just about a significant number of deaths over a year but about a huge number of serious and less serious injuries. Any parent who sees their child in hospital, or even just hurt, knows the anguish and agony that we all go through in such situations, not to mention the obvious suffering of the children concerned. We can have nothing but sympathy for the hon. Member for Twickenham (Mr. Jessel) who lost his child in this way.

As a parent, I have contemplated the possibility of one of my children dying—under any circumstances—and know how difficult it would be to come to terms with that, particularly if one had a sense of responsibility for what had happened. That would be compounded if one felt that one could have taken actions that would have prevented the accident. It would produce a guilt that only those who have been through such an experience could understand and appreciate. For those reasons, the House has an obligation and a responsibility, not just to parents but to all in society, to offer a legal framework which will allow the safe use of our roads.

I do not want to spend a great deal of time on the remarks of the hon. Members for Keighley (Mr. Waller) and for Southend, East (Mr. Taylor). Their views are nonsense. There is an old saying, used by statisticians, that some people use statistics as a drunk would use a lamp post—to prop up an otherwise disreputable situation.

Mr. Waller: The statistics that I used were official statistics, and I used few of those. I developed my argument fairly carefully. I accept that the hon. Gentleman has a viewpoint, and he should accept that I have a viewpoint and an equally valid right to put it.

Mr. Lloyd: I have to disappoint the hon. Gentleman. No, I do not accept that. If the hon. Gentleman were consistent in his theory, he would believe that the introduction of any safety measures, such as those rightly pointed out by the Minister — skid resistance, better braking systems and more adequate steering — would lead to riskier driving and the acceptance of a higher risk on the road. I reject that view, not only because it does not conform with my view of driving, which I agree is only at the level of personal experience and anecdote, but because I do not believe that people take a measured, calculated view which allows them to assess risk in the way that would be necessary for them to come up with the results that the hon. Gentleman has suggested. The case is rather the opposite. If people took a rational viewpoint, they would realise that driving a motorcar, even with children restrained by seat belts, is risky. Deaths and serious injuries occur even when children are restrained in the backs of cars. The argument that we can afford to take great risks and drive like hooligans or grand prix drivers is not borne out by a rational decision. The truth is different.

Most of us get into our cars without thinking about whether we shall have an accident that day. I got into my car at 6 o'clock this morning to drive to Manchester airport. No doubt I drove as I always drive—not as well as I ought to. I did not think that I might have an accident. Over the weekend, when I drive my children, I will not think, "This is the time when I will have an accident."Virtually every one of us has had that thought from time to time—it conditions our behaviour. I am afraid we mostly have it when we pass an accident on the motorway or read about a particularly dreadful accident in our area. That is when our behaviour begins to approximate to a rational model of assessing risk, but for the most part, sadly, that is not the model of human behaviour.

If the hon. Member for Keighley followed through the logic of his argument, he should be arguing passionately against the Bill. He should oppose rear seat restraints in any circumstances because in his view they are for the greater disbenefit. The fact that he does not oppose the Bill so passionately leads me to question his motivation. I am not casting aspersions about his views—I am sure that he is as keen as the rest of us to ensure that our roads are safer — but the logic of his argument is patently ridiculous.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The logic of my argument is that everyone should be belted up and no car should do more than 10 mph in a built up area or more than 30 mph outside. My hon. Friend the Member for Keighley (Mr. Waller) fairly said that there is some risk compensation. He did not say that people should not be belted up, although he may have given that impression, and it will not help the causes that I and the hon. Member for Stretford (Mr. Lloyd) support if we drive my hon. Friend too far.

Mr. Lloyd: I have no strong views on how far the hon. Gentleman can be driven.

The Bill is basically sound and I hope that what the hon. Member for Antrim, South said will be heeded. I see no reason why the Bill should not be amended to take account of Northern Ireland. The Minister has not said that he would oppose such a move, although he may wish to reconsider if amendments are tabled.

It is right to legislate, but information is critical. That is the experience of every country that has introduced rear restraints. It is only when a legislative framework is backed up by information campaigns that the public realise the significance of an issue.

The use of rear restraints in Sweden has gone up from less than one quarter to about three quarters of the population on the basis of three lines of action — a legislative framework, public information, and local authorities providing loans for child seats. I fear to throw in that latter remark because I am sure that Conservative Members will say that I am representing loony Left Labour councils who want to use public money for mischievious purposes. There is, however, a strong argument in favour of such public sector action.

Most of us are ignorant of the dangers. I was intrigued by what the Minister and the hon. Member for Cambridgeshire, South-West (Sir A. Grant) said about what happens at relatively low speeds. Most of us have held a young child in a car and assumed that we were capable of keeping it out of danger. It seems that the reality is very different. The House has an obligation to get that message over.

I have been able this week to examine what is available for young children. I have children of almost all sizes. I have fewer rear restraints than children—I have three restraints and four children. I have to make the unenviable choice which may be called the Southend question. I must tell the hon. Member for Southend, East (Mr. Taylor) that I would far sooner have three of my children properly restrained than have none of them restrained, on the basis of some dubious concept of fairness.

The hon. Member for Cheadle does the House a great service by introducing the Bill, but it is a shame that the Bill is not Government legislation. Dr. D. J. Williams, president of the Casualty Surgeons Association said in his letter to the hon. Gentleman:

> "We find it very disturbing that it should be necessary for you to introduce a Private Members Bill in order to achieve a reduction in the number of serious and fatal injuries to children but we are unanimous in our support for your endeavour."

That is high credit to the hon. Gentleman. It is less credit to the Government that private Member's legislation is required on an issue of primary safety. I hope that the Minister has listened to the House which, apart from one or two dissenting voices, is overwhelmingly in favour of the introduction of the measure. I hope that he will recognise that safety commands support across the House and is not the province of one party or another.

We must be assured that the Department of Transport and its Ministers take safety seriously. While it is easy to say the words that show how worried we all are, it is more difficult to get the Government to act. The Government should have introduced legislation, but I congratulate the hon. Gentleman on introducing it. I hope that the Minister will enthusiastically adopt the measure and ensure that it is put into practice.

12.51 pm

Mr. Roger Moate (Faversham): Those of us who strongly support the Bill should at least thank my hon. Friends the Members for Keighley (Mr. Waller) and for Southend, East (Mr. Taylor) for their important statement that they do not propose to delay the Bill today and for enlivening the debate, as my hon. Friend the Member for Keighley undoubtedly did. It is most important that they have stated that they will not delay the Bill as it gives us great heart and hope that the legislation will find its way to the statute book. I hope that my hon. Friend the Member for Cheadle (Mr. Day) will have the great honour of carrying it to the statute book. Whatever happens to him in his future distinguished political career, if he gets this on the statute book, he will be able to look back on one of the most worthwhile achievements of his career. I say that as one who laboured with great difficulty in the early 1970s with many other hon. Members who are present today to persuade the Government and Parliament —we were swimming against the tide—to accept seat belt legislation.

Having thanked my hon. Friend the Member for Keighley for what he said, I must disagree fundamentally with him. He is fighting a rearguard action, having lost the original argument on seat belts. His fundamental belief that somehow better driver behaviour can be produced by education or exhortation is wrong and has been proved wrong by our seat belt experience.

We know that seat-belt wearing increased dramatically as a result of the legislation. To suggest as he does that we should not have compulsory restraints for children in rear seats, but that we should leave the decision to drivers and parents, is flying in the face of experience. We know full well that the low wearing rate would continue. That is what he wants to see happen because, he argues, the more we belt up, the more careless we become as drivers and the greater the hazard we are to other road users, such as pedestrians and cyclists. He is suggesting that seat belts make us careless and that we should not wear them too often. It follows that he is sceptical about restraint for anyone in a car. That is not carrying his argument to an illogical conclusion——

Mr. Waller: If I was driving a car and had small children in it, I would ensure that they were belted in because I would be thinking about them. But it is wrong to introduce changes in law which might have the effect of transferring the risk from children belted into a car to others who were using the road at the same time.

Mr. Moate: My hon. Friend's logic is flawed. He makes a judgment for himself that children should be restrained, but he is taking a calculated risk that that action could cause injury to others. We as a Parliament must make that calculated judgment about whether, if my hon. Friend is right about the increased hazard to pedestrians or cyclists, that risk is offset by the greater saving of life that would accrue from seat belt wearing. The overwhelming evidence is that substantial savings of life and a reduction in serious injury could be achieved by adults wearing seat belts in the front and rear seats and by children wearing the harness described by my hon. Friend the Minister.

The House is entitled to consider some of the arguments that were deployed by my hon. Friend and others on the Bill, which made it compulsory to wear seat belts. Many of the premises upon which they argued have been proved decisively to be wrong. It is remarkable how the motoring public accepted seat belts. I make a point of looking at other cars to see how many drivers are unrestrained, and almost every driver wears a seat belt. We were told that the motoring public would be hostile to wearing seat belts and that there would be difficulties of enforcement. There has been none. We were told that the police would be overwhelmed with work, but they have not been. We were told that the legislation would not reduce casualties, but it has.

All that happened not through a miracle but because the British public accepted the logic of wearing seat belts. It has become an automatic feature of their lives. That is exactly what would happen with child restraints in rear seats.

My hon. Friend the Member for Southend, East said that it would be wrong for parents to use the law to back them up in enforcing better behaviour on their children. I understand his point exactly. It is a duty of parents to make their children behave. But many parents would welcome the assistance of the law in persuading their children to belt up and be restrained in rear seats. Any parent could tell us how difficult it is to get children to sit still at all, or to sit in the back of the car. Every child wants to sit in the front and they do not want to be restrained. The legislation would encourage the use of children's seat belts far beyond what it might prescribe. It will become commonplace for all children to expect to be restrained from an early age.

I was intrigued by the evidence of a survey conducted in Kansas which would gladden the hearts of most parents. It said that the use of child restraints can reduce disruptive behaviour during car journeys. So there would be a wonderful secondary benefit apart from the improvement in road safety. A group of children riding in car seats exhibited very high levels of appropriate or safe behaviour, whereas children not riding in car seats exhibited very low levels of appropriate behaviour. As a parent — all parents would echo this—I believe that the legislation could help in encouraging better behaviour by children in cars. That would have an tremendous effect on road safety, because there is nothing more hazardous than a youngster crawling round a car. Apart from the danger to the unrestrained child, general behaviour is a factor in road safety.

My hon. Friend the Member for Keighley suggested that when children were restrained it made the driver slightly more careless. I think he also suggested that when they were unrestrained the driver would be more careful. I am sure that, like other hon. Members, my hon. Friend would be horrified if he were to drive alongside another car and see unrestrained children crawling around the car and leaning over the back of the driver. The slightest impact would cause massive damage to such children. That happens now, and the evidence of our own eyes refutes the rather intellectual points that were made by my hon. Friend.

The evidence of our eyes and our instincts show that the Bill is right and must be placed on the statute book. We hope that the forecast about life-saving and injury reduction is right. However, if the forecast is only one half or one quarter right the Bill is still needed because, essentially, we are talking about avoidable accidents. We know that every family faces hazards that can deprive it of children and that many handicaps arise. Many unavoidable things in life can cause tragedy to families but we are talking about avoidable tragedies and Parliament can contribute towards eliminating those.

The fact that my hon. Friend the Minister has spoken so strongly in favour of the Bill gives us great hope. I do not share the criticism of the hon. Member for Stretford (Mr. Lloyd) about the Bill being private and not Government legislation. The Minister knows that I am not uncritical of some aspects of the work of his Department, but in recent years no Minister has done more to improve road safety, and it is commendable that he has encouraged the Bill. That is vital if we are to have a good Committee stage and get the regulations right. I welcome the Minister's positive attitude.

I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Cheadle. His Bill is superb and my hon. Friend, who is in his early years in Parliament, presented it magnificently. The Bill will make a major contribution to road safety.

1.2 pm

Mr. James Cran (Beverley): I add my congratulations to those that have been expressed to my hon. Friend the Member for Cheadle (Mr. Day). I have seen him nurture the Bill from an idea to what it is today. His presentation and marshalling of the facts were admirable.

The Bill is long overdue because of the statistics about which the House has heard and which I shall not rehearse. My hon. Friend the Member for Keighley (Mr. Waller) gave us a forensic demonstration of what he considers the facts to be. I start from the premise of having checked the facts of the 1986 debate. The annual saving of about 200 deaths and about 7,000 serious injuries and a 25 per cent. reduction in the admission of car accident victims to hospital leads me to believe that the original experiment of putting seat belts in the front of cars was right.

My hon. Friend the Member for Keighley said that there was a 27 per cent. increase in deaths caused by other road users. I, too, have read the report by Dr. John Adams about which he spoke and the question that arises is what is cause and what is effect. The report does not make that absolutely clear. We must, however, consider this study and I am sure that my hon. Friend the Member for Cheadle will consider it if the Bill reaches Committee. I repeat that the findings are not conclusive.

I have taken my decisions from statistics and from experience. I had an experience with my daughter Alexandra, who is now six years old, which I will never forget. My hon. Friend the Member for Keighley reminded me of it. He said that many road accidents are caused by driver error and I would not dissent from that. However, I think that I can claim that I was not driving abnormally on the occasion that I am describing. I was driving on to the M6 in Birmingham when another driver approached me from the main carriageway. In response, I braked slightly, not violently. Unbeknown to me, my daughter had stood up. She was not too old for her baby restraint and as I braked very gently she was propelled between the two front seats. Fortunately she was not injured by hitting the dashboard or, even worse, by the gear stick. That was an experience that I would not care to repeat. I have profited and learned from it because that incident could have proved fatal.

I have now become far more careful, not just as a result of the statistics, but because of that incident. I take great care to ensure that my daughter is sitting correctly and that she is restrained. However, there was an uneasy period before she accepted the restraint. I am delighted to say that the position now is that if she is not restrained before the car begins to move, she shouts out to tell me that she is not restrained. She now understands, as I understand, and as my hon. Friend the Member for Cheadle understands, that restraining a child, as much as anyone else in a car, must be the correct course of action. I wonder whether I would have taken this action without having experienced my near-accident. Therefore whenever my car now moves I ensure, that my daughter is restrained in the back.

I am however, worried about others who may not have experienced the kind of shock that I had. Other people appear to be unintentionally lackadaisical, as I was before my unfortunate experience. Before that, I took the view that it could never happen to me or mine. I did not think my daughter could be propelled into the front of the car and perhaps be fatally injured.

Many hon. Members have referred to the 8,560 accidents that affect rear seat passengers. That figure is proof that accidents happen to other people. Moreover, I cringe, like many other hon. Members, when I travel along motorways and ordinary roads and see children standing between the seats. I have seen children leaning from the rear seat to the front seat. On one occasion I even saw a child moving from the rear seat to the front seat while the car in question was moving. The public seem to believe that accidents will not happen. I believe that the actions that I have described are accidents waiting to happen.

If the Bill does not make progress, those accidents waiting to happen will happen. They might affect my children or anyone's children. If people do not believe me, they should visit their local police station. I visited my local police station before I made up my mind about this Bill and used a crash simulator. It is a very crude instrument, but it simulates an accident occurring at 15 mph. I believe that my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State has also used a simulator.

I was not carrying a child — merely a bundle of papers. I had expected the experience to be a bit of a cakewalk, but, my goodness, when I reached the end of it, not only did I nearly catapult out of my seat—happily I was restrained—but my papers went in all directions. I wish that more people would go along to their local police stations to test the equipment and experience its stunning effects. I hope that the police, in response to the Bill, will go out into the community with that equipment, and with all the other means that they have to hand to explain to people about the effects of accidents at speed.

Hon. Members who cite the complications in the Bill are right to do so. In particular, I have been moderately troubled by the examples of three or four children sitting in the back of a car with only two restraints, and the school-run phenomenon. I like clean solutions to difficult problems. However, I have been convinced that there is no quick solution to this problem. It is surely not acceptable to suggest that, if all the children cannot be restrained, none should be. That is a nonsensical argument. If there are two restraints and three children, those two restraints should be used, because that will contribute towards preventing deaths or serious injuries that might otherwise occur.

Another point that has persuaded me to support the Bill was made by my hon. Friend the Member for Cheadle: that what is important is not only the Bill itself, but making parents think about their children's safety when they are in cars. I relate that to my horrific experience on the motorway outside Birmingham.

Speaking as I do from the Conservative Benches, my heart is with my hon. Friend the Member for Southend, East (Mr. Taylor). If a voluntary solution were possible, I would be the first to espouse it. But, alas, I do not think that it is possible. Consequently, I have been pulled, intellectually kicking and screaming, to support the Bill. I do not believe that publicity campaigns would have other than a temporary effect, or that we should be discussing temporary palliatives for such difficult problems.

My next question is, what is the best form of restraint? I hope that my hon. Friend the Member for Cheadle will consider that point carefully. I started from the premise that all that was needed was for small children to be harnessed in adult restraints. In my own experience, with my daughter, that is better than nothing. However, it is not the best solution, for the simple reason that—although such restraints are adaptable, and the angle at which they are fitted can be changed—they do not always fit a small child well. I hope that my hon. Friend will go beyond suggesting the use of adult restraints to consider the other restraints that can be fitted for small children.

I shall support the Bill enthusiastically, and vote for its Second Reading. Normally, as I have said, I live in hope that voluntary action will work, and that the publicity generated by a Bill such as this will provide the solution that we want. However, neither would succeed entirely. I wish that we could make the legislation retrospective, and achieve the complete solution that I should like to see. However, I accept that that is not a practical course of action.

This is a moderate Bill. It will protect children who cannot make their own judgments, and we ought to remind ourselves of that. More importantly, it will safeguard children against, perhaps me, or others who might become complacent after the end of a publicity campaign. We may come to feel that we do not really need to use the seat belts or may simply forget about them. Then, as sure as night follows day, there would be an accident or a near accident such as that I had on the motorway. I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Cheadle and enthusiastically support his Bill.

1.16 pm

Mr. David Amess (Basildon): I join hon. Members in congratulating my hon. Friend the Member for Cheadle (Mr. Day) on his success in the ballot. I also congratulate him on his choice of subject for legislation. I understand that he is a relatively new Member and that this idea is his own and has not necessarily come about through the inspiration of the excellent "That's Life" programme.

I should tell the House that I am a convert to the cause of seat belts. I was not a Member when the previous Bill was discussed and I had doubts about the benefits of the compulsory wearing of seat belts. However, I have completely changed my view.

I often get the impression that my wife does not entirely rate my ability as a driver. However, that does not stop her ensuring that I do most of the driving in our family. When we started our family she made sure that we immediately purchased what my hon. Friend the Minister described as safety seats. I thought that she was rather going over the top. However, from the excellent examples we saw on "That's Life" a few years ago, I now recognise how right she was. But then women are often so right on many matters.

I am often appalled by the way in which people transport their children in cars. When we put our two children in the restrainers for the first time I cannot pretend that they enjoyed the sensation of being restrained. As we all know, children like to have a free rein. As we drive along we see young children sitting on the laps of mothers or standing between the two front seats. It is appalling. An even worse practice is that of piling three, four, five or six children and a dog into the back of an estate car. If such a car were to be involved in a shunt, there would be great danger for all the people in the car.

We have already heard about the 77 children who were killed in 1986 and the 10,000 who were injured. Those statistics are extremely telling. The Royal Society for the Prevention of Accidents claims that nearly 500 lives are saved each year through the wearing of seat belts. It also claims that 7,000 serious injuries and 13,000 slight injuries are prevented. The society also claims that since the introduction of the compulsory wearing of seat belts in 1981, there has been a 15 per cent. reduction in car accidents and, significantly, a 25 per cent. drop in hospital bed occupancy.

There is a large amount of international evidence that is overwhelming in its support for measures such as this. Research in America has shown that restraints can reduce fatalities by 71 per cent. and serious injuries by 67 per cent. In Britain, the Transport and Road Research Laboratory estimates that the use of rear restraints could reduce deaths by up to 75 per cent.

International evidence shows that the use of rear restraints has increased dramatically following educational and promotional campaigns, in some cases by as much as 50 per cent.

That begs the question, what price safety? Are we to be faced with the possibility of restraints being compulsory in cars for children under 14 while little or no public education is undertaken to promote and instil in people the need for the use of such restraints? I hope that, hand in hand with the Bill, there will be a suitable publicity campaign to help to reinforce the principle in the minds of the general public. My hon. Friend the Minister earlier spoke about a particular leaflet, but I hope that we shall go much further in publicising the excellent measure of my hon. Friend the Member for Cheadle. Such a step will be important to ensure the proper working of the Bill. That need not necessarily be done by the Government. The multi-million pound motor industry could consider undertaking that task.

Monitoring is plainly a matter for the police. I am delighted that the Association of Chief Police Officers is satisfied that the monitoring of restraints would not be a problem. The measure would be self-enforcing, as was that for front seat belts. The usage rate of front seat belts rose from 30 per cent. before legislation to 90 per cent. following it. That shows that, contrary to many police officers' fears about lack of compliance with the law, the public generally respect and abide by a relatively unmonitorable law.

I have a number of hobby horses on road safety, and one is the ever-increasing practice of people using telephones in cars. When I have raised this matter on other occasions, I have been told by Ministers that existing legislation covers the subject. I am not satisfied that that is the case, and I hope that the excellent committee referred to by the hon. Member for Huddersfield (Mr. Sheerman) will examine the increasing use of telephones in cars.

My hon. Friend the Member for Cheadle has done the country a great service by seizing the initiative and introducing this legislation. I hope that it will go through all its stages in both Houses speedily and that it will quickly become law.

1.23 pm

Mr. Tim Devlin (Stockton, South): Some years ago, I was sent some instructions to draft pleadings in a case relating to a car accident. They have stuck in my mind ever since. I shall briefly relate them to the House.

A father was driving his two sons home from school. The older child, who was aged seven, was sitting in the front seat and the younger one, who was aged four, was sitting in the back. The older child and the father were wearing seat belts. The car was one-year old, and as it drove along the A64 in Yorkshire, which is a dual carriageway, another car came out of a side turning and, without stopping, proceeded on to the carriageway, almost catching the car in which they were travelling along the fast lane. The father, seeing that, was understandably shocked and pulled the wheel over to avoid just clipping the car that was coming out of the side turning. As a result of that sudden action by the driver, the car careered at 70 mph across the middle of the road, through a hedge and into a tree. As it hit the tree with such great force, it began to turn over and skid further along the hedge.

Someone in a car following that car had seen everything that had happened. As a result, we knew the identity of the driver of the car that came out of the side turning and could sue the driver. He was a 19-year-old who was drunk. He had bet his three companions that he could get across the dual carriageway without stopping, indicating or looking where he was going. He had won his bet and went on to have a further three pints in another public house.

The car containing the father and the two children ended up on its side. The driver, in his seat belt, immediately turned round to see what had happened to his sons. He released his seat belt and began to climb out of the car. I do not recall the make of the car, but I have a feeling that it was a Ford Sierra. As he climbed out, the car rocked and turned over on its side. To his horror he discovered that the four-year-old child sitting on the back seat had been ejected through one of the side windows of the car. The car had rolled over, half on to the child, and had crushed his head and the upper parts of his body. It was a truly horrific accident. I had the grave duty of meeting the parents and the little boy, who was then aged 11, and explaining the law relating to car accidents. It was a tragedy.

I experienced another case, this time concerning a man in Lincolnshire who was driving with a baby and its mother on the back seat. As they went round a sharp bend, they suddenly met a tractor in the middle of the road. The car came to a sudden halt, because it slewed straight into the front wheel of the tractor which stopped it dead. The mother hit the back of the driver's seat, the driver in his seat belt stayed exactly where he was, but the baby, aged one year, was ejected from the car through the front windscreen and was scattered in several pieces into the engine of the tractor.

Both of those cases convinced me wholeheartedly of the need urgently to bring forward legislation such as the Bill that my hon. Friend the Member for Cheadle (Mr. Day) has brought before the House today to ensure that such accidents never happen again.

It is a tragedy that in the first case, the Yorkshire case, the child in the front sear was totally unharmed while his brother was killed. The father was wearing a seat belt and although the car had hit a tree at 70 mph he was completely unharmed. He suffered a slipped disc or some minor injury, but to all intents and purposes he got out of the car and walked away from the accident while the child in the back seat was crushed to death. That was a tragedy.

If a 15 lb baby is thrown forward at a 30 mph frontal impact, the force is equivalent to 450 lbs—30 times its weight. We must remember, when discussing children in car accidents, that the biggest and most vulnerable part of a baby, the part that suffers most damage, is the head. Children's heads are proportionately larger in comparison to their bodies than those of adults. Adults' heads are considerably harder than those of children, and in this House we all learn to be very hard-headed. [Interruption.] Some hon. Members would say thick-headed. However, the fact remains that children's young bones are supple and are not joined. Children under five have a space at the top of the cranium that is not yet sealed up and their heads are extremely easily damaged.

Any of us who have been to ski resorts and have skied down quite dangerous precipices will often have seen children aged two or three ski past us at alarming rates. It is a marvellous experience. When I look at them whiz past me, I notice that they wear crash helmets and I do not. That is because a child's head is not only the most vulnerable part, but the most critical part of his body.

I remind the House that 38 per cent. of accidents result in ejection from a car. I do not have the figures relating to back seats, but I suspect that a far higher proportion of ejections are from back seats. If that is the case, we must examine some legislation that will deal with that problem.

The result of an accident to a child whose head is damaged can be wide-ranging, permanent and distressing. Children have been put in intensive care for years on end as a result of car accidents in which they suffered comparatively minor accidents to their heads. We have seen children who are unable to walk for the rest of their lives, not because their legs or backs have been damaged but because they have suffered injuries to their heads. We have quadriplegic children in our hospitals. Their disabilities have not been brought about by congenital defects or disease in early childhood but because of what has happened to them in car accidents. It is within the power of the House to make sure that children are properly restrained. For that purpose, I commend the Bill.

As my hon. Friend the Member for Southend, East (Mr. Taylor) said, there are cases in which there will be more damage to children through their being restrained. Such cases are far too remote for us to worry about. Two important things are brought about by the restraint of children in the back of cars. First, in many cases, it prevents ejection and, secondly, it curbs inappropriate behaviour. Many statistics have been quoted, and I do not wish to quote too many more.

Mr. Don Dixon (Jarrow): The hon. Gentleman was not here.

Mr. Devlin: With respect, I have been present for a substantial part of the debate. I had to leave the House briefly to deal with some constituents who are visiting today. The matter is of great interest to my constituents who are sitting in the Strangers' Gallery and are listening to what is said in the House.

In 1977, there was a United States study of 25,000 children involved in accidents. It demonstrated a rank order of safety of children in cars. It showed that the safest children are seat-belted in the rear of cars, the next safest children are seat-belted in the front, more unsafe children are unbelted in the rear of cars, and the least safe children are unbelted in the front of a car. It has already been mentioned that it is important to legislate to prevent train and aircraft accidents happening again. I look forward to the end of the King's Cross fire inquiry, which may bring useful legislation before the House so that we may be able to prevent tragedies of that kind. Each year, more children are killed in cars or on the road than are killed in aircraft, ship or train accidents. For that reason, the legislation is important.

[Mr. Devlin]

I listened to my hon. Friend the Minister tell the House that he did not want to be a walking advertisement because he mentioned the firm of Kwik-Fit-Euro. I commend to him the role of walking advertisement on every occasion if more manufacturers and shop owners are prepared to present a similar scheme to the public. Giving parents the opportunity to buy child restraint chairs and straps from a reputable manufacturer and to have that cost fully reimbursed when the child has outgrown their use is highly commendable. If another 50 companies were to come forward with similar schemes, I would have no hesitation in standing up in the House to act as the most blatant walking advertisement in mentioning every single one of their names and in commending them individually. Here and now, I should like to thank the chairman of Kwik-Fit-Euro for his recent and kind letter to me, in which he pointed out the value of the scheme. Lest I advertise his name too much, it is Mr. Tom Farmer who is the chairman and chief executive. I commend his action and his company.

Turning to other countries, we should have a brief look at the position in the United States. There is legislation in five states to restrain children in cars who are under five years. In 15 states there is legislation relating to children of the age of four years and below. In 25 states there is legislation restricting the carriage of children under three years. There is legislation relating to children under two years in one state, and in four states there is legislation relating to children or babies, under the age of one. Yet in this country, with its many counties and districts, we have no law relating to the carriage of children in cars.

I advise my hon. Friend the Member for Cheadle that I would go further than he has done. The wearing of seat belts should be compulsory in any part of a car. I have had my bellyful of drafting pleadings in respect of cases where people have been thrown out of cars and crushed by large pieces of machinery grinding together in the middle of the night. I have had my bellyful of looking at photographs of people, parts of whose limbs and bodies have been scattered all over the engine and the machinery of the vehicles into which they have crashed, or who have been pushed across trees or thrown into ditches. I am sick to my stomach at looking at pictures of children who have been involved in accidents—that is the most chronic area. At Question Time we often hear shouts from odd corners of the House of, "Babies are dying." When my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister is sitting where my hon. Friend the Minister for Roads and Traffic is sitting now, some Opposition Member will shout out, "Babies are dying," and a great roar goes up in the House that something must be done. I agree that something must be done. Today we are dealing with one reason why babies die. Indeed, it is greater cause of their deaths than any other, but where are our hon. Friends? They are not here. Next time we hear those hon. Members shout, "Babies are dying," we should say, "Where were you on the day we brought legislation before the House to stop some of those babies dying?"

Again, I would go further than my hon. Friend. We should consider the cost to the National Health Service of dealing with all those horribly distorted children and the costs of the casualty departments in bringing out staff in the middle of the night; of calling in surgeons to piece together those children; of bringing people together in emergency teams to bring blood from one end of the country to another; of assembling emergency teams to bring parts of bodies from one end of the country to another; and of assembling emergency teams of specialist doctors, paediatricians and other carers who come together suddenly and without warning. That is an enormous cost. However, there is also the enormous cost of treating a quadriplegic child for 20 years. A child has been in intensive care in my local hospital at north Tees for six years. The cost to the state of having that child in intensive care is about £1,500 per week. That has been going on for six years. That child was not brought in because she was injured in a car accident. She was born like that, but other children in other parts of the country, particularly in Birmingham, have been brought in as quadriplegic patients as a result of road traffic accidents.

I wish to raise with my hon. Friend the Minister the question of children who indulge in inappropriate behaviour in the back of cars. Too often, I have been driving in London and seen children playing and screaming and shouting on the back seats of cars, and disturbing the driver. I do not have any statistics to show how many accidents result from such behaviour, but my common sense tells me—and the House's common sense should tell it—that this must be a major contributory factor to accidents on our roads. If we restrain that, we shall do the House and the country a great service.

Finally, I do not believe that it is the object of the Bill to penalise the caring parent. Some caring parents will already be fitting good child restraint straps and seats in the backs of cars which are not manufactured with seat belt anchorage points. If they do not use those seat belts, which they have fitted on the back seats, I should not wish to penalise them. We should try to encourage good practice so that parents who care enough about their children will install those straps and seats. I hope that the Bill will not penalise those people.

I have considered those issues in the Bill which my hon. Friend the Member for Cheadle leaves free from regulations. These matters can be considered in Committee. It is a good and widely drawn Bill with a fundamentally sound principle which will cut out many thousands of deaths on our roads of those most vulnerable in our society. I therefore commend it to the House.

Mr. Day: I shall be brief. I thank everyone who has contributed. I shall not respond individually to each hon. Member because the tone of the debate has been very much in favour of the Bill. I am grateful to the House and to all hon. Members who have spoken so eloquently in favour of the Bill.

The hon. Member for Southend, East (Mr. Taylor) left me a note because he has had to leave the debate. He did not wish to be rude, but he had a speaking engagement in Leicestershire, in the constituency of my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer. I said that I would make that clear, as he did not wish to insult either me or the House.

I wish to clarify one important point. Several hon. Members, particularly the hon. Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell) asked why I have not extended the provisions of the Bill to all vehicles. I subscribe to that as a principle, but there are practical reasons why I do not believe that it is possible to do that. Hon. Members, particularly the hon. Member for Huddersfield (Mr. Sheerman), will probably be aware that all cars manufactured since 1 October 1986 have been subject to the mandatory fitting of rear seat belts or child restraints. Obviously, those vehicles are covered by the Bill because rear restraints have been fitted. Cars manufactured since April 1982 have had anchorage points fitted. Vehicles in which seat belts or child restaints have been fitted voluntarily will be covered by the Bill, but there are many cars on the road, dating from before April 1982, in which it is physically impossible to fit restraints. From a practical point of view, therefore, it is not possible to fit them in every vehicle on the road. The passage of time will deal with that aspect.

I thank the Minister for his kind comments and his support in the debate. I take on board his comments about the need to consider the regulations closely and for appropriate consultations to take place. My Bill is drafted as it is to empower the Minister to do that and to fill the gap that currently exists in the legislation.

I have every sympathy with the view expressed by the hon. Member for Antrim, South (Mr. Forsythe) and I recognise that the people of Northern Ireland feel the same as the rest of the United Kingdom. I will do all that I can to try to ensure that the hon. Gentleman's comments are taken into account as long as I do not believe that that would, at any stage, jeopardise the progress of my Bill.

Finally, I should like to refer to a letter that I believe will be of interest to the House. It was addressed to the Minister, but I also received a copy. It is from Lynn James, who is the mother of the child in question. Mrs. James says:

"I have heard on the radio and seen on television that you are having a campaign on the use of child restraints in cars. I thought you may be interested in a rhyme that my son Henry came out with after watching a film showing dummies going through a windscreen. He was only four then, he is now five. This is the rhyme,

'Humpty Dumpty sat in a car,
Humpty Dumpty didn't go far,
Over the seat and in the air,
Over the road and everywhere.'"

Such a rhyme from a child of five is amazingly perceptive. Apparently that child now calls children who bounce around in the backs of cars Humpty Dumpties. That rhyme would be worth remembering by parents who are trying to restrain their children in the backs of cars. It is a light, but serious note on which to end this debate.

I thank hon. Members for the way in which they have discussed and conducted themselves in this debate. I am extremely grateful to the House for listening to me so carefully, and I trust that we will now give approval to the measure.

Question put and agreed to.

Bill accordingly read a Second time.

Bill committed to a Standing Committee pursuant to Standing Order No. 16 (Commital of Bills).

Environment and Safety Information Bill

Order for Second Reading read.

1.47 pm

Mr. Chris Smith (Islington, South and Finsbury): I beg to move, That the Bill now be read a Second time.

In the extremely brief time that is left to debate the Bill I hope that the House will agree that it is a sensible, helpful measure and that it deserves a Second Reading.

The Bill is based on two simple principles. First, the importance of freedom of information opening up the processes of government and administration and, secondly, the need to take any steps that can improve public safety provision. The Bill requires all monitoring agencies responsible for public or environmental safety to keep a register of the notices that they issue, available at reasonable hours for public inspection, with copies available at modest cost. The agencies covered include the factory inspectorate, the agricultural inspectorate, the nuclear installations inspectorate, the railways inspectorate, the industrial air pollution inspectorate, fire authorities, and local authority environmental health officers.

The notices covered would be those issued under the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974, the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985, which covers pesticides, and the Fire Safety and Safety of Places of Sport Act 1987. Among the events that may be covered by the provisions of the Bill include the spreading of dangerous asbestos dust, chemical spillages in factories, fire risk in places of public resort and the dangers posed by the particular usage of pesticides.

There are a number of provisions in the Bill for firms or organisations affected by a notice to place their account and explanation alongside the notice in the register. There is also a provision for any notice of appeal to be included in the register. There are provisions for a record of compliance to be placed in the register at the appropriate stage. In respect of any trade secret information which might be included in the original notice, there is provision, on application by the firm or organisation affected, for possible exclusion.

In addition, I have made a deliberate effort, in drawing up the Bill, to keep costs of implementation to an absolute minimum in an endeavour to remove any resource implications. The Bill has the strong support of the Institution of Environmental Health Officers, the Consumers Association and the Freedom of Information Campaign. I pay tribute to the work of Maurice Frankel, the director of the campaign, for the assistance he has given in drawing up the Bill. The Health and Safety Executive has formally informed the Employment Select Committee in open evidence session on 20 January that it has no objection to my Bill.

Why is the Bill needed? First, because there is always an advantage to be gained from greater openness in the routine administration of public affairs. Greater public awareness will increase, and it will improve the standing of the monitoring agencies responsible for public safety. Secondly, many of the notices issued under the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act are already made available to trade union representatives to the work force at the place affected. Why should the public not know, too, when there is a wider hazard to them?

[Mr. Chris Smith]

Thirdly, the industrial air pollution inspectorate already lists notices that it has served in its annual report, but that list, by its very nature, is retrospective and out of date, and no explanations or details are given.

Fourthly, it is important that persistent offenders under safety regulations are brought to public attention. The "unfair picture of a firm's record" argument, which has been made in the past about publication of details of notices, is partly covered by the provision placed in the Bill for the firm's own account to be put in the register. It would frequently lead to an entirely correct impression being given to the public about the performance and safety record of the firm if information is publicly available about breaches of safety and environmental provisions.

Fifthly, the prospect of publication will assist inspectors in ensuring compliance with legislation. A large amount of the work of inspectors is done by a process of informal warnings, discussions and letters. When those informal procedures are ignored, formal notices are served. The threat of publication will be an added weapon in the hands of inspectors, ensuring speedy compliance.

Let me give an example which relates to an event that is still very much on the minds of hon. Members—the tragic fire at King's Cross last November. We know from unpublished documents which have never officially come into the public domain that there was an inspection of King's Cross along with Paddington, Marylebone and Baker Street tube stations, on 24 March last year, which was carried out by the railways inspectorate. It found a series of problems relating to the possibility of fire risk. No prohibition notice was issued until 10 December 1987, after the King's Cross fire occurred. That notice had to be issued because, dating back from March last year, items of safety work which had been required at the original inspection had not been carried out.

Several questions about the lapse of time between those two events must be asked, but the key point is that if a notice became public knowledge when it was issued, it would be much easier for inspectors to secure speedy compliance with requirements that they have put on organisations such as London Underground. I say that with some feeling because four of my constituents died in the fire. Any step, however small or tentative, which would help to prevent such tragedies should be welcomed

What might the objections to my Bill be? There might be an argument about resource implications. I am anxious to make the process of publication in register form as simple and cheap as possible. I hope that we can discuss that in Committee if the Government are unhappy with my proposals.

The second argument—which has been raised—is that publication might encourage more appeals. That is partly taken care of by the provision for compensating statements by the affected firm. It is important to remember, however, that the appeals procedure is itself public, so appealing to a tribunal to avoid unfair and unfavourable publicity is not necessarily effective.

I believe that, under my Bill, fewer notices would be served and that the informal pre-notice procedure would be strengthened. That would be a very good thing.

Thirdly, the Department of the Environment has some vague proposals afoot for a package of information measures relating to pollution. They are to be brought in at some stage in the future. I sincerely hope that nobody will advance the classic "Sir Humphrey" argument that, because further proposals might be made at some stage in the future, we should not take this small step now. I am reminded of the famous doctrine advanced by Cornford in "Microcosmographica Academica" where he says that the principle of the wedge is that we should not do something good now for fear of having to do something better in the future.

The Bill takes a small but useful step forward. I should like to give just one example drawn from the constituency of my hon. Friend the Member for Barnsley, West and Penistone (Mr. McKay), who has taken an interest in the matter. It relates to a firm called the Stalite Battery Manufacturing Company Ltd. Two years ago, it was, as it had been for a decade, in Barnsley. It had 50 employees and made heavy-duty and car batteries. Nobody noticed that anything was amiss until one of it workers was admitted to the Barnsley general infirmary in April 1985 with acute lead poisoning.

Acute lead poisoning is extremely rare, so the worker was the centre of considerable medical interest. The local council employment adviser was informed, and he began to ask questions. It transpired that the local factory inspectors had issued improvement and even prohibition notices on the firm for years, but the managing director, a certain Albert Smith, had taken no notice of any of them.

The battery site was of interest to the workers and to local residents because it was near a housing estate. Tests showed that the level of lead pollution in the air and in the effluent from the factory was well above any safety limit.

The key point is that it was only once the information came into the public domain after the case of acute lead poisoning, which is still affecting the individual, that action was taken and real, effective, pressure was brought on the firm to mend its ways. In the end the firm has moved its site of operations and there is now considerable concern in its new location a few miles from Barnsley about its present activities.

The message should be clear. Where the public get to know about occurrences of that type effective pressure can be brought to bear on employers and public organisations that are ultimately responsible for the public safety implications of what they do. My Bill will help in such circumstances. It will not miraculously guarantee improvements in public safety, but it will take us along the right road. In the aftermath of King's Cross I hope that the House will agree.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Employment (Mr. Patrick Nicholls): First, I compliment the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith) on the way in which he opened this debate. He set out the issues with which the House must deal with both clarity and eloquence, and I am sure that the House must be grateful to him for that.

I am personally grateful to the hon. Gentleman for coming to see me with his advisers early on to tell me what he had in mind. It is probably common ground between us that if I was unable immediately to go as far as he would have liked, nevertheless we could help each other explore at an early stage some of the issues with which we would be coping. Obviously, today is the culmination of that process. The hon. Gentleman took the trouble to come and see me and explain, again with great clarity, what he had in mind and he will appreciate that today to some extent we are both singing the same song.

The Government's response is to welcome any proposal which is intended to improve health and safety. Naturally, we must consider the costs and ensure that they are compensated by the benefits which accrue directly or indirectly. Indeed, the hon. Gentleman made that point. Our starting point on any safety suggestion is to be favourably disposed. Ultimately it does not simply come down to cost alone.

We recognise and, indeed, understand the genuine wish of the public to know what is safe and unsafe, and what the enforcement agencies are doing about dangers which may affect them. That is the public's right, both as taxpayers and the people most directly affected. The House must ask itself whether this particular Bill takes us forward in achieving those two objectives of improved safety and of making useful information available.

It may be helpful if I address some of the statements made in the public debates surrounding the Bill. We both know that we cannot be responsible for the comments on a Bill that is being introduced to the House. There have been several contributions on television and in the press which to some extent have exaggerated what the Bill is setting out to do.

The Bill would require a register of formal notices issued under statute. It does not require that all letters from enforcement bodies be made public. I do not criticise the hon. Gentleman for that, but it is an important distinction which certainly has not escaped public comment. Thus, for example, the advice given to Bradford football club before the fire would not have been disclosed under the terms of the Bill.

The hon. Gentleman mentioned King's Cross and I am sure that he will appreciate my reticence in saying much about it. However, it is right for me to acknowledge that the House knows how deeply he feels about it, bearing in mind that some of his constituents were killed. In asking the hon. Gentleman to respect my reticence, I understand from my knowledge, and it flows from what he said, that notices were not issued in that case, so would not have been revealed under the terms of the Bill. But I agree with the hon. Gentleman that the background to the debate encompasses the incident at King's Cross.

The Bill does not state that internal memoranda and similar letters must be registered; therefore, internal company memoranda would not be made public. For instance, that would mean that comments made by ships' captains about the doors on cross-channel ferries would not have been disclosed before Zeebrugge. I mention those points because it is important that the Bill should be seen for what the hon. Gentleman intends it to be, and that it should not be extended.

Some of the comments made on the Bill have been misleading. I do not advocate such proposals, because they would restrict the mass of advice and discussion on health and safety issues, much of which is heeded without it going any further. If every letter or note on safety had to be disclosed, far fewer would be written. The result would be that much of the good that is achieved would no longer be achieved.

Sir Anthony Grant (Cambridgeshire, South-West): I do not oppose the principle of the Bill, whose broad thrust is fairly sensible, but the Minister may be able to help me on one aspect. I have in my constituency several highly sophisticated agrochemical works. They are operated under conditions of great safety, and are scrutinised keenly by the Health and Safety Executive. Indeed, the companies are extremely cautious, and small explosions cause tremendous excitement. Perhaps I should have asked this question of the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith). If a notice was served on one of those firms for a minor matter, which had nothing to do with general safety or the risk of blowing up the entire community, and the full background was not published, would there not be a risk of much local hysteria and the circulation of misleading information?

Mr. Nicholls: My hon. Friend makes a fair point. There could be such a risk, and the impression could be given that that company's safety record was worse than it was. There must also be the possibility that instead of saying, "We will comply with the notice" — despite what the hon. Gentleman said, fairly, about notoriety cutting both ways—the company might decide to defend its position. I suspect that, in practice, in many cases health and safety inspectors take a fairly rigorous view of the requirements, knowing that they will be complied with quickly. Perhaps I need say no more about that. The points made by my hon. Friend could be argued both ways, and I suspect that the weight of the argument lies more with him than with the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury.

In considering those issues, I have had special regard to the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974, which is included in the schedule. I do so because the Health and Safety Commission is responsible to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and because the executive's inspectors issued about 9,500 notices in the year April 1986 to March 1987.

It may be helpful for me to say something about the commission and the executive which I hope will put the Bill in context. The proposals are not the first foray into what might be called uncharted territory. Health and safety is not the domain of dark secrets. On the contrary, the Health and Safety Commission is a tripartite body which is rare in having a stated policy of openness and which is exhaustive in its efforts to consult widely on all its activities and proposals. When a notice is issued at a workplace, the employees who work there are informed by inspectors and a copy is made available to them.

Regulations developed by the commission and enforced by its inspectors concerning major hazards such as chemical works require local neighbourhoods to be informed of possible dangers and of what would happen in an emergency. Health and safety inspectors are trained to be helpful to the public, working through advice and trying to work through consensus where they can achieve it.

None the less, the commission was not content. In 1985, it issued a discussion document seeking public comment on access to health and safety information. On the basis of the many responses that it received from people who are interested in this area, the commission issued a policy statement in 1986 setting out its aims and how they should be implemented. I do not intend to quote from that at any great length, but the central theme is worth addressing.

The commission's main concern is that the public should be safeguarded from the health and safety consequences of industrial activity and should be in a position to understand the nature and extent of important industrial hazards. It says that where the public's immediate safety or health could be at risk, they should be in possession of information that will enable them to understand their position and to know what action to take in the event of some emergency. All hon. Members will thoroughly support that standpoint.

One specific change resulting from that exercise is relevant to the Bill. It is to make available at Health and Safety Executive offices a series of registers listing, for example, all premises that have been notified to the executive and all licences, certificates and orders. Of specific relevance to the debate is that the executive established a register of all successful prosecutions under the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974.

I return to my question whether the Bill will achieve its objectives. Whatever else one may say, a list of convictions, done and dusted, that put the matter beyond doubt because it had been dealt with by a court, will be of great interest to those who take an interest in these matters. Those registers including the register of convictions, attract very little public interest.

In its discussion document the commission considered whether to include improvement and prohibition notices on the register and sought views upon that. It decided not to do so on the grounds that many more notices are issued than prosecutions mounted, so that administration would be a real burden. It is worth stressing that it is not a question of saying that because it would produce administrative burdens it should not be done. It is more a question of saying that if, in an imperfect world, resources are limited, we must concentrate on making the best use of them.

Whether or not a company is served with a notice is not necessarily a reflection of its overall health and safety standards. Therefore, a misleading picture might be given. I concede to the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury that that argument applies both ways. The way in which my hon. Friend the Member for Cambridgeshire, South-West (Sir A. Grant) advanced the point shows that it is a matter with which we must come to grips.

When looking at these issues, I found that the overwhelming majority of improvement notices are complied with. That is an extremely surprising statistic. Only a tiny minority are challenged at an industrial tribunal or are subsequently the subject of prosecutions in the magistrates' court. It is a matter for concern if those who receive the notices say, "If I am to be pilloried, I might as well be hung for a sheep as a lamb". Far better that he should say, "The Health and Safety Executive inspector was a bit over-rigorous, but I have built up a good working relationship with him and, therefore, I shall comply." If a person feels that the mere service of a notice will put him in the dock, there must be a substantial risk that notices will be defended.

I understand that the average time taken to prepare an improvement notice is about half an hour and that sometimes it is done on the spot. However, to prepare a case for an industrial tribunal will take up a great deal of an inspector's time during which he could have been out issuing improvement notices, the vast majority of which would have been complied with. It is a question of how one achieves what one sets out to do.

If the Bill goes to Committee we shall have to study it closely to see whether these and other handicaps can be minimised. For example, the arrangements for recording and dealing with appeals require consideration, and the present proposal that a record of compliance be entered immediately in the register would be administratively difficult. Despite its reservations, the Health and Safety Commission has said in a letter to me, and through its chairman to the Select Committee on Employment, that it has no objection in principle to the Bill's proposals. We shall have to return time and again to that theme. There are so many things that disunite us in the House that it is important to identify the ends on which we agree, even though we differ on the means.

Mr. Sydney Chapman (Chipping Barnet): I have been listening with great interest to my hon. Friend. As a sponsor of the Bill may I ask, in view of what he has said about the commission's recommendation, whether he would advise the House that the Bill should go into Committee so that these matters may be explored, especially the pre-notice provisions, to which I attach great importance? It would be a great help if my hon. Friend can give us that assurance. That would relieve the anxieties of my hon. Friend the Member for Cambridgeshire, South-West (Sir A. Grant).

Mr. Nicholls: I should not try to assess whether all the concerns expressed by my hon. Friend the Member for Cambridgeshire, South-West will be addressed in Committee. The line that I have taken and the theme that I will develop is that we welcome what the Bill sets out to achieve. However, we must ask ourselves whether this approach can be developed to achieve that end. If the Bill reaches Committee, we shall have to explore that. For all the reasons that I have set out and which I covered to some extent in the exchange with my hon. Friend the Member for Cambridgeshire, South-West, we have our doubts whether the Bill will achieve that end. However, the aim of the Bill is wholly laudable. There will be other occasions when I shall claim that hon. Members' concerns are not entirely laudable. They will probably disagree with me, but of course they will always be wrong and we will always be right. However, this case is different.

Mr. Chris Smith: I fear that the Minister is coming dangerously close to saying that he approves of the intention, but, unfortunately, the Bill will not take us very far. Will he confirm that he wrote to his right hon. Friend the Lord President of the Council about my Bill stating:

"Even if it becomes law, it will do little damage and perhaps some good."

Mr. Nicholls: I am sure that I have many vices and some virtues, but the idea that I can recall every statement or letter that I write to colleagues or the idea that I would discuss correspondence with my right hon. Friend the Lord President of the Council is going too far. However, I congratulate the hon. Gentleman on his optimism.

The Government's most important reservation about the measure does not concern health and safety. It concerns sections 7(1) and 9(1) of the Fire Safety and Safety of Places of Sport Act 1987 which are listed in the schedule to the Bill. The House assented to the 1987 Act on the basis of clear affirmations by Ministers that notices would be restricted to enforcing authorities and that any extension of the right of disclosure would be undesirable, as likely to compromise the working relationship between fire authorities and occupiers. The Government must therefore hold a reserve on that element in the proposals and will look to changes in Committee.

None the less, the problems to which I have referred are comparative details when set against the principles at stake. The public are concerned about health and safety and how it affects them. They want to know, and feel, that their knowledge may help lead to improvements. Perhaps that is an over-optimistic view. As I have said, the Government have some doubts that the Bill will achieve its objectives or provide useful information. However, we acknowledge that the Bill is laudable in its concept and we do not oppose its principles or aims. Therefore, although we shall have to exercise considerable care in Committee, we do not oppose the Bill today.

2.18 pm

Mr. Barry Sheerman (Huddersfield): If I were to use the parlance of the second-hand car trade, I would describe this Bill as "a nice little runner". It is in the best traditions of a private Member's Bill. It is laudable and covers a very important area of concern. It has been presented by my colleague the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith), who is known for his thoroughness, care and concern about these issues. I congratulate him on introducing the Bill.

This is not the day of the week for Opposition Members to speak at length and I will be brief. I do not want to make a very political speech. We are very concerned about the broad trends in health and safety in British industry and the level of the inspectorate. We are also worried about the increasing number of incidents and accidents that are becoming, to quote Paul Simon, "very disturbing". There are more accidents, less supervision and fewer return visits. There is a whole area of concern that we need not debate today.

This little Bill takes a step towards giving the public more information. I can recount a constituency example. My constituency contains one of the largest chemical works in the country, ICI's organic dyestuffs works at Dalton, which also works in agrochemicals. European legislation made the substances produced there notifiable. The process that that necessitated, such as consultation with the community, only added to the plus side of relationships between the company and those living in the surrounding environment. It was a very positive step. People knew much more about what went on in the plant, and about its products. That process did not cause hysteria; it made for a greater effort on the company's side, and a positive perception on the part of the residents.

I believe that this Bill will take us in the same direction. Let us get rid of some of the secrecy. People should know about what is going on in establishments close to where they live. Life is becoming more sophisticated in industry, and the industrial and chemical processes involved are becoming more complex.

Opposition Members believe that there is nothing wrong with the Bill slipping quietly into Committee for serious consideration. It could be improved and modified, but most normal, reasonable people would not want it to founder at such an early stage. We wish it godspeed through Committee.

2.21 pm

Mr. David Gilroy Bevan (Birmingham, Yardley): First, I pay tribute to the way in which the Bill was presented by the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith). If we are to adopt car parlance to evaluate it, I shall differ from the hon. Member for Huddersfield (Mr. Sheerman): it may be a starter, but it is probably unlikely to pass its MOT fitness test. I say that because of an experience which age alone ensured that I had—before coming to the House in 1979 — on local authority statutory bodies—consultancy committees, and the like —in and around Birmingham. I served on bodies that were essential in evaluating health and safety necessities, and I took a special interest in the administration needed to ensure that the regulations were complied with.

In that context, I bear in mind the tragedies referred to by the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury, including the horrendous fire at King's Cross. Councillor Geoffrey Marks, who was a colleague of mine on the city of Birmingham council in 1959, died in that holocaust. It would do less than justice to his memory if I did not support ideals which might help to alleviate problems, but I do not believe that these proposals would do so.

Experience has shown us that the extension of administration and bureaucracy, and the necessity of increasing staff numbers, do not necessarily bring about the desired direct results of increased safety or protection. In such instances as the disaster at Ronan Point, there would have been no opportunity to know of the existence of the latent faults beforehand, and therefore no entries on any registers would have helped. There are other circumstances, in which the information is already known and the facts are listed, and legislation exists to deal with them. We must also ask whether, if a register is produced, it will be of any use. Are the penalties sufficiently draconian to ensure that the register would be complied with—or would it be just another unnecessary overlay?

We have all the continued minutes of the planning authorities, the fire committees, the transport committees, and health committees and other bodies that deal with the existing situation. It is necessary to show as continued minutes those items that have not been dealt with by the inspectors. The hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury referred to King's Cross. He knew about the work that needed to be done. He was aware of it, because he spoke about it. If a register had existed, it would not have increased the awareness of the fact that the work needed to be done.

If one looks at the workings of a decent authority or statutory body, one can see that the inspector tables his requirements so that they are shown in the minutes. Those requirements should be on the agendas of everyone who needs to consider them and the appropriate legislation should be used in the event of a failure to observe them. These eyes of mine have, over the years, grown tired and my glasses have to be worn in pursuance of the studying of such items on agandas and minutes well into the midnight hours. Therefore, I plead that I have an interest as well.

Although the intention of the Bill might be good, I am sure that its aims would not be achieved. There is a lack of teeth and a lack of back-up, which would ensure that the intention would not be served. The hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury said that he intended to see that the cost of the Bill would be small. We have a duty to see that the costs are not over-burdensome in the provision of local legislation. We have a duty to ensure that the bureaucracy of government is reduced. We have a duty to see that we do not duplicate any register or record that already exists.

Let us look at the efficacy of existing registers, some of which even I have helped to bring into existence during my membership of this House. One of those registers dealt with land in the ownership of statutory bodies. When we introduced that register we believed that there would be an ability to reduce dramatically the amount of land in public ownership because that land had been brought to the attention of the public and because the public had a right to examine the register. However, no such thing happened. There was a slight reduction but no suggestion that the total amount owned by statutory authorities would have been any different if the register had not existed. Indeed, that register had no teeth. We introduced a mechanism that did not have the desired effect; it merely increased bureaucracy.

Mr. Paul Boateng (Brent, South): The hon. Gentleman should have the courage of his convictions. Put it to the vote.

Mr. Bevan: I have the courage of my convictions. The Bill could not have the desired effect.

Mr. Terry Dicks (Hayes and Harlington): Does my hon. Friend agree that those late-night Charlies who have just walked into the Chamber should keep quiet and let him get on with his speech?

It being half-past Two o'clock, the debate stood adjourned.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Sir Paul Dean): Debate to be resumed, what day?

Mr. Chris Smith: As there has been a deliberate attempt to talk out my Bill, I nominate Friday 15 April.

Debate to be resumed upon Friday 15 April.

Private Members' Bills

UNFAIR REPORTING AND RIGHT OF REPLY BILL

Order for Second Reading read.

Hon. Members: Object.

Second Reading deferred till Friday 22 February.

SCOTLAND BILL

Order for Second Reading read.—[Queen's consent, on behalf of the Crown, signified.]

Hon. Members: Object.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Sir Paul Dean): Second Reading what day? No day named.

ELIMINATION OF POVERTY IN OLD AGE ETC. BILL

Order for Second Reading read.

Mr. Jeremy Corbyn (Islington, North): I beg to move, That the Bill be now read a Second time.

Hon. Members: Object.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Second reading what day?

Mr. Corbyn: I have moved, That the Bill be now read a Second time. I was quite distinct——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. An objection, whenever it is made, stands. Objection has been taken; I am inviting the hon. Gentleman to nominate a day for Second Reading.

Mr. Corbyn: I am prepared to name a day for Second Reading, but my question to you, Mr. Deputy Speaker——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. Gentleman, if he so wishes, must name a day for Second Reading.

Mr. Corbyn: I will name a day—next Friday.

Second reading deferred till Friday next.

Mr. Corbyn: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I wish to ask you two questions. First, I rose to move Second Reading of the Bill immediately after the Clerk read out the name of the Bill. My hon. Friends can attest to that fact. I did so before any person made any objection to the Bill from a sedentary position. At that point, we were into a Second Reading debate on the Bill—no objection had been made. Is it in order for an unnamed Member to mumble, at a later stage, "Object," to prevent this important matter, which will improve the living standards of 9 million pensioners, being debated in the House? Many people outside the House find it unbelievable and a disgrace that it is not prepared to spend time debating the plight of pensioners in our society.

Mr. Dennis Skinner (Bolsover): Further to that point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it on the same point of order?

Mr. Skinner: Yes. These Fridays — this has been happening on a scale that I have not known since I have been here over the past 17 years—the Government send in some of their Whips to object to Bills that will increase the happiness and standard of life of 9 million pensioners in this country. They spent 20 minutes the other day in this House of Commons — the so-called mother of Parliaments — discussing the Moonies and just about every other subject under the sun. But when it comes to fighting on behalf of pensioners and passing Bills that will make their lives a lot easier, those whippersnappers from the Tory Benches object. They have not got the guts to stand up and be named. It is time that we had some rules.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The procedure that is being followed is well established in the House. It might be convenient if I were to remind the House that the Select Committee on Procedure reported on the matter as recently as 5 May 1987, in its second report. The Committee set out the arguments for and against identifying hon. Members who object to Bills being read a Second time without debate. It unanimously recommended no change in the present procedure. Such a change certainly could not be introduced without a formal decision of the House.

Mr. Paul Boateng (Brent, South) rose——

Mr. Harry Cohen (Leyton) rose——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. Member for Islington, North would be well advised to read in Hansard what I have just said. It will be clear to him when he reads it that no possible additional point of order can arise.

Mr. Corbyn: Further to that point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I have listened carefully to your statement that the Committee's report recommends no change to the existing procedure. I have discussed that procedure with many people who regularly come to the House to listen to debates. They can never believe that Members of Parliament are allowed to block legislation without identifying themselves. I put it to you formally, Mr. Deputy Speaker: will you please report the objection of a number of hon. Members, all of whom are prepared to identify themselves, to that procedure, and refer it back to the Committee so that it can be examined once again? We can then end the scandal of unnamed Tory Members blocking Bills concerning pensioners.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is a matter for the hon. Member. It is clear from what I have just told the House that the Select Committee considered this matter fairly recently and that it came to a unanimous recommendation that the procedure should not be altered. It is perfectly open to the hon. Member to persuade the Select Committee on Procedure otherwise, but that is his job, and not mine.

Mr. Barry Sheerman (Huddersfield): Further to that point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. Did not the report from which you have just quoted make a distinction between the right of an individual hon. Member to shout objection without being identified and a Government Whip doing that but still keeping his anonymity?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Select Committee went into that matter fully. I have read the report, and I strongly recommend those hon. Members who have not done so to read the extremely recent report of that Select Committee.

Mr. Cohen: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It is clear that no further points of order can arise on this matter. Does the hon. Member have a point of order on another matter?

Mr. Cohen: You, Mr. Deputy Speaker, were quite right to read out that passage about the right of any hon. Member to object under the existing rules, but, as far as I can see, these are not normal circumstances. My hon. Friend the Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn) moved the Second Reading and the Government Whip who wished to object was, in my view, rather slow-witted and did not object until my hon. Friend the Member for Brent, South (Mr. Boateng) and other hon. Members had shouted, "Agreed." The House had agreed to that——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. An objection applies at any stage after 2.30 pm. If the hon. Member reads the Select Committee report, he will find that the report and recommendations deal with this fully.

Mr. Boateng: On a different point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I seek information. Is it in order for any hon. Member wearing a red nose to raise any point of order? If it is, may I raise a point of order in favour of the Second Reading of the Elimination of Poverty in Old Age Etc. Bill?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We must proceed.

UNBORN CHILDREN (PROTECTION) BILL

Order for Second Reading read

Hon. Members: Object.

Second Reading deferred till Friday 4 March.

SLAUGHTER OF DEER BILL

Order read for resuming adjourned debate on Second Reading [11 December].

Hon. Members: Object.

Debate further adjourned till Friday next.

Mr. Corbyn: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I should like my name to be recorded as objecting to the Slaughter of Deer Bill. I am not ashamed.

SUNDAY SPORTS (No. 2) BILL

Order read for resuming adjourned debate on Second Reading [29 January].

Hon. Members: Object.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Debate to be resumed what day? No day named.

NORTHERN REGION ASSEMBLY BILL

Order for Second Reading read.

Hon. Members: Object.

Second Reading deferred till Friday next.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Motion made, and Question put,

That, at the sitting on Tuesday 9th February, notwithstanding the provisions of paragraph (1)(b) of Standing Order No. 14 (Exempted business), Mr. Speaker shall put the Questions on the Motions in the name of Mr. Secretary Channon relating to Local Government not later than one and a half hours after the first of them has been entered upon.—[Mr. Alan Howarth].

Hon. Members: Object.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Objection taken.

Road Safety (Rutland and Melton)

Motion made, and question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Alan Howarth.]

2.39 pm

Mr. Michael Latham (Rutland and Melton): I am grateful for the opportunity to raise four local transport safety matters, and I thank my hon. Friend the Minister for his attendance today. I shall refer to the matters in the order of the daily movement of the sun—from east to west—rather than attempt to put them in any rank order of priority. To the local people concerned, they all have absolute priority.

I begin with the A6121 road through the pleasant village of Essendine on the Rutland-Lincolnshire border. The first request for a speed limit—any speed limit at all—that I can trace was made by the clerk to the parish meeting in 1976. It was rejected by Leicestershire county council. Six further approaches were made between 1977 and 1985.

I became involved in the matter in 1986. I have made site visits, and I first wrote to my hon. Friend asking for a 40 mph speed limit on 18 December 1986. I had seen heavy traffic go through the village, much of it at high speed. Although the road has houses on both sides of it, and there are several large industrial premises in the village attracting hundreds of vehicles every day, there are no speed limits other than, of course, the 60 mph speed limit that applies to every single carriageway. The Leicestershire police have confirmed to me that they have no objection to a 40 mph speed limit through the village.

To my disappointment, my hon. Friend refused my request by letter on 13 January 1987. I then tabled some parliamentary questions. To my surprise, in an answer to me on 28 January 1987, my hon. Friend confirmed that the vehicle speeds were just within the recommended criterion for a 40 mph speed limit. He still refused to agree to the limit because there had been no recorded injury or accident since 1983. The gloomy conclusion from his reply seems to be that if there had been any accidents the village would have a better case for a speed limit.

My hon. Friend again wrote to me in February 1987, once more saying no. I had another go at him after the general election, when I pointed out by letter that there had been two recent accidents on the road because of excessive vehicle speed through the village, which was accentuated by the difficult camber of the road and the sharp bend near the post office. Yet, again, my hon. Friend refused a 40 mph speed limit, and a further parliamentary question of 10 November was equally unsuccessful.

I ask my hon. Friend to think again about the request. It has the support of the county council, and the police have no objection. I should not have thought that a request for a 40 mph speed limit is unreasonable.

Next, we move to the historic market town of Oakham and the need for a new pedestrian footbridge across the railway line above the Braumton road crossing. Tragically, the matter arose from the sad death of five-year-old Richard Banner, who was killed by a train on the crossing on 26 October 1985. The community was shocked by that dreadful tragedy. I shall not worry my hon. Friend with all the comings and goings of that awful day, which have involved a quite daunting series of meetings, letters, site visits and much heart-searching by British Rail, Leicestershire county council, Rutland district council and myself.

Some of the delays that have taken place in getting anything done since then have been avoidable and deplorable. I simply record that, in absolute desperation, in 1986, I had to write to the chairman of British Rail, and I have had to deliver to Leicester county council one of the strongest protests that I have ever made regarding serious administrative delays in submitting the necessary forms to my hon. Friend's regional office in Nottingham.

Just before Christmas last year, we had a nasty shock at the suggestion that parliamentary legislation will be necessary. From my files, I see that British Rail first mentioned that possibility in a letter dated 29 May 1986. It talked about including the necessary legislative powers in the annual British Railways Bill in November of that year. I am sorry that it did not do so. I hope that my hon. Friend will confirm my understanding of my recent correspondence with him. Leicestershire county council has now complied with the necessary legal requirements to enable the Department of Transport to make an order closing the highway adjacent to the present level crossing and providing a pedestrian footbridge. At one stage, there was an objection, but it has been withdrawn, so there is no need for a public inquiry. Nothing now legally prevents the bridge being built. While private legislation is needed to extinguish highway rights over the railway itself, British Rail can use existing powers to block access to the railway line on each side of the crossing.

I hope that my hon. Friend will confirm that that is so and assure me that his Department will take any steps that are open to it to expedite any necessary parliamentary legislation. There have been too many bureaucratic hiccups over such a much-needed scheme. I trust that it can be seen through to completion over the next few months.

I refer next to the edge of the Vale of Belvoir and the A607 road from Melton Mowbray to Grantham. Once again, we are nearly on the Leicestershire-Lincolnshire border, specifically in the attractive village of Croxton Kerrial.

My file on the speed limit problem dates back to 1978 when the Croxton Kerrial and Branston parish council first asked me to press for a reduction in the speed limit from the existing 40 mph to 30 mph. Since then I have made many protests to Leicestershire county council, the Leicestershire constabulary and the Department of Transport. After some years of pressure, site meetings and discussions, in July 1982 Leicestershire county council decided to support that reduction in the speed limit. Alas, we did not manage to persuade my hon. Friend's predecessor, my right hon. Friend the Member for Wallasey (Mrs. Chalker), who wrote to me on 8 November and 29 December 1982 rejecting the application. We made a further attempt in 1984. My right hon. Friend the Member for Wallasey wrote to me on 30 April 1984 once again rejecting the application.

In fairness, I should say that the police have never supported the speed limit reduction. Therefore, when I next returned to the issue in September 1987 and held a further site meeting with the parish council, I decided to do a motoring test of my own. I drove from Waltham on the Wolds through Croxton Kerrial, right on to Grantham and back again towards the turn towards Branston, between Croxton Kerrial and Waltham. I did so without exceeding the lawful speed limit of 60 mph in non-built-up areas and I asked myself, as a driver of 20 years' experience, what would be the natural speed for a motorist in such circumstances. There is no doubt in my mind that the natural speed approaching Croxton Kerrial from Waltham on the Wolds, as one comes into the village, ought to be 30 mph. By the time a driver is even a few yards into the village within the 40 mph speed limit, it seems excessive and the hill requires third gear.

I then drove on to Grantham. As soon as one goes under the A1 and comes to the outskirts of Grantham, one immediately enters a 40 mph speed limit, although the road is much wider and the houses are set well back from it. If a 40 mph speed limit is suitable there, it is far too high a speed for the centre of Croxton Kerrial, which is extremely narrow, with virtually no pavement.

I then drove back to Croxton and certainly felt the need to slow down sharply as I entered the village. While 40 mph might seem a natural speed for the first 50 to 100 yards, it was certainly too fast long before the junction with Middle street. I had no difficulty in coming down naturally to 30 mph, and told the police so. However, I am sorry to say that they remain of the view that the accident record does not justify the reduction.

I must advise my hon. Friend that I do not want any accidents there, which is why I favour reducing the speed limit. That would also help to reduce the danger to pedestrians, for whom the present situation in the centre of the village is quite deplorable. At one point, the footpath outside Hillside farmhouse is as narrow as 2 ft and the suction from passing lorries is most disconcerting, to say the least. I hope that my hon. Friend will review that sympathetically.

Finally, I move north north-west to a large village with a magnificent church, which is also on the edge of the Vale of Belvoir and at the border of three counties, Leicestershire, Lincolnshire and Nottinghamshire. Bottesford, on the A52 trunk road, has long needed a bypass. I have been pressing for one ever since I was first elected to this House in 1974. Everyone was delighted when it was finally decided that the bypass could go ahead, although there was significant local dispute over the actual route and whether it should go north or south of the village. That issue was decided at a public inquiry and I am glad that construction is now proceeding.

However, an issue has arisen that is causing further local concern and on which I must seek the help of my hon. Friend. He knows the problem because I have written to him about it. Indeed, I have sent him my whole file with large numbers of local complaints from the neighbouring village of Muston, and I have asked to see him. Briefly, it concerns the wish of the villagers of Muston for an underpass at the junction with the new bypass and for similar provision at Barkestone lane, especially for the driving of sheep or cattle under the road. I am told that 19 of the 44 pensioners in Muston have no transport, and if the sub post office were to be closed when the lady who runs it retires, they would have to go to Bottesford to get their pensions. Children cycling to school would also be able to use that facility, if it were provided.

When I asked my hon. Friend the cost of such underpasses or cattle creeps, he gave two enormous figures — £260,000 for Barkestone lane and £220,000 for Easthorpe — Muston lane. That was if they had been included in the original design. They would cost considerably more now. I find this hard to believe. It is essential that the bypass proceeds to schedule and no one wants to delay it. Certainly, they would get no support from me, if I thought that anyone wanted to create delay. My hon. Friend the Minister was most helpful in sorting out some difficulties with British Rail, which delayed the announcement of his decision by some months.

I must question these very high cost estimates. I am told by local people that when the Billesdon bypass, which is not in my constituency, was built in 1984, the cost of an underpass was between £18,000 and £20,000. The estimator for a local contractor has suggested this week that the proposed underpasses on the A52 could be constructed for about £125,000 to £150,000. I wish to read a couple of sentences from a letter which I have received from a local parish councillor who is also a builder. His letter, dated 2 February 1988, states:

> "I have been able to have an appointment with Mr. O'Connell, the Engineer for Messrs. Husband & Co. He informs me that the road will be built up approximately one metre the full length of the bypass. Obviously this considerably helps the fall to the Devon on the Bottesford side of the Mill Dam.
> As he was not aware of the Mill Dam and the difference in the level of the Devon, I took him along and showed him the route that I thought best to obtain the fall and also to the Barkestone Lane crossing, explaining to him that the Winter Beck over the last two or three years has been considerably deepened to take the storm water from the new housing site on Barkestone Lane.
> On our return to the office, he informed me that he would go further into same as far as levels were concerned and contact me in the near future.
> . . . As we see it, it would not be necessary for the purchasing of any more land."

As for Barkestone lane, if the Minister still rules out an underpass, I hope that he will consider the question of a 6ft diameter Armco sleeve cattle creep to be used solely for animals. I am told that this could be laid without any necessity to raise the embankment or carry out any drainage work. If it were built during the construction of the road, it might be cheaper than the compensation to which the farmers are entitled.

I know that my hon. Friend the Minister has written to me today about this and I hope that he will reconsider his letter in the light of my remarks this afternoon. We are so near to completing a project which is years overdue and desperately needed. There is still time for my hon. Friend to intervene and get this easement for my constituents without in any way delaying the scheme itself.

I have raised four matters of traffic and safety concern to my constituents, all of which are familiar to my hon. Friend the Minister. I could, of course, have chosen several others, equally important to the communities involved. I await his reply with interest and hope.

2.52 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Transport (Mr. Peter Bottomley): My hon. Friend the Member for Rutland and Melton (Mr. Latham) has rightly secured this debate on transport safety matters in his constituency. They are important subjects. I know that he is concerned about road safety and we are frequently in correspondence about it. I congratulate him on his tireless efforts on behalf of his constituents.

Transport safety is the priority of the Department. The issues raised by my hon. Friend relate to road safety on both trunk roads and local authority roads, with a particular emphasis on pedestrian safety. Road safety does not stop there. The recent, successful drink-driving campaign has brought home to drivers, passengers and pedestrians the dangers that they face when drivers use their cars under the influence of alcohol. We are also doing what we can to ensure that the number of accidents is reduced.

The programme for the installation of central reserve safety fencing on dual carriageways will play an important part, as will the closure of motorway emergency crossing points. The recently issued standard for surface skidding resistance introduces a system for monitoring and evaluating the skidding resistance of the trunk road network. Our objective is to maintain skidding resistance at levels appropriate to the accident risk characteristics of various categories of site.

We are also giving a high priority, and encouraging local highway authorities to do the same, to accident investigation and prevention schemes. Such schemes offer considerable potential, usually at relatively low cost, to reduce accidents and improve road safety. The recently published inter-departmental review of road safety underlined the importance of road and vehicle safety research in helping to achieve the Government's target of reducing casualties by one third by the year 2000. In 1987-88, we spent £6 million on research specifically directed to all aspects of road safety. The review proposes that this figure should be further increased in future years.

The work done by the researchers and the pressure from hon. Members, such as my hon. Friend the Member for Rutland and Melton, is driving down the British accident rate. Even though, at present, we have the safest roads in the European Community, it requires attention to detail and research. I do the best I can to see how we compare with other countries. In the rural communities, the accident rate is often the same. I find it interesting that Selby in North Yorkshire and Pierre, the capital of South Dakota, which have roughly the same population, also have roughly the same accident rate. The differences tend to exist in the big cities.

Much of the Department's expenditure is on trunk road bypasses and improvements to relieve communities of through traffic and reduce accidents. When it is possible to get a bypass, the accident rate usually drops by 25 per cent. overnight, because there is a reduction in conflict. Over the past six years the Department has made considerable investment in my hon. Friend's constituency. We have seen the completion of major schemes on the A47 at Uppingham, Wardley Hill and Tixover Hill. On the A52, the Muston bends improvement and the recently started Bottesford bypass have also made a contribution. Major repairs have also been completed on the A46 and central reserve safety fencing has also been installed. Other smaller schemes have also been completed. The total cost of all that work is £8·6 million.

My predecessors and I are grateful to my hon. Friend for his long-standing support for the Bottesford bypass on the A52. I pay tribute to his interest, persistence and help in the latter stages in getting the scheme to the construction stage. Work started in November last year and is due to be completed mid-1989. However, the contractor may achieve an early completion date. The 5.5 km bypass will provide great relief to the village of Bottesford. Conditions in the village will be considerably improved and residents will be relieved of the noise and congestion caused by the large numbers of heavy goods vehicles that still run through the centre. The bypass will make the village a safer place in which to live. The reduction in the volume of traffic and traffic delays will reduce the risk of accident for local residents and make it much safer for pedestrians and school children to cross the road.

I appreciate my hon. Friend's concern about the safety of pedestrians crossing the new bypass when it is complete. He has supported the parish council in its request for the provision of underpasses under the new road at Easthorpe-Muston lane, and Barkestone lane. We have given careful consideration to the needs of pedestrians.

My hon. Friend has suggested what the costs might be for the various things he has in mind, but I will, if I may, reply as though he had not said that. However, I will pass on his comments to the staff of the Department. There is no guarantee of success, but I believe that my hon. Friend would like us to take every opportunity to examine whether anything more is possible.

In April 1986, at the public inquiry, the Department gave evidence to show that, over a 10-hour period between 8 am and 6 pm in September 1983, 15 cyclists and 12 pedestrians used Easthorpe/Muston Lane. Since then the numbers may have changed slightly, but the volume of use is considered too low to warrant the provision of an underpass. Barkestone Lane has become a dead end. Although no counts were taken, we would now expect the number of people involved to be even less. However, I note that my hon. Friend referred to sheep as well as to human beings. Nevertheless, few residents are served by Barkestone lane. The inspector found that, on balance, there was little justification for underpasses or footbridges across the bypass.

It is clear that the bypass embankment would have to be raised significantly to cross any underpasses, whether for pedestrian and livestock use or for a cattle creep. however, my hon. Friend has said that that is a matter of opinion and judgment. We believe that the cost would be considerable. To provide the two underpasses within the current bypass contract would cost about £500,000. A single footbridge suitable for pedestrians and cyclists would cost about £170,000. That would not include claims for disruption that the contractor would be entitled to submit.

The parish council has suggested the completion of underpasses within the present contract period. It should be recognised that raising the bypass would require more land. Further land would also be required for the approaches to underpasses or bridges. Compulsory purchase orders would probably be necessary to ensure that the land was available at the proper time. The bypass is due to be completed by mid-1989. It would probably not be possible to complete all the necessary statutory arrangements, the design of the structures and their erection, before that date.

Obviously, providing underpasses once the bypass was complete would significantly increase costs. We do not believe that we can justify the considerable expenditure. The need for crossings at both locations was fully discussed at the public inquiry. The inspector did not recommend a bridge or underpass in either case. The Secretaries of State accepted his recommendation.

Agriculture needs have been met by providing accesses and tracks. The number of pedestrians, cyclists and horse riders using or crossing the bypass is low. Gates will be provided on each side of the bypass, so that people may cross. Visibility in both directions will be good, and that will allow people to cross safely. Having said that, I repeat that I will make sure that my hon. Friend's suggestions are looked at again.

The Secretary of State for Transport is responsible for speed limits on trunk roads and his consent is required for all principal road speed limit orders proposed by local highways authorities. It is essential that uniform criteria are applied in all cases, to ensure that speed limits command the respect of motorists nationwide. In the last 30 years, there has been a far greater consistency in speed limit signing. We try to match the speed limit to the condition of the road and, as my hon. Friend said, motorists get an idea of what is a safe speed by the conditions in the village, town or area through which they are driving.

Experience shows that residents sometimes expect too much of speed limits. Simply to make an order and then erect speed limit signs does not automatically ensure that speeds or accident rates are reduced. Similar research on pedestrian crossings shows that, if they are put in with the wrong characteristics, accidents can increase rather than be reduced. The same can apply to speed limits.

To be effective, speed limits have to be set at levels which the average motorist accepts as sensible. Unfortunately, "unreasonably" low speed limits are not respected by all motorists, and their enforcement sets a difficult, if not impossible, task for the police. This engenders distrust of the speed limit system as a whole. Such speed limits can create hazardous conditions for other road users, particularly pedestrians, by lulling them into a false sense of security, seemingly offered by the speed limits sign.

The criteria that are used to decide speed limits include the accident rate, the speed of traffic and the nature of the surrounding development. Speed limits which are imposed because of local concern and unsupported by evidence of accidents do not serve the cause of road safety. Nor is it axiomatic that a speed limit is the best cure when an accident record does exist. Speed limits cannot solve the problem of isolated hazards such as single road junctions or bends.

Speed limits should be lowered only when a positive contribution to road safety can be reasonably expected. A study of types of accidents, their severity, cause and frequency can show whether an existing speed limit suits present conditions or whether it needs to be changed. A survey of traffic speeds will show whether a lower limit will, in the absence of regular enforcement, be likely to be observed sufficiently well for any benefit to result. The degree of a manifest police presence in the area will be a particularly important element in villages.

The A6121 principal road through the village of Essendine is the responsibility of Leicestershire county council as highway authority. The county council submitted a draft proposal requesting approval to carry out consultations on a proposed 40 mph limit. Speed measurements at five locations showed an 85 percentile speed of 46·6 mph, which, as my hon. Friend said, is just within the recommended criterion of 47 mph. At that time, there had been three injury accidents during the previous three years. This was below the recommended criterion. The Department advised the county council that a 40 mph limit would not be appropriate

Although, before I came to this job, I thought that it was crazy to wait until the accident had taken place before considering action, in practice, because of the research work, which shows that there is not an invariable relationship between accidents records and risk, it is better to be guided by them. It may sound harsh, but it is the best general guidance that the Department can adopt.

When Leicestershire county council resubmitted a draft proposal in January 1986, there had been no change in the character of the village or recorded vehicle speeds. Traffic volumes had risen slightly but there had been no recorded injury accidents between January 1983 and January 1986. The county council was again advised against proceeding with a speed limit. Although there had been three accidents since then, only one, I am advised, was inside the length of the proposed speed limit. The accident rate is still well below the recommended criterion. I understand that no further accidents have occurred. I have heard what my hon. Friend has said about being keen to secure further action before there are further accidents, but I need to report the facts as I understand them. We have given careful thought to the need for a speed limit through Essendine. It is clear from the record in recent years that a speed limit would not contribute to road safety. I know that this will be a disappointment, but it really is important for speed limits to be applied only where they are really needed. That way they will remain an effective accident prevention measure.

Similar considerations apply to Croxton Kerrial on the A607 principal road. The 40 mph speed limit was imposed on the built-up length of the village in 1969. Following my hon. Friend's approach in 1984, we promised to consider a proposed reduction to 30 mph. As a result, Leicestershire county council submitted a proposal, which we examined very carefully. It was concluded that conditions on this stretch of road did not justify the lowering of the speed limit. At that time, the facts showed the existing 40 mph speed limit to be realistic and largely self-enforcing. In essence that is a repeat in a slightly different way of the point I made about Essendine.

Vehicle speeds through Croxton Kerrial are generally less than 40 mph, and for the six years before 1984 there had been no accidents resulting in personal injury. At that time the police considered the present limit to be realistic and enforceable but they feared the proposed reduction could give rise to very real difficulties, resulting in the limit being generally disregarded.

I have to tell my hon. Friend that the position has not changed. There have been no reported accidents within the existing speed limit since 1985. We believe that the lowering of the existing speed limit to 30 mph would be inappropriate.

My hon. Friend also mentioned the railway crossing at Braunston road in Oakham. Leicestershire county council's plan to construct a footbridge to carry pedestrians across the British Rail line at Braunston road South street, Oakham, will meet an urgent need to ensure pedestrian safety. I share his concern. This follows the tragic death of a five-year-old boy in 1985 which my hon. Friend described. I understand there have been other potential accidents which could also have ended in tragedy. The county council, as highway authority responsible, has rightly decided to replace this dangerous crossing with a footbridge.

This is a complicated issue because different powers are required for different needs. The crossing is already subject to a road traffic regulation order made in 1979, which prohibits vehicular traffic. Leicestershire county council applied to the Department in September 1987 to stop up the road, using powers under section 209 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1971. The council has the necessary planning permission for the footbridge. The highway will have to be closed to construct it because its footings are in the centre of the carriagway. The order, which is the responsibility of the Secretary of State, was published in draft on 18 December. Earlier publication was not possible because details of the proposed footbridge were not received from the highway authority until 9 December.

There is a statutory four-week objection period. Two objections have been received. One, from a private individual, has subsequently been withdrawn. The other is from the East Midlands electricity board which has apparatus in the vicinity. The county council is in discussion with the electricity board. Let us hope that the objection will be withdrawn soon. Only when it is can the order be made. This will take about three weeks from the date of formal notification by the county council that the objection has been withdrawn. Its making — it comes into effect on the same day — will provide the appropriate powers necessary to construct the bridge.

In recent correspondence with my hon. Friend, I mentioned that highway rights may still exist over the level crossing. It is this issue which may have led to some confusion. It may require primary legislation to close the crossing to traffic and pedestrians, which is the responsibility of British Rail. It is for Leicestershire county council to make the appropriate arrangements with British Rail before the scheme is complete.

I should like to draw attention to the considerable investment in new roads that the Government have made since 1979. It aids the economy and moves traffic away from towns and villages. Separating people from traffic is one of the most effective methods of improving road safety. We are achieving this in my hon. Friend's constituency and elsewhere.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at eight minutes past Three o'clock.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prisoners (Mental Illness)

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has on diagnoses of mental illness among the prison population (a) before and (b) after entering prison; what percentage included schizophrenic psychoses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Information available is as follows.

A census taken by prison medical officers on 1 October 1986 of sentenced inmates serving six months and over showed that there were 329 who were considered to require specialist therapeutic facilities by reason of mental illness.

Figures from the latest returns of the number of inmates considered to be suffering from mental disorder of a type or degree such that they would be detainable under the Mental Health Act 1983 are included in the medical statistics on page 69 of the report on the work of the prison service 1986/87 (Cm. 246), a copy of which is in the Library. They show that on 31 March 1987 there were 240 (95 sentenced, 145 unsentenced) diagnosed as mentally ill.

Prison Population (Psychiatric Profile)

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to receive the planned psychiatric profile of the prison population from the institute of psychiatry, university of London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: On 31 October 1990. This important study is intended to produce over a three-year period a definitive statement of the dimensions of the problem of mentally disordered offenders in the prison system. It will provide a sound basis on which the Department is able to consider the further development of its policies.

Mrs. J. V. N. Ball

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he received correspondence dated 26 November 1987 regarding Mrs. J. V. N. Ball of Nottingham; and when he expects to reply.

Mr. Renton: The correspondence was received on 30 November. I replied to the hon. Member on 19 January.

Incest

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases of incest have been reported to the police for each of the last five years; and if he will provide a breakdown of the family relationship involved.

Mr. John Patten: The number of offences of incest recorded by the police is published annually in the Command Paper "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales", copies of which are in the Library. The most recent issue (Cm. 233) gives annual figures for 1976 to 1986 (table 2.15). Details of the relationships involved are not collected centrally.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) convictions and (b) prosecutions there have been for incest for each of the last five years.

Mr. John Patten: Information on the numbers proceeded against and found guilty of incest is published annually in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales", supplementary tables, vols. 1 and 2, copies of which are in the Library, in tables S1.1(A) and S2.1(A) under offence classification 23.

Michael Ryan (Firearms Certificate)

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the Thames Valley police as to when the perpetrator of the Hungerford massacre applied for and received his firearms certificates; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to a question from the hon. Member for Caerphilly (Mr. Davies) on 22 January at columns 869-870.

Game Licences

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many convictions there have been in each of the past five years for breaches of the game licence legislation.

Mr. John Patten: The information available centrally, which may be incomplete, is given in the following table:

Defendants convicted under the Game Licences Act 1860 England and Wales

Year	Total found guilty
1982	141
1983	170
1984	146
1985	135

Fox Hunting

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimates he has made as to the cost of policing fox hunting recreational activities, broken down by police authority areas.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: None. Information on this matter is not held centrally and could not be obtained without disproportionate cost.

Mr. John Porter

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will call for a report from the chief constable for South Wales into the circumstances surrounding the original disappearance of Mr. John Porter.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the chief constable of South Wales police that inquiries are still continuing into why Mr. Porter, who is no longer registered as a missing person, originally disappeared from his house.

Prisons

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the female prison population for England and Wales for the latest date available.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: On Friday 22 January the female prison population in England and Wales stood at 1,810, including 21 held in police cells.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average female prison population in England and Wales during (a) 1984, (b) 1985, (c) 1986 and (d) 1987.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The average female population of prison department establishments in each of the years 1984 to 1986 was published in table 1.4 of "Prison Statistics England and Wales 1986" (Cm. 210), a copy of which is in the Library. The provisional average population for 1987 was about 1,700. The average number of females held in police cells in 1984, 1985, 1986 and 1987 was 13, 8, 41 and (provisional) 68 respectively.

Sentencing

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons in England and Wales were committed to Crown court for sentence by magistrates' courts during 1986; and how many of those persons received a custodial sentence.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested is published annually in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales", supplementary tables volumes 1 and 3, (tables S1.1(A) and S3.6(B) of the issue of 1986) copies of which are in the Library. In 1986 6,450 offenders were sentenced by the Crown court after summary conviction by magistrates, 4,550 of whom were given a custodial sentence.

CIVIL SERVICE

Effectiveness, Rewards and Morale

64. Mr. Allen: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service what new proposals he has to improve the effectiveness, rewards and morale of the Civil Service.

Mr. Luce: I am constantly seeking new ways in which to increase the effectiveness of our already highly professional Civil Service. The Government's policies of moving towards flexible pay and merit pay will reward high achievement and help to improve morale.

Departmental Forms

68. Mr. John Browne: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service what steps he has taken to improve the clarity and presentation of Government forms, to make them more easy to use and to eliminate those which are unnecessary.

Mr. Luce: Government forms are now easier to understand, simpler to complete and more attractive than ever before. In December 1987 Government Departments won two of the eight annual awards presented by the Plain English Campaign. Since 1985, 20,000 forms have been improved and a further 11,000 have been scrapped. A copy of the latest progress report on this work has been placed in the Libraries of Parliament.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many places are available under the assisted places scheme in each local authority area for 1988-89; and how many applications have been received in each area.

Mr. Dunn: The present number of assisted places available by reference to local authority area for take-up in September 1988 is as listed. We are currently considering how the assisted places scheme will be expanded in line with our manifesto commitment. Information regarding applications for assisted places is not collected centrally.

Student Grants

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any plans to change the student grant regulations with regard to parental contributions in cases where students are estranged from their parents.

Mr. Jackson: No.

Instrumental Music Schemes

Mr. Nicholas Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received in favour of permitting instrumental music schemes of local education authorities to opt out of local authority control, as provided for maintained schools in the Education Reform Bill; and what response he has made.

Mr. Dunn: None. The Bill now before Parliament provides only for county or voluntary schools to apply to become grant-maintained. However, my right hon. Friend will today meet the national executive of the Schools Music Association to discuss the implications for school music provision of our proposals for education reform.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he plans to make available to schools in the maintained sector that have opted out under the provisions of the Education Reform Bill, the services of the instrumental music scheme and other support services provided by local authorities.

Mr. Dunn: Governing bodies of grant-maintained schools will be free, if they wish, to negotiate with any local education authority for the purchase of goods and services. Some may prefer to look elsewhere.

School Playgrounds (Accidents)

Mr. Nicholas Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what estimate he has of the number of accidents in 1987 in school playgrounds; and if he will introduce measures to improve the safety of school playground surfaces.

Mr. Dunn: My Department does not collect detailed statistics of accidents in school playgrounds but monitors the general situation.

My Department has recently consulted a sample of local education authorities on their experiences with climbing equipment and various types of surface used beneath it. We shall consider whether any sufficiently clear lessons can be drawn to offer general guidance.

Black Report

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, pursuant to his oral answer of 19 January, Official Report, column 807, on what evidence the recommendations of the Black report relating to cultural bias in tests were based.

Mrs. Rumbold: The report of the task group on assessment and testing recommends that assessment tasks be reviewed regularly to seek to detect and eliminate any bias, particularly in respect of gender and race. I understand that the conclusions and recommendations of the task group were based on evidence from and discussion with a variety of individuals and organisations, including schools, local authorities and bodies responsible for existing assessment schemes, in addition to the collective experience of task group members. We have welcomed the broad framework of the report and will be considering its detailed recommendations, together with any comments received on them.

East Anglia

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the implications for his Department's (a) planning and (b) spending on education of recent projections published by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys that East Anglia will have in the next 13 years the greatest proportionate population increase of both people moving in and of new births of any English region.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Department's plans take account of projected changes in the population at national level; these projections are the aggregate of projections for individual regions. Most education in East Anglia is provided by the local education authorities for the area; these authorities will wish to take account of the recent projections in their planning. My right hon. Friend takes account of the particular circumstances of each local authority area when making decisions affecting individual authorities.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

EC Affairs

Mr. George Robertson: To ask the Lord President of the Council when he expects to bring forward proposals for greater parliamentary scrutiny of European Community affairs following the implementation of the Single European Act and in line with the resolution of the House of 5 March 1986, Official Report, column 402.

Mr. Wakeham: The resolution of the House of 5 March 1986 related to the recommendations of the First Report of the Select Committee on European Legislation (Session 1985-86). Those recommendations which were addressed to the Government have already been accepted. My right hon. Friend the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office reported this to the House on 23 April 1986 at column 393. Guidance has been given to Departments on the necessary changes in scrutiny arrangements, which came into operation when the Single European Act came into force on 1 July 1987. The Government will continue to keep the scrutiny process under review, particularly as the impact of the Single European Act becomes clearer.

PRIME MINISTER

Glorious Revolution

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list the special events being organised in the current year in the United Kingdom and elsewhere to celebrate the 300th anniversary of the Glorious Revolution.

The Prime Minister: Comprehensive information is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost; but I am placing in the Library a copy of a provisional programme of events compiled by the William and Mary Tercentenary Trust.

State Security

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on the present definition of national security adopted by Ministers in Her Majesty's Government.

The Prime Minister: This term is generally understood to refer to the safeguarding of the state and the community against threats to their survival or well-being. I am not aware that any previous Administration has thought it appropriate to adopt a specific definition of the term.

Crown Prerogative

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Prime Minister (1) whether the public interest criteria of the code for Crown prosecutors, issued pursuant to section 10 of the Prosecution of Offences Act 1985, are exempt from consideration of alleged offences committed under the auspices of the prerogative right of the Crown;

(2) whether, pursuant to her answer of 18 January, Official Report, column 492, any alleged criminal actions in exercise of a prerogative right of the Crown have, since 1979, not been subject to prosecution as a result of the exercise of the public interest criteria in the code for Crown prosecutors.

The Prime Minister: Prosecutions are a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General, and the other prosecuting authorities.

Cruelty to Animals (Hong Kong)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister if she has yet replied to the letter sent to her by Mr. Ian MacPhail on 13 January regarding cruelty to animals in Hong Kong; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I have recently received a letter from Ian MacPhail, European co-ordinator of the International Fund for Animal Welfare, enclosing one he has written to my right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary. My noble Friend the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office will be replying as soon as possible.

Trawsfynydd (Test)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to her oral reply to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy on the Central Electricity Generating Board's test experiment on the Trawsfynydd nuclear plant, 19 January, Official Report, column 819, whether Her Majesty's Government have informed the European Community Commission of the test under the requirement of Euratom treaty, article 34, prior to her reply of 19 January.

The Prime Minister: The test proposed at Trawsfynydd will take place only if the Health and Safety Executive's Nuclear Installations Inspectorate is totally satisfied that it will be safe. Article 34 is not therefore relevant.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Diplomatic Passports

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the joint Home Office/Foreign and Commonwealth Office working group was set up to study the question of the introduction of diplomatic passports; what is the membership of that committee; when it expects to report and to whom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The joint Home Office/Foreign and Commonwealth Office working group was set up in September 1987 and consisted of officials from the passport department of the Home Office and nationality and treaty department of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. Its report will be submitted to Home Office and Foreign and Commonwealth Office Ministers shortly.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received from diplomats or their representatives concerning the issue of diplomatic passports by the United Kingdom to its diplomatic staff overseas.

Mr. Eggar: There have been representations from the Foreign and Commonwealth Office trade union side from time to time on this question. It has been a subject of discussion within the Diplomatic Service generally for a number of years.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs why, in view of there being to his knowledge no country other than the United Kingdom which does not issue diplomatic passports to its diplomatic staff overseas, the United Kingdom Government do not issue such passports for the protection and convenience of United Kingdom diplomats.

Mr. Eggar: In the past it has not been considered necessary to issue United Kingdom diplomatic passports to assist diplomats in carrying out their duties. In view of changed conditions in the world it was decided to review the position.

Mr. and Mrs. E. P. Wright

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contact has been made by his Department with Mrs. E. P. Wright and her husband, who is currently in a diabetic coma in Cyprus and about whom the hon. Member for Macclesfield has written to him; what steps have been taken by his Department to assist Mrs. E. P. Wright with the health care of her husband in Cyprus; and if he will arrange for the husband of Mrs. E. P. Wright to be flown to the United Kingdom from Cyprus to receive medical care.

Mr. Eggar: The British high commission, Nicosia, was aware of Mr. Wright's illness and was in touch with his wife. Mr. Wright was due to be admitted to the Royal Military hospital at RAF Akrotiri for assessment on 18 January 1988 with a view to possible medical repatriation by the RAF at his own expense. Mr. Wright, sadly, died shortly before admission.

Zimbabwe

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Zimbabwe concerning the freezing of the savings of Mrs. E. P. Wright; what progress has been made in negotiations with the Government of Zimbabwe concerning the releasing of the savings of former Rhodesian nationals; and if he will make it his policy to suspend all overseas aid payments to Zimbabwe until such time as it relaxes its freeze on the savings of former Rhodesian nationals.

Mrs. Chalker: We are not in negotiations with the Zimbabwe Government over the release of savings of former Rhodesian nationals. In their exchange control regulations the Zimbabwe authorities have made provision for special consideration of individual cases on hardship grounds. Her Majesty's high commission in Harare continues to make representations on individual cases when this is thought to be appropriate and helpful. It remains ready to consider doing so for Mrs. Wright, with whom my officials have been in correspondence. I do not accept that there is a case for imposing a suspension of all overseas aid payments as suggested. The chief purpose of our aid to Zimbabwe is to strengthen the Zimbabwe economy so that the conditions leading to the predicament of such persons as Mrs. Wright may be resolved.

Hong Kong (Rare and Endangered Species)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has yet replied to the letter sent to him on 13 January by Mr. Ian MacPhail regarding cruelty to animals in Hong Kong; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: My noble Friend the Minister of State replied on 22 January.

Nuclear Materials

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he possesses on the commission of inquiry recently established in the European Parliament to examine the accountability and control of nuclear materials in the European Community under Euratom regulations.

Mr. Mellor: A European Parliament committee of inquiry is to investigate the movement of radioactive waste from the treatment plant at Mol in Belgium and to report within four months. It is composed of 15 members representing all groups and includes three British members.

Terms of reference include consideration of the handling and transport of material, the existing Community regime for handling radioactive waste and the Commission's obligations covering the safeguards aspects of the nuclear material involved (including the question of plutonium in barrels supposedly containing radioactive waste), Euratom treaty obligations and application of the existing requirements for the cross-border transport of nuclear waste.

Black Rhino

Mr. Tony Banks: to ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if any funds are made available by the British Government directly or indirectly for conservation of the black rhino.

Mr. Eggar: The black rhino is a protected species under the convention in international trade in endangered species of fauna and flora. The United Kingdom plays a full and active part in encouraging the implementation of this convention. Our 1987 contribution to the CITES secretariat was US$37,863 (£26,478).

The Overseas Development Administration also provide a contribution in the form of an adviser working with the Zimbabwe Department of National Parks on schemes to encourage wildlife conservation. One of the principal beneficiaries of such schemes should be the black rhino. The ODA is also in contact with "Rhino Rescue" about the possibility of co-funding a project in Kenya, the principal aim of which is the preservation there of the black rhino population.

NORTHERN IRELAND

School Buildings (Repairs)

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make additional funding available to the Northern Ireland educational boards to enable them to tackle the backlog of repairs to school buildings.

Dr. Mawhinney: In December I announced that I was allocating £250 million for the recurrent expenditure, including maintenance of buildings, of the five education and library boards for the next financial year. This represents an overall increase of 5 per cent. over estimated expenditure for this year. I have also recently announced that I will provide an additional £0·5 million for the current financial year to supplement the boards' schools buildings maintenance budgets.

Kilroot Power Station

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the future of Kilroot phase II in the light of his recent statement supporting a new private-sector lignite-fired power station in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Viggers: The press statement issued on 22 December 1987 re-affirmed the Government's belief in the merits of a private sector power station provided that it is in the interests of the consumer and the economy of Northern Ireland as a whole. Kilroot II is one of the options under consideration in the competition for new generating capacity and I will not be in a position to comment on its future until all proposals have been evaluated and the competition drawn to a conclusion.

Lecturers

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will ensure that appropriate financial estimates be made for 1988-89 to enable any salary award for further education lecturers eventually agreed to be made retrospective to 1 April 1987.

Dr. Mawhinney: Estimates provision will be sought in this financial year to take account of the likely salary award which may be made with effect from 1 April 1987.

Lignite

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what safety precautions his Department recommends relating to the use of lignite in power stations.

Mr. Viggers: All commercial power stations in Northern Ireland are required to comply with the safety provisions contained in the Health and Safety at Work (Northern Ireland) Order 1978 and the Factories Act (Northern Ireland) 1965. These provisions would apply to a lignite-fired power station.

Power Stations

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what studies his Department has conducted into the case for additional power stations in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Viggers: Northern Ireland Electricity carried out a review of future requirements for new generating capacity in 1982 and this was revised and updated in 1986. The Government have accepted the conclusions of these studies which show that there is an unavoidable requirement for new capacity in 1995-96. The studies also showed that further capacity will be needed around the turn of the century.

Economic Strategy

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what approaches he has had from trade unions in Northern Ireland for discussions on the Government's economic strategy.

Mr. Viggers: Over the past two years there have been 12 occasions on which Ministers have met trade union delegations to discuss a range of industrial and economic issues.

Labour Statistics

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many new jobs were created during 1987 in the constituency of Strangford.

Mr. Viggers: Figures are not available on a constituency basis. However, in the Ards and Castlereagh borough council areas in the financial year 1986-87, 655 jobs were promoted by the Industrial Development Board and the Local Enterprise Development Unit. In addition some 200 ACE and Enterprise Ulster jobs were also created.

Mr. John D.Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many new jobs were promoted during 1987 by (a) the Industrial Development Board and (b) the Local Enterprise Development Unit.

Mr. Viggers: Job promotion figures are compiled on a financial year basis. The figures for 1986-87, were 4,187 and 4,244 respectively.

Anti-poverty Programmes

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what sums have been expended in Northern Ireland by the European Economic Community and by Her Majesty's Government under the current anti-poverty programmes under European Economic Community directive 85/8; what sums remain; when the programmes will end; and if he will seek an extension of funding for those programmes.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 22 January 1988]: Two four-year action research projects have received funding as follows:

EC	DHSS(NI)
£211,743	£173,246

Assuming satisfactory progress, it is expected that the following sums will be spent over the next two years:

EC	DHSS(NI)
£220,609	£180,500

The anti-poverty programme will end on 30 November 1989.

It is for the European Commission to decide whether funding should be extended beyond that date.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the vehicles purchased and used in Northern Ireland and the cost of each of them under EEC directive 85/8 dealing with anti-poverty programmes.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 22 January 1988]: The rural action project has purchased and is using two mobile advice and information units. They cost £20,196 and £21,908. The Belfast and Derry unemployment project does not own any vehicles.

EMPLOYMENT

Interviews (Travelling Expenses)

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the practice of the Health and Safety Executive in respect of reimbursement of travelling expenses to candidates called for interview.

Mr. Nicholls: Candidates interviewed at open competition run by the Civil Service Commission for recruitment to the Health and Safety Executive are required to contribute £4 towards their travelling expenses. Their net claim is reimbursed by the Civil Service Commission.

Candidates recruited to HSE locally for administrative posts are reimbursed travelling costs where these exceed £4 to the limit of the second class rail fare.

Candidates called for interview by Health and Safety Executive promotion boards are reimbursed all appropriate travelling expenses.

Factory Inspectors

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many class 1B factory inspectors have been promoted in each year since 1978.

Mr. Nicholls: The numbers of 1B factory inspectors promoted in each year since 1978 are as follows:

	Number
1978	10
1979	9
1980	2
1981	4
1982	14
1983	7
1984	7
1985	15
1987	12

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many factory inspectors class 1B have five or less years of experience of inspection in that grade.

Mr. Nicholls: Forty-two.

Health and Safety Executive

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many staff of the Health and Safety Executive hold formal qualifications in personnel management.

Mr. Nicholls: The Health and Safety Executive's records show that eight of its staff hold formal qualifications in personnel management.

Manufacturing Industry

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give a regional breakdown of employment in manufacturing industry in August, September and October of 1987.

Mr. Lee: Estimates of employment in regions are made only for quarter months. The latest information on net changes to September 1987 is as follows:

Employees in employment in manufacturing industry: net changes between June and September 1987

	Change
South East	16,000
East Anglia	5,000
South West	−1,000
West Midlands	1,000
East Midlands	4,000
Yorkshire and Humberside	6,000
North West	−2,000
North	−1,000
Wales	5,000
Scotland	−3,000

Some of the decreases in the figures will be the result of the reclassification of jobs such as industrial cleaning, computer services and road haulage, previously done by manufacturers' own employees and now done by subcontractors. This developing feature of our economy has the effect of exaggerating the extent of the move from manufacturing to service sector employment.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the current rate of youth unemployment in the Peterlee and Seaham areas of his Department.

Mr. Lee: Unemployment rates by age are not calculated below national level. However, on 8 October 1987 the numbers of unemployed claimants aged under 18 in the local authority wards[1] which most closely correspond to the Peterlee and Seaham areas were 200 and 110 respectively.

[1] The wards which cover Peterlee are Shadforth, Acre Rigg, Blackhalls, Dene House, Easington Colliery, Easington Village, Eden Hill, Haswell, Horden North, Horden, South, Howletch, Passfield, Shotton, South Hetton.

The wards which cover Seaham are Dawdon, Deneside, High Colliery, Murton East, Murton West, Park, Seaham, South.

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many job vacancies were registered in the Peterlee and Seaham jobcentres in November and December 1987.

Mr. Lee: The following information is in the Library. The numbers of vacancies notified to Peterlee, Seaham and Wingate jobcentres between 8 November and 4 December 1987 was 364. Separate figures for Seaham and Peterlee jobcentres are not collected. Figures are not yet available for the period 5 December 1987 to 8 January 1988.

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what was the number of people employed (a) full-time and (b) part-time in (i) Vale Royal district and (ii) Winsford in each of the last five years;

(2) what proportion of the employed population in Winsford were employed in (a) manufacturing and (b) service industries in each of the last five years.

Mr. Lee: Information about employment in local areas is available only for years in which censuses of employment are conducted. The available employee estimates for the Vale Royal local authority district, and for the area comprising the five local authority wards approximating most closely to the Winsford area, taken from the September 1981 and September 1984 censuses of employment, are as follows. An industry breakdown for the Winsford area is not available for the earlier year, but in 1984 the proportion of employees working in manufacturing and service industries was 53·6 per cent. and 43·7 per cent. respectively.

(thousands)

	Vale Royal local authority district[2]		Winsford area[3]
	September		September
	1981	1984	1981	1984
All industries and services
Male and female	35·6	35·7	7·6	7·5
Full-time	28·0	27·9	6·5	6·3
Part-time[4]	7·6	7·8	1·1	1·2

[2] The district is defined in terms of ward boundaries as at 1981.
[3] Defined as the area comprising the five local authority wards of Wharton, Gravel, Swanlow, Over One and Over Two: ward boundaries as at 1981.
[4] Part-time workers are defined as those not working more than 30 hours a week.

Job Release Scheme

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people in the Peterlee and Seaham areas of his Department have retired under the job release scheme in the years 1985-86, 1986-87 and 1987 to date.

Mr. Lee: I am afraid that the information is not available in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Tourism

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will take steps to encourage the American tourist and travel agencies to make more use of northern airports, hotels and travel facilities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: I am keen to spread the benefits of tourism more widely around the country. I welcome the work done by northern regional tourist boards to promote their regions both at home and abroad.

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will grant aid to more tourist information centres on the A19 from Dishforth to the Tyne tunnel and the A1 from Dishforth to Newcastle.

Mr. Lee: I understand that both the Nurthumbria and Yorkshire and Humberside tourist boards are considering the provision of tourist information on the main routes north. The English tourist board is prepared to consider applications for assistance from the section 4 scheme towards the costs of developing tourist information facilities in appropriate locations.

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what measures he is taking to ensure that, upon completion of the Channel tunnel, tourist traffic will have good access to the north-east.

Mr. Lee: My Department, as well as the Department of Transport, is represented on the British tourist authority's Channel tunnel tourism working party which is studying the impact of the tunnel on the tourist industry and identifying how best to exploit its tourism potential to the benefit of the whole country.

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment he has made of the implications for the development of the tourism industry of the introduction of a general certificate of secondary education examination in travel and tourism.

Mr. Lee: I understand that there are developments taking place in this area. While I welcome initiatives which help to make education more relevant to the needs of industry and commerce including tourism, it is too early as yet to assess the full implication for the industry of this particular development.

Deaths and Accidents

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the percentage increase between 1981 and 1986 of deaths and serious accidents (a) in manufacturing industry and (b) the construction industry.

Mr. Nicholls: The percentage increases for the number of reported deaths and major injuries to employees at work are given in the table.

Percentage increase

	(a) Manufacturing	(b) Construction
Number of reported deaths 1981 to 1986-87[1]	−8	−14
Number of reported major injuries 1981 to 1985	+17	+32

Minus represents a percentage decrease.
[1] Provisional data for the year commencing 1 April 1986.

The increase in reported major injuries relates to the years 1981 and 1985. Figures for 1986 are not comparable, since they involve a widened definition of major injury.

Dock Workers

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the total amount of Government funding in the years 1972 to 1986 for the severance of registered dock workers from the ports covered by the dock labour scheme; and how many permanent registered dock workers left the industry in this period under severance arrangements.

Mr. Nicholls: [holding answer 18 January 1988]: In the period 1 April 1972 to 31 March 1987 the Government provided grants of £80 million and loans of £162 million to the National Dock Labour Board towards the cost of severances of registered dockworkers. In the same period 34,361 registered dockworkers left the industry under the national employers' release arrangements.

ENERGY

Electricity Prices

12. Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what representations he has received from firms in north-east Derbyshire on the proposed increase in electricity prices; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My Department has received two representations from north-east Derbyshire about the proposed increase in electricity prices.

My right hon. Friend made a statement to the House on this matter on 3 November last year.

32. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what recent representations he has received regarding electricity prices.

Mr. Parkinson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given today to the hon. Member for Derbyshire, North-East (Mr. Barnes).

Coal Industry

13. Mr. Eadie: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what discussions he has had with the chairman of British Coal about the future plans for the coal industry in 1988.

16. Mr. Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what discussions he has had with the chairman of British Coal regarding flexible working in the coal mining industry in the various areas.

Mr. Parkinson: I have regular meetings with the chairman of British Coal to discuss all aspects of the coal industry.

20. Mr. Douglas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will detail the number of job losses in deep mining in Scotland since March 1985, up to the latest date available.

Mr. Michael Spicer: British Coal advises that 4,236 men were employed in Scottish deep-mining on 26 December 1987. The corresponding figure for 30 March 1985 was 11,263.

Electricity Industry (Cost Savings)

14. Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what cost savings have been achieved in the electricity industry since 1979; and what are the cost saving targets for 1987-88 and 1988-89.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Electricity Council estimates that operating costs of electricity supply per unit sold fell in real terms by 10·3 per cent. between 1979-80 and 1986-87. The present performance aim for the industry is a reduction of 6·1 per cent. in controllable costs between 1983-84 and 1987-88. The performance aim for the next financial year is under discussion between my Department and the industry.

Electricity Generation

15. Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what plans he has to support research and development into water-generated electricity in the immediate and in the longer term.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My Department will continue to support any renewable energy electricity generation scheme which shows promise of economic viability in the commercial market.

19. Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what proportions of the anticipated electricity generation for the next 10 years will be met by (a) nuclear, (b) coal-fired, (c) oil-fired, (d) hydro, and (e) other, power stations.

Mr. Michael Spicer: At present the industry estimates that in 1998 the proportions of electricity generating capacity in England and Wales would be:

	per cent.
(a) nuclear	14
(b) coal fired	60
(c) oil fired	17
(d) hydro	3
(e) others	5

It will, of course, be for the privatised industry to make its own investment plans.

21. Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has any plans to encourage the casual production of electricity as a by-product of other industrial processes.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The production of electricity associated with heat for industrial use is already widespread. I hope to see expansion in this field.

Electricity (Economy Tariffs)

17. Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has on measures to improve the take-up of electricity economy tariffs by customers of area boards.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Area boards have extensive publicity programmes aimed at making sure that their customers are able to choose the most economic tariff appropriate to their needs.

Gas and Electricity (VAT)

18. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will raise at his next meeting with the consumer bodies of the electricity and gas industries the implications for the industry and consumers of the levying of value added tax on gas and electricity, in view of the imminent decision of the European Court of Justice on the case initiated by the Commission on 15 September; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: As my hon. Friend will understand, it would be inappropriate to enter into such discussions in advance of a judgment by the court.

Power Stations and Overhead Lines (Public Inquiries)

22. Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what consultations he undertook and what representations he has received regarding the statutory instrument on the conduct of public inquiries into power stations and overhead lines laid before the House on 18 December 1987.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The new rules governing public inquiries into power stations and overhead lines, on which the Council on Tribunals was consulted, implement changes envisaged by the consultation paper on inquiries procedure issued in December 1986 by the Department of the Environment and the Welsh Office. A number of representations were received in response to that consultation paper.

Energy Efficiency

23. Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what initiatives he proposes to take in the field of domestic energy efficiency.

Mr. Peter Morrison: My energy efficiency office continues to promote energy efficiency in the domestic sector through information, advice, and its support for the community insulation projects.

24. Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what measures he intends to take to encourage energy efficiency in (a) industry, (b) Government Departments and (c) domestic households over the next three years.

Mr. Peter Morrison: In my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Berkshire, East (Mr. MacKay) on 22 January at columns 885-86, I announced the Government's decision on the way forward for the energy efficiency office in the light of an assessment of the office's programmes. There will be a continuing role for the EEO to fulfil. Initiatives in the domestic sector and in the Government estate will continue to be pursued vigorously. In industry and commerce, programmes are being examined to see how the contribution from those who benefit can be increased.

27. Mr. Forth: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he is yet in a position to announce the outcome of the review of the energy efficiency office.

Mr. Parkinson: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Berkshire, East (Mr. MacKay) on 22 January 1988, at columns 885-86.

28. Mr. Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what plans he has for the future of the energy efficiency survey scheme.

Mr. Peter Morrison: In order to improve value for money the short survey category of the scheme will be discontinued with effect from 31 January 1988. Other aspects of the scheme will be considered as part of the further work on energy efficiency programmes which I announced on 22 January 1988.

Offshore Supplies Industry

25. Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement regarding the health of the offshore supplies industry following the oil price slump of 1986.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The health of the offshore supplies industry has recovered significantly from the oil price slump of 1986. Drilling activity has risen to 1983 levels, the third highest level recorded, with a consequent upturn in the workload of orders for the service sector in general. However, I am conscious of the difficulties currently being experienced by the fabrication industry. Nevertheless, my Department approved 13 projects in 1987 and these should provide considerable work opportunities for the fabrication industry in the future.

Oil Reserves

26. Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what are the implications of the changes in known United Kingdom oil reserves since 1979.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Since 1979 estimates of initially recoverable reserves have risen by over 13 per cent. from 2,009 million tonnes to 2,280 million tonnes. This reflects the high level of appraisal and development activity in the United Kingdom continental shelf. On current estimates, the United Kingdom is likely to remain self-sufficient in oil well into the 1990s.

Electricity Industry (Desulphurisation Programme)

29. Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has discussed the desulphurisation programme with the chairman of the Central Electricity Generating Board; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I have discussed the Central Electricity Generating Board's flue gas desulphurisation (FGD) programme with Lord Marshall. The board's plans to retrofit 6,000 MW of existing generating capacity at Drax and Fiddlers Ferry power stations were announced in October last year. In addition, all future coal-fired power stations will be required to be fitted with FGD.

Electricity Industry (Privatisation)

30. Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he will next meet the chairmen of the area electricity boards to discuss privatisation of the electricity supply industry.

Mr. Parkinson: I last met the area board chairmen as a group on 13 January. No arrangements for further meetings have yet been made.

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has examined suggestions for divesting the electricity area boards of their high-street showrooms, when electricity privatisation takes place; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I am examining a number of suggestions for the future structure of the area electricity boards.

Energy Management Conferences

31. Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what plans he has for future energy management conferences.

Mr. Peter Morrison: In the past my Department has organised national energy management conferences. Increasingly, however, the private sector is showing interest in arranging events of this sort and I am glad to say that the Energy Systems Trade Association is planning to hold a national conference in Birmingham in December this year.

Power Stations

33. Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many existing power stations are expected to come to the end of their useful life in the next (a) five years, (b) 10 years and (c) 15 years; and what is their total electricity output.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is an operational matter for the CEGB. I have asked the chairman to reply direct to my hon. Friend.

Trawsfynydd Power Station

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many representations his Department received against the experiment proposed by the Central Electricity Generating Board at Trawsfynydd nuclear power station.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I have received a number of representations. Most sought clarification.

Fast Breeder Reactor Programme

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on recent progress in the fast breeder reactor programme.

Mr. Parkinson: The United Kingdom's fast reactor programme has made some impressive advances in recent years. The R and D has led to significant design improvements. From the current financial year the CEGB has become a co-funder of the programme.

TRANSPORT

Section 8 Grants

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he is satisfied with the operation of the section 8 grants system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: Yes, the scheme is a major Government/industry partnership to help the environment and the results are impressive.

London Underground

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met the chairman of London Regional Transport to discuss the future development of the London Underground system.

Mr. David Mitchell: My right hon. Friend last met Sir Keith Bright on 14 December 1987, when a number of matters concerning London Regional Transport and the prospects for its main businesses were discussed.

Ferry Boarding Passes

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress he has made in his discussions with ferry operators on the use of boarding passes.

Mr. David Mitchell: The Government issued draft proposals on 4 November 1987 to require the use of boarding cards and a meeting was held with ferry operators on 21 December to discuss these proposals. I now expect orders to be laid before Parliament during February.

Radioactive Materials (Transportation)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, further to his answer to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby on 14 January, Official Report, column 358, whether radioactive materials from Sellafield are flown by air under international regulations; where they go to outside the United Kingdom; and what representations he has made to the International Atomic Energy Agency in the light of its current review.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department does not collect detailed information on individual consignments but I understand that radioactive materials from Sellafield are transported by air to France and in very small sample quantities to one or two other European countries. The United Kingdom will play a full part in the IAEA review. We have expressed no initial views.

Buses (Concessionary Fare Schemes)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what provision he intends to make, in his plans for deregulation of London buses, for maintaining on all buses concessionary fares and passes for retirement old-age pensioners; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: Detailed plans for deregulation of buses in London have not yet been made. We shall be giving close attention to the arrangements for concessionary travel.

Trams

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to encourage the reintroduction of tramways into any cities or towns in Great Britain.

Mr. David Mitchell: Outside London it is for local authorities to consider any passenger transport needs in their areas and, if they judge it appropriate, to work up proposals for the reintroduction of tramways or the provision of light rail systems. My Department is already in touch with a number of local authorities and others who are formulating proposals for tramways and light rail systems. Where an application for Government funding for a particular scheme is made, this is considered on its merits. It is also open to the private sector to promote schemes and there may often be useful scope for private sector participation in schemes promoted by local authorities, such as the Greater Manchester light rail system on which I made an announcement on 18 January at column 533 in reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Bury, North (Mr. Burt) and the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe (Mr. Morris).

Within London, the private sector is contributing some £68 million to the Bank extension of the Docklands Light Railway. The eastern extension to Beckton, subject to parliamentary approval, will be funded by the private sector out of the increased land values in the Royal Docks, attributable directly to the extension. My Department is involved in studies of the feasibility of further light rail developments, which will be considered on their economic merits.

Thames (Tunnel)

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he intends to promote a tunnel under the River Thames instead of a bridge as part of the proposed extension of the A406 to the A2; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Channon: The Department's proposals for a bridge across the Thames and counter-proposals for a tunnel were examined at the public inquiry into the East London river crossing. I have recently received the inspector's report, which is at present being considered.

London-Sheffield Railway Line

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the future planned investment for the British Rail main line between London St. Pancras and Sheffield midland station.

Mr. David Mitchell: The future planned investment for a particular line is a matter for the board. BR operates an HST service on this line and I understand that BR has just completed a £25 million programme to modernise the signalling on the Midland main line.

Roads

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the implications for his Department's (a) planning and (b) spending on roads of recent projections published by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys that East Anglia will have in the next 13 years the greatest proportionate population increase of both people moving in and of new births of any English region.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Projections by OPCS are taken into account along with other factors in the Department's forecasts of local traffic growth. The forecasts play an important part in the assessment of need and priority when determining how best to use the resources available for providing new and improved roads. They are revised regularly as more up-to-date information, such as the recently published figures, becomes available. The forecasts are taken into account when the Department is considering additions to the national programme of trunk and motorway improvements.

M2/A2 Roads

Mr. Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give urgent consideration to the capacity of the M2/A2 roads between the M25 motorway and Dover, and what recent studies have been undertaken on those routes.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Following a study, a scheme to widen the present dual two-lane section of the M2 between junctions 1 and 3 was added to the programme last year. Work to provide hard shoulders on the A2 from the London boundary to the M2, phased over a six-year period to 1991, will continue. No other major improvements to the A2/M2 route are planned at present. The position will be kept under review.

Heavy Goods Vehicles

Mr. Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many heavy goods vehicles from abroad are currently checkweighed each month; what proportion of the total number this represents; and what proportion are found to be overweight.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Monthly statistics are not available. The Department expects to weigh some 8,800 foreign vehicles during the current financial year. This represents nearly 3 per cent. of the incoming foreign vehicle movements. Many vehicles are regular visitors, which increases the probability of being weighed at some time during the year. About 24 per cent. of the vehicles weighed are found to be overloaded. Checking is targeted on vehicles likely to be overweight.

Pilotage

Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will now announce the appointed day under the Pilotage Act 1987.

Mr. David Mitchell: My right hon. Friend will announce the appointed day as soon as possible; it seems certain to be in the second half of this year. In setting a date it is necessary to take account of progress made with the preparation of schemes for the winding-up of the existing pilotage authorities, as well as to the need to avoid delay to the implementation of the Act.

Cross-London Rail Link

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what response he made to the proposals of the British Railways Board contained in the booklet "Cross-London Rail Link", published in November 1980; and what study he has made of these proposals as a means of resolving current problems of congestion on London rail services.

Mr. David Mitchell: The Department did not comment formally on the BR document in 1980. No proposals were submitted by the board, and it was clear that considerably more work was required to establish the costs and benefits of the project. It would be for it to consider reviving this work in the first instance if it believed it was a cost-effective way of relieving congestion on rail services.

Air Agreements

Mr. Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about the bilateral liberalised air agreements he has made in 1987, and on the agreements he expects to make in the current year.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 22 January 1988]: The major air services achievements in 1987 have been the adoption of the European Community liberalisation measures and the negotiation of a liberal air services agreement with Canada; further liberalisation was also agreed with the Scandinavian countries. Our objectives for 1988 include building on the European Community measures with our bilateral partners.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

DROPS

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether the Government, as vendors of Leyland trucks to DAF, gave any undertaking or warranty in respect of Government contracts yet to be performed, including the demountable rack off-loading pick-up systems contract; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The commercial aspects of the merger of Leyland Trucks and Freight Rover with DAF of Holland were a matter for the Rover Group. Neither they nor Her Majesty's Government gave any warranties of undertakings on future business.

English Industrial Estates

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what will be the level of funding by English Industrial Estates in non-inner areas in 1988-89.

Mr. Atkins: In 1987-88 English Estates planned programme in the assisted areas was increased from £33·5 million to £37 million. In the event, through increased levels of asset sales, they are likely to achieve a record programme of £47 million. In 1988-89 we have asked them to plan for a programme £5 million higher than this year's — £42 million. In practice we expect that they may exceed this figure and we have authorised them to spend up to £49 million if they can generate the necessary funds from their own resources.

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what the future role of English Industrial Estates will be outside the inner city areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: My Department's White Paper of 12 January made clear that English Estates will continue to provide industrial and commercial premises in the assisted areas where there is no prospect of private sector provision.

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what will be the level of development commitment to (a) the county of Durham and (b) Easington by English Industrial Estates in the years 1988-89 and 1989-90.

Mr. Atkins: The levels of the development programmes for individual areas for 1988-89 are currently under consideration by English Estates. The levels for 1989-90 will not be established until next year.

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what developments have been carried out by English Industrial Estates in the county of Durham in the last five years, and at what cost.

Mr. Atkins: In the period January 1983 to January 1988 English Estates has completed 228 units in the county of Durham on behalf of my Department totalling 785,233 sq. ft. and costing £16·8 million.

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what level of support English Industrial Estates will direct towards inner city areas in 1988-89 and 1989-90.

Mr. Atkins: The level of the new managed workspace programme for the inner cities has not yet been finalised, but it will be additional to the planned expenditure under the existing programme for the assisted areas.

Washing Machines

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the total output of washing machines in Britain, the percentage exported and the share of the domestic market taken by imports in 1958, 1960, 1965, 1970, 1975 and each year from 1979 to 1987.

Mr. Alan Clark: What information is available is shown in the table.

British Telecom (Maintenance Service)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he anticipates Professor Carsberg will be able to complete his inquiries into the charges for British Telecom's premium maintenance service; on what date Professor Carsberg began his inquiries; what income British Telecom has derived from its interim half-rate charge to emergency organisations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: This is entirely a matter for the Director General of Telecommunications, Professor Bryan Carsberg. I understand he will be writing to the hon. Member.

Portable and Car Telephones

Mr. Amess: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has of how many (a) car and (b) portable telephones were purchased in Britain for each of the last three years.

Mr. Butcher: There are no official statistics but the information I have is as follows:

	Number of units
	1985	1986	1987
Mobile telephones	31,500	56,000	71,500
Portable telephones	10,500	24,000	38,500

NOTE: Includes trans-portable and hand portable.
Source: BIS MacKintosh Ltd.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) what information he has as to how many (a) portable telephones and (b) car phones are currently registered in Britain;

(2) what information he has as to how many (a) hand-held car-portable telephones and (b) voice-activated car-portable telephones are currently in use in Britain.

Mr. Butcher: My Department does not keep a register of portable telephones and car phones and does not keep statistics on the number of car-portable telephones in use in Britain. We understand that the mobile radio network operators keep their own register of numbers of subscriber units but these figures are commercially confidential. However, the companies estimate that there are approximately 50,000 portable telephones and 210,000 car phones in use. Separate estimates on hand-held car-portable telephones and voice-activated car-portable telephones are not available.

International Tropical Timber Organisation

Mr. Warren: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement of the results on the International Tropical Timber Organisation meeting held in Japan between 11 and 20 November 1987.

Mr. Atkins: The third session of the ITTO held in Japan in November 1987 continued the steady progress of the previous meetings characterised by growing co-operation between producer and consumer countries. Agreement was reached on the budget for 1988 and on the arrangements for ITTO's headquarters. Twelve projects and three pre-projects were approved.

Iran

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many trade missions went from the United Kingdom to Iran in 1977, 1978, 1984, 1985, 1986 and 1987.

Mr. Alan Clark: My Department provided financial support for six trade missions to Iran in 1977, five in 1978 and three in 1984. There were no dti-supported missions to Iran between 1985-87.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what representations have been made to him since 11 June 1987 about United Kingdom trade relations with Iran; and what are the prospects in 1988 of United Kingdom trade with Iran.

Mr. Alan Clark: No representations have been made since 11 June. United Kingdom exports to Iran are likely to remain constrained by Iran's acute shortage of foreign exchange due to the war and reduced oil revenue.

Vicuna Wool and Cloth

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) how much finished vicuna wool has been imported into the United Kingdom in each of the past five years;

(2) how much finished vicuna cloth has been exported from the United Kingdom to Hong Kong in each of the past five years.

Mr. Alan Clark: Vicuna wool and vicuna cloth are not separately identified in the Overseas Trade Statistics. But there are two triune headings ("Of alpaca, llama, vicuna") in the OTS broken down into, not carded or combed (5302 9400) and carded or combed tops (5305 3100). In the new HS-based United Kingdom tariff the distinction is carried through only for the not carded or combed (510210 300). Imports under the two headings mentioned above for January to November 1987 (latest figures available) were:

5305 3100	1,665,000

BP Shares

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) what action the Office of Fair Trading is intending to take in relation to the shareholding in BP by Kuwaiti interests;

(2) what steps he is taking to monitor compliance by Kuwaiti interests with the undertaking given on the acqusition of shares in BP.

Mr. Maude: The Kuwaiti Investment Office holding is being considered under our merger control procedures by the Director General of Fair Trading. He will advise my right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State whether there may be a "merger situation" which qualifies for investigation and, if so, whether it should be referred to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission for further investigation.

Inner City Task Forces

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what guidelines his Department has issued to civil servants administering funds allocated to inner city task force projects to ensure access to employment and training opportunities for residents of the task force areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The aims of the inner city task forces include:

providing more jobs for local people by identifying and removing impediments to their recruitment by local employers, and by encouraging local enterprise development; encouraging and facilitating enterprise by local people through the provision of enterprise training, financial and managerial assistance; improving the employability of local people, including those about to enter the labour market, by training programmes aimed at specific employment opportunities or identified gaps in the labour market.

Funds are available to the task forces to address these aims, and I am satisfied they are being spent accordingly.

Regional Development

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the expected outturn of expenditure in the next financial year on regional development grants in England, Scotland and Wales respectively.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The planned provision for expenditure on regional development grants in 1988-89 in England, Scotland and Wales is as follows:

	£ million
England	155·7
Scotland	58·3
Wales	63·4

These amounts are net of recoveries but gross of receipts from the European regional development fund.

Non-life Insurance

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, pursuant to the reply of the Under-Secretary of State to the hon. Member for Stroud (Mr. Knapman) on 13 January, Official Report, column 321, if he will make a statement setting out the elements of the proposed directive on non-life insurance which were agreed at the Internal Council meeting on 18 December.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 21 January 1988]: Yes. The most important element of the non-life insurance services directive agreed at the Internal Market Council on 18 December 1987 was the level of the thresholds above which a more liberal regime will be applied to cross-frontier transactions. Other important elements include the circumstances under which a company already established in a member state may do business there on a service basis, treatment of technical reserves (the provisions held by insurers to meet their underwriting liabilities), matching (the requirement of an insurer to hold a proportion of his assets in the currency of his risks), provisions relating to compulsory insurance and provisions relating to taxation of insurance premiums. The directive will also make certain amendments to the non-life insurance establishment directive.

The United Kingdom welcomes this agreement, which represents substantial progress in opening the EC market to cross-frontier transactions and should benefit both the producers and consumers of insurance. We hope the Council will now be able to reach an early common position on the directive.

Weights

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the current weights corresponding to those given in table F1 of the monthly review of external trade statistics, together with export unit values for each entry in the second quarter of 1987 using these weights.

Mr. Alan Clark [holding answer 22 January 1988]: Information for the calculation of current weights in 1987 is not yet available.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether the export weights used in table F8 of the monthly review of external trade statistics are the current weights; and if he will provide an estimate for the end of 1987 figures based on changes in exchange rates and on the rate of inflation.

Mr. Alan Clark [holding answer 22 January 1988]: The weights used in the table are 1980 base weights. International data on rates of inflation in the fourth quarter of 1987 are not available. Estimates based on changes in effective exchange rates only are in the following table.

Relative export unit value indices 1987 Q4 (Based on changes in effective exchange rates) 1980 = 100

DEFENCE

Plutonium

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent representations he has received on the use in nuclear weapons of plutonium produced under the civil programme.

Mr. Sainsbury: One letter has been received recently from a member of the public.

RAF Binbrook (Near Miss)

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish the report on the near miss which took place over RAF Binbrook in Lincolnshire between an Air UK civil airliner Short 360 and a Phantom fighter-bomber in April 1987.

Mr. Freeman: No. It is not the practice to publish reports on such incidents, the efficient investigation of which relies upon information volunteered on a confidential basis.

NATO and Warsaw Pact (Nuclear Weapons)

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will provide an updated estimate of the size of the nuclear weapons held by NATO and that of Warsaw pact countries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Information on the numbers of nuclear weapons held by NATO and the Warsaw pact is contained in annex A, figures 15 and 16 of the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1987". This will be updated in SDE 88.

Nuclear Installations (Decommissioning)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what, in current prices, was the expenditure in each of the last five financial years of the decommissioning and redevelopment of nuclear-related plant, sites and installations of his Department, and what was the expenditure on such decommissioning in the half year April to October 1987.

Mr. Sainsbury: Expenditure, in current prices, on the decommissioning of nuclear-related defence plant, sites and installations was as follows:

1982-83	5·5
1983-84	0·9
1984-85	2·5
1985-86	4·4
1986-87	5·0

April 1987 to October 1987 £2·4 million

Integrated Command Control System

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the ICCS command control computer system at High Wycombe strike command headquarters works to the requirements as set out in the original specifications.

Mr. Sainsbury: The relatively small element of the ICCS command control computer system for strike command headquarters at High Wycombe has been satisfactorily tested in a working configuration against the original specification and will be installed at High Wycombe as soon as building work permits.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the total cost of the ICCS command control computer system at High Wycombe.

Mr. Sainsbury: The High Wycombe element of the ICCS command and control computer system represents but a small part of the total and cannot be separately identified. The United Kingdom national contribution to the whole ICCS computer system is some £40 million.

Explosives Accidents

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what, for each year since 1975, was the number of explosives accidents and casualties resulting from Army training and exercises; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 14 January 1988]: The following table gives the figures according to Army records for accidents involving Army ammunition during Army training and exercises.

ENVIRONMENT

Nuclear Waste

69. Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to receive a report from United Kingdom Nirex concerning the dumping of low-level nuclear waste, following the recent publication of the consultative document "The Way Forward".

Mr. Moynihan: My right hon. Friend expects United Kingdom Nirex Ltd. to submit its recommendations for a deep dual-purpose disposal facility for low-level and intermediate-level radioactive waste by the end of the year.

Cap de la Hague Nuclear Plant

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what indication he has of the level of pollution in the Channel from the Cap de la Hague nuclear fuel reprocessing plant; what representations Her Majesty's Government have received expressing concern at the possibility of radioactive pollution crossing the Channel; what indication he has of French plans for expansion in nuclear reprocessing capacity at Cap de la Hague; what implications this has for safety in the United Kingdom; whether Her Majesty's Government propose to make any representations to the French Government on this matter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: Expansion of the Cap de la Hague facility is a matter for the French authorities. However, as a signatory to the Euratom treaty France has an obligation under article 37 to provide the Commission with such general data relating to any plan for the disposal of radioactive waste in whatever form as will make it possible to determine whether the implementation of such a plan is liable to result in contamination of the water, soil or airspace of another member state. Any information provided is reviewed by the Commission through a group of experts comprising representatives from member states. We understand that currently some refurbishment of the Cap de la Hague facility is taking place which will lead to a reduction in the discharge levels, in particular alpha bearing wastes.

Representations to Her Majesty's Government expressing concern at the possibility of radioactive pollution crossing the Channel have been received only from Guernsey. Her Majesty's Government have communicated this concern to the French authorities, who have taken note. I understand that French nuclear installations are subject to similar stringent regulatory requirements as those in the United Kingdom.

The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food carries out regular monitoring for radioactivity in the marine environment around the British Isles, including the Channel Islands, and the results are published annually and placed in the Library of the House. These studies indicate that the concentrations of radioactivity in the marine environment attributable to Cap de la Hague are of negligible radiological significance.

Ordnance Survey

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much public money has had to be underwritten by the Exchequer for Ordnance Survey commercial publications which have failed to make a profit since the introduction of the Ordnance Survey commercial arm in 1981.

Mr. Moynihan: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 18 November 1987, at column 681.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment why the copyright royalties for Ordnance Survey co-publication products are charged as a cost against the revenue from sales whereas the royalties to be paid by private sector map-makers are based on the quantity printed, regardless of the quantity sold.

Mr Moynihan: Copyright royalty on Ordnance Survey maps used in co-publications is a cost which, together with origination and production charges, is set against revenue from sales of the product for the purpose of assessing profitability and return on investment. The royalty cost figure itself is calculated on print quantities in the same way as that applied to publishers who reproduce Ordnance Survey material in their own publications.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will instruct the Ordnance Survey not to prevent national mapping, identified by the Serpell committee as being required in the national interest and paid for by the Exchequer, from being used by the private sector as the basis for commercial mapping which does not compete against the, so defined, national mapping.

Mr. Moynihan: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave on 20 November 1987, at column 682. Ordnance Survey does not unreasonably restrict the use of such mapping in these circumstances.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will now arrange for an independent investigation, as opposed to audit, of how Ordnance Survey allocated its costs for the production of the Temple Press-Ordnance Survey "Motoring Atlas of Great Britain" which was produced in 1982.

Mr. Moynihan: There are no plans to arrange such an investigation. I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave on 18 November 1987, at column 569.

Urban Development Corporations

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much has been spent by the urban development corporations in Tyne and Wear and Cleveland since their inception.

Mr. Trippier: Expenditure from 15 May 1987, when both urban development corporations were established, to the end of 1987 was £963,700 by Tyne and Wear development corporation and £2,211,800 by Teesside development corporation.

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the names of the chairman, vice-chairman and board members, and their remuneration, of the urban development corporations in Tyne and Wear and Cleveland.

Mr. Trippier: For information on membership I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Bedfordshire, North (Sir T. Skeet) on 7 July 1987, at column 134. The deputy chairman of Teesside development corporation has since been ennobled and is now Lord Dormand of Easington.

All the posts are part-time. The chairman of Teesside development corporation is paid £18,234 a year on the basis of a time commitment of two days per week. The chairman of Tyne and Wear development corporation is paid £13,676 a year on the basis of a time commitment of one and a half days per week. Both deputy chairmen are paid £6,188 a year on the basis of a time commitment of one day per week. Members are paid at a flat rate of £3,625 a year.

Storm Damage

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has over the next three years to provide financial assistance to help remedy the effects of the October 1987 hurricane.

Mr. Chope: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced on 8 December that the date by which work eligible for 75 per cent. special financial assistance must be completed had been extended to 1 March 1988. For 1987-88 he proposes to exclude from total expenditure, in effect to relieve from block grant losses, all storm-related revenue expenditure above the threshold defined in the Bellwin scheme whether or not eligible for special financial assistance, including revenue contributions to capital outlays made by the end of March 1988. For 1987-88, 1988-89 and 1989-90 he also proposes to exclude from total expenditure all debt charges incurred in respect of capital expenditure on storm damage up to the end of March 1989.

Water Authorities

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the capital spending plans for the English water authorities for 1988-89 will enable the authorities (a) to implement COPA part II, (b) to extend the list of bathing waters as specified under the European Community directive and (c) to meet by 1992 the European Community drinking water directive with particular reference to nitrates.

Mr. Moynihan: The public expenditure White Paper, published on 20 January, provides for investment of the English water authorities to rise by about 10 per cent. in volume terms over the next three years. This is in addition to the 40 per cent. volume increase since 1980-81. The amounts provided are slightly higher than shown in water authorities 1987 corporate plans which indicated significant progress would be made towards the implementation of COPA-II, and the EEC drinking water and bathing waters directive.

Rating Reform

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will list those organisations which will not be allowed to obtain copies of the community charge register; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: Under paragraph 14(3) of schedule 1 to the Local Government Finance Bill the Secretary of State may authorise the sale of an extract from the community charges register. In the light of representations that have been made, my right hon. Friend is considering whether and how that power should be exercised.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the community charge officer will be able to access sources of information other than those data held by a local authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 19 January to my hon. Friend the Member for Taunton (Mr. Nicholson), at column 601.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether his Department intends to hold a copy of all community charge registers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Perry Barr (Mr. Rooker), on 11 January at column 78.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to his answer of 13 January, Official Report, columns 278-9, he will add to the note placed in the Library tables updating figure F5 of Cmnd. 9714 showing the relationship of rates and poll tax to net household income on the same equivalent net income basis.

Mr. Howard: I have today placed in the Library a table updating figure F5 of the Green Paper, "Paying for Local Government", (Cmnd. 9714). The table shows the relationship of rates and the community charge to household income by bands of equivalent net income. The basis for adjustment to equivalent income figures is provided in paragraph F14 of the Green Paper. Even on this basis the community charge is a lower percentage of net income, both before and after rebates, for the lowest income group.

London Docklands Development Corporation

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment who is carrying out the duties and commitments previously carried out by John Mills, previous deputy chairman of the London Docklands Development Corporation.

Mr. Trippier: The chairman, board members and officers of the corporation.

Council House Sales

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many homes have been bought by council house tenants in each of the last five years in each district in Cheshire.

Mr. Waldegrave: Figures reported by each district are as follows:

Sales of dwellings to sitting tenants—Cheshire

District	1982-83	1983-84	1984-85	1985-86	1986-87
Chester	226	244	135	147	160
Congleton	233	176	103	121	135
Crewe and Nantwich	289	130	104	121	122

Vale Royal	526	285	289	216	196
Warrington	394	263	179	167	292

Housing Waiting Lists

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many households were housed by (a) Vale Royal and (b) Chester from their waiting lists through allocation procedures in each of the last five years.

Mr. Waldegrave: Local authorities' annual housing investment programme returns include the numbers of dwellings let on secure tenancies, in the years ending 31 March, to households under normal waiting list allocation procedures. Figures for individual authorities appear in column E9C of the "HIP1 all items print" for 1983, 1986 and 1987 and in column D9C for 1984 and 1985; copies of all these documents are in the Library.

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many landlords were recorded on local authority housing waiting lists at a convenient date in each of the last five years in (a) Vale Royal and (b) Chester.

Mr. Waldegrave: This information is not available.

Homelessness

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the number of homeless families in (a) Vale Royal and (b) Chester; and what has been the figure in each of the last five years.

Mr. Waldegrave: The number of households for whom the authorities reported accepting responsibility to secure accommodation under the homelessness provisions of Housing Acts, in each year from 1981 to 1986, appear in a table which is available in the Library.

Vale Royal reported 152 acceptances in January to September 1987 and Chester reported 110 acceptances in the first half of the year.

Empty Property (Wandsworth)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the number of empty council properties in the London borough of Wandsworth on 31 March 1987.

Mr. Waldegrave: According to information provided by the council, 1,078.

Rate Support Grant (Cumbria)

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the value in money terms of the domestic resource equalisation component in the rate support grant settlement to the county of Cumbria for 1984-85.

Mr. Chope: The value in 1984-85 is estimated to have been £15·6 million.

Hampstead Heath

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many consultation papers have now been issued by the London residuary body in respect of Hampstead Heath; what was the date of issue and the consultation period in each case; and when he now expects a conclusion to be reached.

Mr. Chope: The London residuary body has issued three consultation documents on the future of Hampstead Heath. The first was issued in July 1986 and was intended to provide a starting point for discussion about the future of the heath. The consultation period ended on 30 September 1986. The second was issued on 30 January 1987 and sought comments by 30 April 1987 on the main options which had emerged. The most recent was issued on 11 January this year. It sets out further details of the current options and asks for comments by 19 February. As I stated in my answer on 20 January, at column 758, the LRB expects to make its recommendations to the Secretary of State thereafter with a view to a formal transfer of the heath as from 1 April 1989.

Leisure Facilities

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the originators of the 352 responses to the consultation paper "Competition in the Management of Local Authority Sport and Leisure Facilities"; and if he will place the responses in the Library.

Mr. Moynihan: The organisations and individuals who have responded to the consultation paper are as follows. We are confirming with them that they have no objection to the release of their replies and copies will be placed in the Library as soon as possible.

Water Meters

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what research has been done to design water meters which are unaffected by the abrasive qualities of water; and how often it will be necessary to remove and replace such water meters.

Mr. Moynihan: There is no evidence to suggest that water meters of the type used in Britain are affected by the abrasive quality of water, although, as part of the proposed metering trials, the in-service performance of meters will be carefully monitored. Current research suggests that meters have a lifespan of 10 to 15 years.

Game Licences

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many game licences were issued in each category during each of the last five years; what revenue was in each category, respectively; and what were the administrative costs involved.

Mr. Moynihan: The following table shows the numbers of game licences issued and the related revenue:

Game licences issued in England and Wales

Maen Valley Caravan Park, Falmouth

Mr. Mudd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will arrange for the local inquiry into the called-in-planning application of the proposed chalet development at Maen Valley caravan park, Falmouth, to be convened at the earliest possible date.

Mr. Waldegrave: Yes. I shall write to my hon. Friend to let him know the date when it is fixed.

The Firs, Mawla, Redruth, Cornwall (Planning Appeal)

Mr. Mudd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he hopes to publish his decision on the recommendations of the inspector, Mr. J. J. Tackley, following the public inquiry on 16 to 19 June 1987 into a planning appeal involving The Firs, Mawla, Redruth, Cornwall; and why it has taken so long to arrive at a decision.

Mr. Waldegrave: A heavy work load in the Department's planning inspectorate has delayed the inspector's report.

The report was submitted to the Secretary of State earlier this month and a decision will be issued as quickly as possible.

National Rivers Authority

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment to what extent the proposed regional managers for the National Rivers Authority will be answerable to (a) the central National Rivers Authority and (b) to the non-executive consultative committees; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: The National Rivers Authority will inherit water authorities' statutory obligation to consider the advice of regional fisheries advisory committees, and will also have a statutory obligation to consider the advice of the new regional river advisory committees. Regional staff of the National Rivers Authority will be responsible to the authority itself.

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any intention of creating regional National Rivers Authority boards.

Mr. Moynihan: As the December policy statement made clear, the National Rivers Authority will have a strong regional management structure. No decisions have yet been taken about the internal management organisation of the National Rivers Authority.

East Anglia

Mr. Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the implications for his Department's (a) planning and (b) spending on measures to protect the environment of recent projections published by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys that East Anglia will have in the next 13 years the greatest proportionate population increase of both people moving in and of new births of any English region.

Mr. Waldegrave: Both the plans and expenditure of bodies concerned with the protection of the environment, are subject to regular procedures of review and revision.

I am sure that at the next occasion for review the bodies concerned, including where appropriate my Department, will want to take into account revised population projections from the OPCS wherever they are relevant to their proposals.

Expenditure

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the estimated outturn net and gross capital expenditure, in total, by region, for each year from 1981-82 to 1986-87, with the comparable planned figures for 1987-88 and 1988-89.

Mr. Ridley: Planned figures for estimated net outturn and gross capital expenditure by region for 1987-88 and 1988-89 are not available. Estimated outturn net and gross capital expenditure by region for the period 1981-82 to 1986-87 are not readily available on a basis comparable with the planning figures.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the planned, budgeted and outturn net and gross capital expenditure, in total, for each year from 1981-82 to 1988-89.

Mr. Ridley: The figures for gross and net capital expenditure on a public expenditure basis (that is DOE/LA1) are as follows. Data on budgets are not available.

Capital expenditure in DOE/LA1

	Gross capital expenditure		Net capital expenditure
	Plan £ million	Outturn £ million	Plan £ million	Outturn £ million

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will publish the capital allocation to each local authority, within each expenditure block and in total, in 1987-88 and 1988-89, showing the percentage change for each authority between the two years in their total allocation;

(2) if he will publish the capital allocation in total to the local authorities within each region, by expenditure block, in 1987-88 and 1988-89, showing the percentage change for each region.

Mr. Ridley: Tables 1 and 2 give capital allocations (issued) by expenditure block in 1987-88 and 1988-89 by region. Tables 3 and 4 showing the information by local authority will be placed in the Library of the House shortly.

Comparison of year-on-year total allocations is not meaningful because only £1·3 million (0·3 per cent.) urban programme allocations have been issued in 1987-88 and no urban programme allocations have been issued for 1988-89. A significant proportion of the total allocations excluding urban programme has also not been issued: £70 million (2·6 per cent.) and £250 million (9·5 per cent.) in 1987-88 and 1988-89 respectively.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will publish proposals for the reform of capital expenditure control.

Mr. Ridley: When I am ready.

Palace of Westminster

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he is contemplating any form of sprinkler protection against fire risks in the Palace of Westminster.

Mr. Chope: There is already a system of sprinkler protection in the car park beneath New Palace Yard. There are no proposals to install sprinklers elsewhere.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the average winter temperatures when the House is sitting of the Members' Tea Room, the Strangers' Cafeteria, the Members' Cafeteria, the Harcourt Room, the Members' Dining Room, the Strangers' Dining Room, the Library and the Committee rooms.

Mr. Chope: Temperatures are not recorded continuously, so information is not available in the form requested. When the House is sitting, readings are taken at 9 am, 11 am, 2 pm and 7 pm in all the rooms listed except the Committee rooms, where the 7 pm readings are omitted, and the Harcourt Room, where no readings are taken.

During the period 2 November 1987-15 January 1988 the minimum temperature recorded was 58°F and the maximum 75°F. Both readings were taken in Committee rooms.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the average cost of heating for the Palace of Westminster for each of the last five years.

Mr. Chope: Expenditure on fuel for the parliamentary estate has been:

1982-83	769,169
1983-84	748,282
1984-85	821,951
1985-86	909,957
1986-87	901,051

It is not possible to identify separately the costs which relate specifically to the Palace of Westminster. Nor is it possible to exclude expenditure on gas for cooking, or electricity for lighting and appliances.

Greater London Council (Seaside and Country Homes)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total number of the Greater London Council's seaside and country homes likely to be disposed of to the North British Housing Association.

Mr. Chope: A total of 3,443.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if any of the former Greater London Council's seaside and country homes have been disposed of by the London residuary body.

Mr. Chope: A total of 24 have been sold under the right to buy.

London Residuary Body

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, further to his reply of 20 January, Official Report, column 758, if he will detail for each of the services there listed, the potential successor body with which the London residuary body is negotiating and the current stage of the negotiation, together with the looked-for completion date for transfer.

Mr. Chope: The housing association mortgages remaining with the London residuary body are the subject of the London Government Reorganisation (Housing Association Mortgages) (No. 2) Order currently before the House, which provides for transfer by 30 March 1988.

I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 20 January at column 758, with regard to Hampstead Heath.

It is the responsibility of the London residuary body to negotiate successor bodies as appropriate for the other services listed in my reply of 20 January, at column 758.

Vicuna Wool

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has about the importation of vicuna wool into the United Kingdom during the past five years.

Mr. Moynihan: Except for one consignment of yarn in February 1983 from a European country to which it had been legitimately imported prior to 1975, no permits have been issued for the import of vicuna wool into the United Kingdom during the past five years.

Boundary Commission

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to how many submissions or other representations had been received at 31 December 1987 by the Local Government Boundary Commission for England, in relation to each of the metropolitan districts in Merseyside, Greater Manchester, South Yorkshire and West Yorkshire in connection with the current Boundary Commission reviews which started on 1 September 1987.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 22 January 1988]: None. It is for the commission to consider such representations and to report to my right hon. Friend when it considers it is in a position to do so. At this stage, the Department has no need of such information.

Faslane and Coulport

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many civilians residing in Dumbarton district are presently employed on the expansion of facilities at Faslane and Coulport.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 11 January 1988]: I understand from the contractors and consultants concerned that about 800 of their employees on the Clyde submarine base development have addresses in Dumbarton district. In addition, about 100 civilian Government employees engaged full-time on the development have addresses in Dumbarton district. Comparable figures for the Strathclyde region as a whole are about 1,650 and 100 respectively.

Olympic Games, Seoul

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consideration he has given to the safety of United Kingdom competitors when they attend the summer Olympic Games in Seoul, in the light of the current civil unrest in South Korea; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: The Department and the Foreign and Commonwealth Office will continue to review the situation in the Republic of South Korea during the period between now and the Olympic games in Seoul. I understand that the number of incidents has declined sharply since the presidential elections on 16 December 1987.

Whitefronted Geese

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many whitefronted geese on Islay will be shot under the terms of the licences issued; how the killings will be monitored; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I have been asked to reply.

It is not possible to state how many Greenland whitefronted geese will be shot under licence. As the primary purpose is to scare, few geese will be shot. The shooting will be monitored by my officials.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many Greenland whitefronted geese are currently on Islay; and what has been the population in each of the past five years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I have been asked to reply.

On the basis of data collected by the Wildfowl Trust, the population of whitefronted geese on Islay over the five-year period from 1982-83 to 1986-87 has risen as follows:

	Numbers
1982-83	3,300
1983-84	3,900
1984-85	4,600
1985-86	5,300
1986-87	6,300

In the current year the population has been estimated as being in excess of 7,270.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Soil Erosion

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he intends to discourage the growing of winter cereals on the grounds of increased risk of soil erosion; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Soil erosion caused by autumn rather than spring sowing of cereals, although significant in some localities, is not widespread and autumn sowing can be advantageous in other respects—for example, by helping to reduce the level of nitrate leaching from the soil. In these circumstances, I do not believe that any restrictions on the cultivations of winter cereals would be justified, although I would urge all cereals growers to follow ADAS advice designed to reduce soil erosion when preparing land for the sowing of winter cereals.

Dairy Farmers

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many dairy farmers in each county in England and Wales produce milk up to the quota; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The information requested by my hon. Friend is not immediately available, but I will reply to him as soon as possible.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many people are at present employed in agriculture in the United Kingdom; what were the corresponding figures for 1968 and 1978; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The figures requested are as shown and are taken from the results of the June census. Statistics on salaried managers, farmers, partners, and directors and their spouses were not collected in 1968 and therefore cannot be shown. The "All workers" category represents whole and part-time regular workers and seasonal or casual workers.

Farm Incomes

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his latest assessment of the prospects for farm incomes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply 22 October 1987, c.886]: A White Paper setting out the conclusions of the 1988 annual review of agriculture is being laid before Parliament today. The White Paper shows that gross output at current prices is expected to be much the same in 1987 as in 1986, partly reflecting the poor weather. Total inputs and the gross product of the industry are also very similar to the previous year. Aggregate farming income is estimated to have fallen by around 1½ per cent. to £1·404 million in 1987. There were marked variations over the United Kingdom as a whole with farming income forecast to have improved in 1987 in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland.

The White Paper includes fuller information than in previous years on the general financial position of the industry, distinguishing between type, size and tenure of farm businesses.

Council of Agriculture Ministers

Mr. Aspinwall: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the outcome of the Council of Agriculture Ministers' meeting on 18 and 19 January in Brussels; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor [pursuant to his reply, 21 January 1988, c. 835]: A further meeting of the Council of Agriculture Ministers took place over the weekend of 23 and 24 January in Brussels at which I represented the United Kingdom. The meeting continued discussions of measures to stabilise expenditure on the common agricultural policy. This was in preparation for the European Council meeting on 11 and 12 February which will be discussing the Community's future financing arrangements. No decisions were reached and a report is now going to the Foreign Affairs Council.

The German presidency proposed that the European Council should be asked only to give its general approval in principle to the need for stabilisers for products other than cereals, oilseeds and proteins and that the details should be left to subsequent discussion after the European Council had made its decisions on the future financing. I made it clear that the German president's approach on this was not acceptable to the United Kingdom and that it would not lead to an agreement at the European Council. On this aspect we were supported by seven other member states.

Much of the discussion centred on a text by the German presidency covering changes in the stabilisers for cereals and oilseeds which had been before the last European Council in Copenhagen in December.

For oilseeds, the changes amount to increases in the guaranteed quantities and an alteration in the formula for price adjustment if production exceeds these quantities. For cereals, the proposed guaranteed quantity is higher and the stabiliser mechanism based on a different approach which is less automatic and certain than that discussed in Copenhagen. Greater emphasis is now being given within the mechanism to the cereals co-responsibility levy, including an increase and changes in the method of applying it. I firmly resisted, supported by my Dutch colleague, attempts to water down this part of the package.

The Council also continued its consideration of the Commission's proposal for an enlarged set-aside scheme for arable land on the basis of a text prepared by the presidency. Some progress was made and, although certain issues remain to be settled, I believe that it should now be possible to reach agreement on this aspect of the package. The most important point in this context is that the German presidency has now accepted, as we insisted, that a set-aside scheme should be complementary to, and not a substitute for, stabilisers.

SCOTLAND

Consultants

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number of consultants by specialty in each health board of Scotland in 1979 and 1987, showing in each case how many consultants were on full-time National Health Service contracts in both years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information for 1979 in the form requested is not available except at disproportionate cost. The total number of consultants and the numbers with whole-time contracts by specialty and health board for 1980 and 1987 are shown in the tables.

Nurse Training

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much has been spent on nurse training in Scotland in each of the last 10 years; and how much has been spent by each of the health boards on nurse training in each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is as follows:

	Annual expenditure
	Colleges of nursing and midwifery etc.	Health boards
Year	£ million	£ million
1977-78	4·4	—
1978-79	4·8	—
1979-80	5·8	—
1980-81	7·7	—
1981-82	8·4	—
1982-83	9·7	—
1983-84	10·6	36·5
1984-85	11·5	39·2
1985-86	12·7	38·1
1986-87	15·7	38·3

The first column includes the salaries, national insurance and superannuation costs of nurse teachers and support staff at colleges of nursing and midwifery, including midwifery teachers in 1986-87 and the costs of the National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting for Scotland and its predecessors. The second column includes learners' national insurance, superannuation and salary costs, but makes no allowance for the service contribution made by learners during training, which varies according to the course and the particular college of nursing. Figures for expenditure on learners' remuneration for years prior to 1983-84 are not directly available, and figures for individual health boards are not held centrally.

Road Costs

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will show annual outturn expenditure 1980-81 to 1986-87, estimated expenditure for 1987-88 and forecast expenditure for 1988-89 and 1990-91, in real terms at current prices on (a) trunk road construction, (b) trunk road maintenance, (c) local road construction and (d) local road maintenance.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is set out in the table.

	Trunk road		Local road
Financial year	Construction	Maintenance[2]	Construction	Maintenance
1980-81	72·7	17·8	108·1	168·4
1981-82	74·1	30·6	126·5	166·2
1982-83	85·3	28·5	130·6	167·7
1983-84	74·2	34·7	128·0	170·2
1984-85	86·4	29·9	122·9	163·2
1985-86	87·4	30·9	133·5	155·8
1986-87	81·2	36·1	128·6	156·1
1987-88[3]	89·5	39·2	[4]128·5	[5]165·5
1988-89[6]	[7]	[7]	[7]	[7]
1990-91[6]	[7]	[7]	[7]	[7]

[1] Figures for trunk roads revalued to constant 1987-88 prices using the roads output price index which is specifically designed for trunk road construction work. Figures for local roads have been revalued using GDP deflators.
[2] Includes structural, routine and winter maintenance.
[3] Estimate.
[4] Baseline provision.
[5] Local authority budget estimates of expenditure.
[6] Forecast.
[7] To be announced later this year.

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will show 1986-87 outturn expenditure, 1987-88 estimated expenditure and 1988-89 planned expenditure on (i) trunk roads, broken down into (a) new construction and improvement, (b) structural maintenance, and (c) routine maintenance, and (ii) local authority roads broken down into (a) new construction and improvements, and (b) maintenance, (iii) public transport administration and (iv) local authority car parks, broken down into (a) capital and (b) current (net), and (c) road safety in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is set out in the table:

	1986-87 Outturn[1]	1987-88 Estimated	1988-89 Planned[2]
1. Motorways and trunk roads
(a) New construction and improvement	79·2	89·5	[4]
(b) Structural maintenance	15·9	20·2	[4]
(c) Routine and winter maintenance	19·3	19·0	[4]
2. Local authority roads
(a) New construction and improvement	128·6	133·9	[4]
(b) Maintenance	156·1	172·5	[4]
3. Public transport administration[3]	25·1	27·8	[4]
4. Local authority car parks
(a) Capital	0·8	1·9	[4]
(b) Current (net)	—	—	[4]
5. Road safety in Scotland[3]	1·5	1·6	[4]

[1] Local authority outturn figures are provisional only.
[2] Local authority expenditure on administration of roads and transport services.
[3] Excludes expenditure by the Department of Transport on national road safety publicity. Expenditure on new construction and improvements and on maintenance also contributes to road safety, as do various specialist staff costs.
[4] To be announced later this year.

Vehicle Mileage

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the percentage change in vehicle mileage on roads in Scotland since 1982.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: There has been a 15 per cent. increase in vehicle mileage on roads in Scotland between 1982 and 1986, the latest year for which figures are available. The figure relates to motorways, all-purpose trunk roads and principal local roads. Statistics are not held centrally for other classes of road.

Electricity Prices

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received from foundries and other intensive energy users in Scotland about the flexibility of electricity prices; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: I have received one such representation, to which a response will be made shortly. Electricity tariffs for all categories of consumers, including intensive energy users, are a matter for the electricity boards.

Renal Failure

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide the figures, for the last five available years in Scotland, of patients diagnosed as suffering from end-stage renal failure for the first time; and if he will give for the same years the numbers dying from end-stage renal failure, or complications arising from such failure.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information on the number of new patients diagnosed as suffering from end-stage renal failure is not centrally available. However, all such patients who are referred to consultants, and would in their clinical judgment benefit from renal dialysis, receive the treatment. The number of new patients being accepted for dialysis in the last five years is as follows:

	Number
1983	175
1984	213
1985	225
1986	245

Specific information on the number of deaths arising from end-stage renal failure or complications from such failure is not centrally available.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide the figures for the last five available years of the average numbers of patients receiving kidney dialysis treatment in Scotland, showing the average or median number of months they have been on such treatment.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The number of patients receiving kidney dialysis treatment in all its forms in Scotland is as shown. Information on the length of time they have been receiving treatment is not centrally available.

	Number
1982	521
1983	579
1984	631
1985	615
1986	658

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide, for the last five available years, the figures of successful kidney transplants performed in Scottish hospitals, showing how many such operations were being conducted on patients for a second or subsequent time.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The number of kidney transplant operations carried out in Scotland is as shown. Information on how many of these operations were successful, and how many involved second or subsequent grafts, is not available.

Year	Number
1984	149
1985	126
1986	111
[1]1987	102

[1]Provisional.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the cost, in terms of equipment resources, staff, drugs and supplies of kidney dialysis treatment in Scotland (a) in total, (b) per patient month or year and (c) per patient over the course of treatment.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information sought on the cost of treatment by kidney transplant is not centrally available.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the current cost, in terms of equipment, resources, staff, drugs and supplies, of kidney transplants in Scotland (a) in total per year, (b) per transplant carried out and (c) per patient per annum after transplantation.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The cost of treating patients by renal dialysis is provisionally estimated to be for the current year as shown:

	Cost per patient per year £	Total cost per year £
Hospital dialysis	17,900	4,545,900
Home dialysis	9,100	1,635,100
Continuous ambulatory peritoneal dialysis	7,900	2,346,000
		8,545,000

The length of time on treatment varies between patients, and no information is centrally available about cost per patient over the course of treatment.

Intensive Care Units

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide the figures, for the last five available years, of (a) the number of intensive care units which exist or have existed in Scottish hospitals, (b) the number of patients who have been dealt with by the units concerned in these years, (c) the numbers of patients who have died in these units in these years and (d) the number of kidneys which have been made available for transplant because of these deaths.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information on the number of intensive care units in Scotland, the number of patients dealt with by these units and the number of patients who have died in these units is not centrally available in the form sought.

Organ Donation

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will authorise the compilation of a survey of medical staff in Scotland concerning their attitudes to organ donation for transplant, with particular reference to those concerned with dying patients and their attitudes to asking relatives about potential organ donation.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No.

Dental Surgeons

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the number of general dental surgeons in practice in Scotland in each of the last 10 years, showing a breakdown of these numbers per 100,000 population in each of Scotland's health board areas.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is set out in the table. The numbers of general dental practitioners (as they are now known) are the numbers in contract with their health board as at 30 September each year. The numbers of dentists per 100,000 population are based on population figures at 30 June each year except for 1987 where the 1986 population figure is used.

[1] Notional figures.

Pharmacists

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the total number of pharmacists in Scotland in each of the past 10 years, giving a breakdown per 100,000 population in each of Scotland's health board areas.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is not available centrally in the form requested. The table sets out the number of registered pharmacists in Scotland for each of the past 10 years. "Scottish Health Statistics", copies of which are in the Library, contain from 1979 onwards by health board the information requested in respect of hospital pharmacists and from 1981 onwards the number of pharmacies contracted to provide primary care pharmaceutical services.

	Number of registered pharmacists
1977	2,800
1978	2,832
1979	2,842
1980	2,822
1981	2,929
1982	2,960
1983	3,000
1984	3,048
1985	3,070
1986	3,092

Alcoholism

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if the definition of alcoholism for the purposes of statistics on the treatment of alcoholism among prisoners changed between 1985 and 1986.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information on numbers of inmates in Scottish penal establishments treated for alcoholism in 1986 (as reported in the annual "Prisons in Scotland" report for 1986) was collected in the same way and on the same basis as figures for 1985 and earlier years.

The substantial fall in the number of male inmates treated for alcoholism in 1986 continued a similar downward trend evident in earlier years as follows:

Male inmates treated for alcoholism in Scottish penal establishments

Year	Inmates
1984	1,560
1985	1,165
1986	649

Education Expenditure

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the average expenditure per pupil in (i) primary and (ii) secondary schools in (a) Scotland, (b) Belgium, (c) the Federal Republic of Germany, (d) France, (e) Holland, (f) Denmark and (g) Spain.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Comparable figures are not readily available.

Amusement Arcades

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will take urgent steps to stop the proliferation of amusement arcades in urban centres in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on 9 December 1987, at column 420, to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Shettleston (Mr. Marshall).

School Management

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many school boards would be created under his proposals contained in the consultative paper "School Management and the Role of Parents" in (a) the Tayside regional council area and (b) the Dundee district authority area.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Consultation on the proposals in "School Management and the Role of Parents" showed that there was a widespread wish to have a separate school board for each primary, secondary and special school in Scotland. In the conclusions we recently announced, we have agreed to meet that wish. There are 251 schools in the Tayside regional council area of which 73 are in the Dundee district; each would have its own board.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many representatives from Tayside regional council would be required to take part in the meetings of the school boards proposed by his consultative paper "School Management and the Role of Parents".

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No education authority representatives would be required to attend school board meetings. In the light of comments made by authorities in response to the consultative paper, the Government have concluded that education authorities should have a right, but not a duty, to be represented at school board meetings by a non-voting assessor.

Waiting Lists

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number of patients awaiting (a) urgent and (b) non-urgent operations in (i) the Tayside health board area and (ii) the Dundee district authority area, on the latest available figures; and if he will give the corresponding figures for the previous six and 12 months, respectively.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Emergency cases are dealt with immediately and information is not available for local authority areas. The numbers of people on waiting lists for in-patient hospital treatment in Tayside health board were as follows:

	Number
31 March 1986	6,658
30 September 1986	6,214
31 March 1987	5,653

Cervical Cancer

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how the existing laboratories for the testing of cervical cancer are distributed in the Tayside health board area.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: There are two such laboratories, one in Dundee royal infirmary and the other in Perth royal infirmary.

Crime Prevention

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much the Tayside police force spent on crime prevention projects in cash terms and real terms at 1986-87 prices for each year since 1979; how much of its total budget this represents; and how much it is proposed to spend next year.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Information about expenditure by individual police forces on local crime prevention projects is not held centrally.

Housing

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the most recent figures available to him on the number of households registered on the housing waiting list in the Dundee district authority area who have remained on the waiting list for (a) less than one year, (b) between one and two years, (c) between two and three years, (d) between three and four years, (e) between four and five years and (f) over five years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is not available centrally.

Rented Houses

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate how many privately owned dwellings in the Dundee district authority area suitable for letting are not available for letting.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The available information on unoccupied private sector dwellings was published in "Scottish Development Department Statistical Bulletin HSIU No. 1. Unoccupied Dwellings: a survey following the 1981 census", a copy of which is available in the House Library.

Industrial Projects

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate how many factories and industrial sites in (a) the Tayside region and (b) the Dundee area are standing empty or unused.

Mr. Lang: For the latest information readily available centrally on vacant factories I refer the hon. Member to my answer given to the hon. Member for East Lothian (Mr. Home Robertson) on 17 November at column 541.

Provisional figures for Tayside region at 31 March 1987 show 64 sites allocated for industry of which 26 were in Dundee city district.

Islay (Geese)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of the alleged damage to Islay caused by Greenland whitefronted geese.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The number of Greenland whitefronted geese wintering on Islay has more than doubled in recent years and large flocks of up to 500 birds are causing serious damage to grassland on certain farms outwith the sanctuary areas.

Labour Statistics

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each local authority ward in the Dundee district council area the number unemployed at the latest available date; and what are the corresponding figures for each year since 1979.

Mr. Lang: Unemployment statistics on a local authority ward basis are available only from 1983. The following table shows the number of unemployed claimants in each local authority ward in city of Dundee district for December 1987 (the latest date for which information is available) and the corresponding figures in 1983, 1984, 1985 and 1986.

Forestry

Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consideration he has given to the report "Birds, Bogs and Forestry: the Peatlands of Caithness and Sutherland", published by the Nature Conservancy Council; whether he proposes to approve further forestry planting in Caithness and Sutherland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: I have today written to the chairman of the Nature Conservancy Council in the following terms:

"As you know, the Government have been considering carefully your Council's report 'Birds, Bogs and Forestry: the Peatlands of Caithness and Sunderland' and your representations about the relationship between afforestation and nature conservation in the area. You will be aware that helpful discussions have taken place between Departmental and NCC officials to clarify certain aspects of the report. Officials have also had the benefit of seeing some of the detailed scientific material which will in due course be incorporated in your report 'The Flow Country'.

It would clearly not be right to attempt to reach final conclusions on this matter at the present time. First, 'The Flow Country' has not yet been finalised. Second, the Highland Regional Council have, as you will be aware, set up a working party to propose a land use strategy for the area. The working party is currently assessing evidence and is likely to report next month. We have, however, sought to form an interim view on your findings in order to consider their implications for forestry in the short term. In this, we have been helped by the receipt of interim responses to your report from the Highland Regional Council, the Highlands and Islands Development Board, the Countryside Commission for Scotland and the Crofters Commission.

We acknowledge the important service which your Council have rendered by highlighting the exceptional nature conservation interest occurring in Caithness and Sutherland. We agree that much of the two counties is of national and international importance for conservation. We do not think, however, that the whole of the area identified in 'Birds, Bogs and Forestry' can be considered to be of uniformly high importance. Indeed, the detailed evidence contained in your own work suggests that there are varying degrees of conservation significance, and we believe therefore that it is possible to identify a selection of key areas which should be safeguarded, amounting in total to a very substantial are a of peatland. These would require a substantial expansion of the SSSI network and, taken together with the sizeable area within existing SSSIs, might amount to around half of the total unafforested peatland area of some 350,000 hectares. We envisage that these areas would, in particular, include the most important bog systems and bird habitats, especially on the wet flows.

It seems to us that some new planting needs to take place in Caithness and Sutherland both in order to contribute to the overall national forestry planting programme and to maintain local employment in forestry and maximise the opportunities for future investment in wood-processing industry. We consider, moreover, that the evidence points to the view that Caithness and Sutherland can accommodate some further afforestation without affecting the conservation significance of the area as a whole.

There is, of course, no question of any forestry approval being given or grant offered without full regard to the conservation case and, as you know, the consultation arrangements which currently apply throughout Caithness and Sutherland provide for disputed cases to be referred, if necessary, to me. I have seven such cases before me at the moment as a result of NCC objections. I have advised the Forestry Commissioners that I support their view that grant should be offered for a substantial part of the area subject to application at Limekiln and Whitewell. I have examined the available evidence carefully and have concluded that the conservation evidence is not sufficient to justify opposing forestry over the very large tract of land involved. However, I am aware that the southern part of this site does contain some wetland and pool complexes which are of considerable interest and I have asked the Commissioners to seek NCC's detailed views before determining the precise boundary of the area which may be approved for planting.

I have also decided to support the Forestry Commissioners' intention to approve the applications at Jubilee Wood (Shinside), and Loubcroy, subject to certain modifications suggested by the Commission's Wildlife and Conservation Officer in respect of the Jubilee Wood application. I am proposing a further discussion with NCC about areas of peatland that might be excluded from planting at Sciberscross where, however, I have given general approval to the planting proposals. All these are areas outside the main region of prime peatland, and not of outstanding intrinsic conservation value according to the information before me.

The remaining three cases, on the other hand, do lie in the heart of the flow country and involve land comprising peatlands and wader habitat of high quality and I have asked for these cases to be referred back to your Council for a decision on future designation. I shall be considering further cases in the next few months and it may be appropriate to give additional approvals. Each case will, however, be scrutinised with great care, and the conclusions I have reached on the present tranche should not be taken as establishing a presumption in favour of forestry on other sites in their vicinity.

The present arrangement under which consultations with your Council on forestry grant applications extend to the whole of Caithness and Sutherland is, of course, an interim measure only, pending the more precise definition of the conservation interest and the establishment of the appropriate measures to protect it. It is therefore essential that high priority is given by NCC to the work of identifying those parts of the area which are of prime importance for nature conservation so that they can be safeguarded.

With regard to the means of protection, we consider that the notification of SSSI's is the only satisfactory approach to the conservation of areas of prime importance in Caithness and Sutherland, though your suggested approach of seeking to make ad hoc management agreements may provide a convenient means of protection where this is necessary to secure protection in advance of the SSSI programme. While the selection of SSSIs is, of course, ultimately a matter for NCC, it would I believe be helpful in this case for the various officials involved within NCC, the Departments concerned and the Highland Regional Council to get together at an early date so that the site selection process can be tied in with the on-going work of the HRC working party, with the application of the forestry consultation procedures and with the assessment of the financial implications arising from potential management agreements.

I shall arrange for my officials to get in touch with yours to discuss the next steps.

I propose to make this letter public, along with an announcement about the forestry cases referred to above."

The letter refers to a number of forestry grant applications which are before me at the moment. I have advised the Forestry Commissioners that I am content for grant to be offered in the four cases listed, subject to further consultations with the Nature Conservancy Council about the boundary of the area to be planted in the first two cases and subject to some minor modifications to improve the planting design in the third case. These cases concern the following applications:

Proposed area to be planted

Location	(hectares)
Limekiln and Whitewell, Caithness	1,307
Sciberscross, Sutherland	790
Jubilee Wood, Shinside, Sutherland	19
Loubcroy, Sutherland	202

Prisons

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he will announce his plans on prisons and penal policy.

Mr. Rifkind: I made today a comprehensive statement on penal policy and the future operation of the Scottish prison service. I am arranging to have a copy of this statement placed in the Library.

Fine Defaulters

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many persons in 1986 were committed to prison in Scotland for default in payment of fines.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: In 1986 there were 10,626 receptions to penal establishments for fine default. This represents a reduction of 8 per cent. from the corresponding figure of receptions in 1985 (11,564) and relative to the number of persons fined by the courts there was also a decline to 74 per thousand in 1986 from the corresponding level in 1985 (of 78 per thousand). There was a particularly marked reduction in receptions in default of fines for less serious offences such as breach of the peace (down from 3,423 in 1985 to 2,918 in 1986) and drunkenness (down even more sharply from 631 in 1985 to 271 in 1986).

The average daily population of fine defaulters in 1986, however, was 329 or 5·9 per cent. of the total average population in penal establishments in 1986.

THE ARTS

Buildings (Maintenance and Refurbishment)

38. Mr. Martin: To ask the Minister for the Arts what priority he gives to the maintenance and refurbishment of the buildings under the responsibility of the Office of Arts and Libraries.

Mr. Luce: I attach a high priority to the maintenance and refurbishment of the buildings occupied by the institutions for which my Department is responsible.

I have increased next year's grant-in-aid to the 11 national museums and galleries for their building and maintenance programme to some £49 million. This represents an increase of more than 20 per cent. on the equivalent figures for the current year.

Northern Regional Arts Association

39. Mr. Ted Garrett: To ask the Minister for the Arts what information he has on the level of funding in 1988-89 for the Northern Regional Arts Association.

Mr. Luce: It is for the Arts Council to determine the level of funding of individual regional arts associations; the 1988-89 funding level for Northern Arts has not yet been announced.

Museums (Leicestershire)

40. Mr. Janner: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he has any proposals for the funding of museums in Leicestershire.

Mr. Luce: This is not a matter for me but for the responsible authority, whether public or private, in the case of each museum.

Theatre and Music (Youth Participation)

41. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Minister for the Arts what steps he is taking to encourage youth participation in the theatre and music in Britain.

Mr. Luce: The Arts Council and the regional arts associations encourage all subsidised theatre companies to develop policies for young people, and theatre-in-education schemes. The council does not, as a rule, give direct financial support to youth theatre companies and orchestras, but I have been encouraged to see that several such bodies have attracted very substantial sponsorship. They are doing excellent work.

Arts (Plural Funding)

42. Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he will make a statement on the concept of plural funding for the Arts.

Mr. Luce: I announced at Newcastle in July of last year the start of a long-term plan for the funding of the arts. The aim of the plan is to maintain the level of support from public funds in a way which encourages subsidised bodies in the performing arts, museums and libraries to become more self-reliant in their development and growth. My announcement last November of a substantial increase in arts funding for 1988-89 and the two subsequent years represented an important practical step towards the implementation of this plan. My announcement included specific provision for incentive schemes for the performing arts and for help to museums and galleries to improve their management and marketing.

Arts (Business Sponsors)

43. Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Minister for the Arts how many first-time business sponsors of the arts have been attracted by the business sponsorship incentive scheme so far; and what is his estimate for 1987-88 as a whole.

Mr. Luce: The scheme has attracted 618 first-time business sponsors since it began in 1984.

This includes 179 in 1987-88 and the figure for the complete year should be over 210.

Arts (Funding)

44. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister for the Arts what information he has on the 1988-89 budget for the Greater London Arts association.

Mr. Luce: The Arts Council has yet to announce its grant to Greater London Arts for 1988-89.

49. Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Minister for the Arts when he plans to meet the chairman and director of Greater London Arts to discuss its budget for 1988-89.

Mr. Luce: I would refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Hackney, South and Shoreditch (Mr. Sedgemore) earlier today.

45. Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he plans to meet the chairman of the Welsh Arts Council to discuss the level of funding for the arts in Wales in 1988-89.

59. Dr. Godman: To ask the Minister for the Arts when he plans to meet the chairman of the Scottish Arts Council to discuss the level of funding for the arts in Scotland in 1988-89.

Mr. Luce: I expect to be meeting the chairmen during the year, and funding is likely to feature in our discussions.

52. Ms. Walley: To ask the Minister for the Arts what information he has on the level of funding for the arts in the west midlands in 1988-89.

Mr. Luce: The Arts Council has yet to announce its allocation of grant to West Midlands Arts for 1988-89. The chairman will keep me informed of its decisions.

53. Mr. Barron: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he plans to meet the chairman of Yorkshire Arts to discuss the level of funding for the arts in Yorkshire in 1988-89.

Mr. Luce: Yorkshire Arts' grant allocation for 1988-89 has yet to be announced, but funding will certainly feature in any discussions I have with the chairman this year.

58. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he plans to visit Cumbria to discuss the funding for the arts.

Mr. Luce: I have no immediate plans to do so, but I expect to be meeting the chairman of Northern Arts this year and funding in the region is likely to feature in our discussion.

61. Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Minister of the Arts what information he has on the level of funding for the arts in Scotland in 1988-89.

Mr. Luce: The Arts Council expects to be in a position to announce the Scottish Arts Council's allocation shortly. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland makes a number of grants to national institutions and other arts bodies in Scotland, and these, too, will be announced shortly.

Community Plays

46. Sir Jim Spicer: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will encourage the expansion of the concept of community plays; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: The Arts Council sees the large-scale community play, with a cast of local people and a small core of professional directors, designers and writers, as an important part of drama provision. The council encourages the creation of these plays through its theatre writing scheme; the productions themselves are generally funded by local authorities, with assistance and advice from the regional arts associations.

Libraries (Funding)

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Minister for the Arts what steps he is taking to increase the funding of libraries.

Mr. Luce: It is the responsibility of local library authorities to decide what resources to allocate to public libraries. I hope, however, to provide new opportunities to help public libraries expand by allowing them to charge for a wider range of additional and specialised services. I shall be issuing a consultative paper on how this might best be done. In addition, as I announced in a written answer on 8 December, at column 952, I have set aside £250,000 a year for three years for the establishment of an incentive scheme to encourage new developments designed to extend or improve the public library service in England.

Museums and Galleries (Funding)

Mr. Summerson: To ask the Minister for the Arts how his policy of incentive funding applies to museums and galleries.

Mr. Luce: Museums and galleries, like other organisations funded by the arts programme, will have an incentive to strengthen their financial position.

The figures which I have announced for the next three years give the institutions a firm base on which to develop and pursue their plans. I have renewed for the next three years my undertaking to the national institutions that they may retain any additional receipts they earn in addition to those which were assumed at the time of their grant-in-aid allocations.

Within my allocations for running costs to the national museums and galleries, I have earmarked a total of £0.57 million to help them through training and in other ways to improve their management and marketing. I have also made provision for the Museums and Galleries Commission to assist other museums and galleries in the same way.

In announcing the increase of £6 million, or over 20 per cent. in the building and maintenance programme of the national museums and galleries in 1988-89 I made it clear that the allocation of the margin amounting to over £12 million in 1989-90, and nearly £15 million in 1990-91, would depend partly upon the extent to which the institutions can raise money from other sources towards the achievement of their plans. A number of institutions have shown great initiative already in attracting private funds for new developments.

Ffotogallery (Cardiff)

50. Mr. Boyes: To ask the Minister for the Arts what plans he has to visit the Ffotogallery in Cardiff.

Mr. Luce: I shall be visiting Wales in March and may be able to take in the work of the gallery, time permitting.

Public Libraries

51. Ms. Quin: To ask the Minister for the Arts what plans he has for expansion of the public library service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: I hope to provide new opportunities to help public libraries expand by allowing them to charge for a wider range of additional and specialised services. I shall be issuing a consultative paper on how this might best be done. In addition, as I announced in a written answer on 8 December, at column 95, I have set aside £250,000 a year for three years for the establishment of an incentive scheme to encourage new developments designed to extend or improve the public library service in England.

British Council

54. Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Minister for the Arts what representations he has received from British arts companies touring abroad concerning the effect on their activities of levels of funding for the British Council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: None. The funding of the British Council is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs.

Local Arts Groups (Cornwall)

55. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister for the Arts what representations he has received concerning support currently given to local arts groups within Cornwall.

Mr. Luce: None.

Tourism

56. Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Minister for the Arts what contribution tourism makes to the arts in Britain.

Mr. Luce: Tourism makes a big contribution. I cannot put a monetary value on it, but in recent years around three-quarters of overseas visitors to this country have visited a museum and half have attended a theatre or concert, and I believe that this trend will continue.

British Library Business Information Service

57. Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will explain the objectives of the British Library business information service.

Mr. Luce: The objectives of the British Library's business information service are:

(1) to contribute towards the building, monitoring and organising of an effective national reference collection of business literature; (2) to promote awareness of the information which resides within this collection, its potential value and effective methods for accessing it; (3) to provide specialist help to callers to the library who need to obtain business information; (4) to provide a free telephone inquiry for brief inquiries; (5) to offer, as a charged service, comprehensive and thoroughly researched answers to inquiries about markets, companies and products through access to the British Library's unique printed collections and utilising on-line databases.

Tate Gallery (Liverpool)

60. Mr. Burt: To ask the Minister for the Arts what special provisions he has made to help the new Tate gallery in Liverpool.

Mr. Luce: The Government have made a significant financial contribution to this important new development.

The capital cost of the new Tate gallery, Liverpool, has been met by a combination of public funds (OAL £0·5 million and Merseyside Development Corporation £5·1 million) and privately raised funds (£1·7 million from various benefactors).

The allocation of £6·3 million for the running costs of the Tate gallery, which I announced on 16 December, at columns 531-34, takes account of the needs of the new gallery in Liverpool. Comparing like with like, this represents an increase of 19 per cent. on the figure for the current year. No specific sum is earmarked within this total for the new Liverpool gallery as it is for the trustees and director of the Tate to decide on the disposition of the funds available to them.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Civil Service (Dispersal)

70. Mr. McLeish: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received about Her Majesty's Government's policy of dispersal of the Civil Service to the regions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: Two letters from hon. Members on the subject of Civil Service dispersal have recently been referred to me and are currently being dealt with. With regard to a statement, I would refer the hon. Member to the answer I provided to the hon. Member for East Kilbride (Mr. Ingram) on 18 January 1988, at columns 475-76.

Civil Service (Working Patterns)

71. Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects to implement the recommendations of the "Working Patterns of the Civil Service" contained in the study document issued by the Cabinet Office.

Mr. Brooke: Departments are already considering the report, and have been asked to come forward with any proposals on alternative working patterns which meet their particular needs.

Customs Clearance Station (Armagh)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proposals he has for the provision of a new customs clearance station on the Armagh to Monaghan road; whether it will include facilities for the handling of importation of live cattle from the Republic of Ireland into the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lawson: It is proposed that a new customs clearance station will be provided on the Armagh to Monaghan road. A planning application is under consideration in respect of a site on the Monaghan road, Armagh, 180 m west of Umgola house. The proposals do not include facilities for dealing with regular importations of live cattle from the Republic of Ireland into the United Kingdom. It is intended, however, to make provision for the temporary holding of cattle which on occasion may have been detained for customs purposes.

Value Added Tax

Sir Fergus Montgomery: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has had any representations concerning value added tax on donations of equipment to higher educational establishments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: I have received a number of representations concerning VAT on donations of equipment to higher educational establishments.

Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what he estimates will be the yield in the current year 1987-88 of value added tax from confectionery, chocolate biscuits, nuts, snacks and ice creams.

Mr. Lilley: The forecast yield of value added tax in 1987-88 from chocolate and sugar confectionary, chocolate biscuits, potato crisps, nuts and ice cream is around £590 million.

Customs (Confiscations)

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the clothes and personal effects confiscated from those arrested by Her Majesty's customs officials at airports and seaports are subsequently returned to the owners; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: Clothes and personal effects taken from arrested persons are in general returned to their owners. They may, however, be withheld if they are liable to forfeiture because of a prohibition or restriction on importation or exportation, because they are subject to duty which has not been paid, or because they have been used to facilitate the commission of an offence.

Exchange Rate

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the change in (a) the nominal and (b) the real exchange rate of (i) the United Kingdom, (ii) West Germany, (iii) Japan and (iv) the United States of America against other G7 countries in the following periods: the last quarter of 1969 to the first quarter of 1971, the last quarter of 1976 to the first quarter of 1979, the second quarter of 1979 to the first quarter of 1981 and the third quarter of 1986 to date.

Mr. Lilley: I refer the hon. Member to International Financial Statistics published monthly by the International Monetary Fund and to the table on page 46 of Economic Trends published monthly by the Central Statistical Office. Copies of both publications are in the House of Commons Library.

Interest Rates

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was (a) the nominal interest rate and (b) the real interest rate on an annual basis for (i) the United Kingdom, (ii) West Germany, (iii) Japan and (iv) Austria in each year from 1977 to date.

Mr. Lilley: There are a number of ways of measuring real interest rates. Data on interest rates and various price indices for the OECD countries are contained in the monthly publication "OECD Main Economic Indicators." Longer series can be found in "OECD Historical Statistics."

Treasure Trove

Mr. Key: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects to complete his review of treasure trove; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: I expect to receive the report of the review of ex gratia awards to finders of treasure trove very shortly.

Finance Acts

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the gain or loss to those with incomes (a) under £5,000, (b) £5,000 to £10,000, (c) £10,000 to £15,000, (d) £15,000 to £20,000, (e) £20,000 to £30,000, (f) £30,000 to £50,000, (g) £50,000 to £70,000, (h) £70,000 to £100,000 and (i) over £100,000 a year as a result of each Finance Act since 1979, both in aggregate and per person on average in each of these income groups, in each case indicating how much is due to indexation and how much is real gain.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 13 January 1988]: The information is in the tables. For each financial year shown, the tables compare the yield from the tax regime in that year with the 1978-79 tax regime. All estimates are based on a provisional 1987-88 income base projected from the 1984-85 survey of personal incomes and all tax regimes have been indexed to 1987-88 levels by reference to the statutory formula. The comparisons therefore allow for budgetary changes in income tax rates and allowances, but not for any changes since 1978-79 in the definition of the income tax base.

The first table shows the total reduction (+) or increase (−) in tax yield from each income range; and the second table shows the average change for individual tax units. Because of the uncertainties of projecting for those with the highest incomes, taxpayers with incomes over £70,000 are shown in a single range.

As child tax allowances were being phased out in 1978-79 they have been excluded from the comparison.

It is not possible to provide useful estimates of the liabilities in 1987-88 for the 1978-79 regime without indexation since Inland Revenue records do not cover many of the people who would be brought into tax by such low levels of personal allowances. A partial analysis with incomplete coverage would be misleading.

Manufacturing Industry

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the Government expect the rate of growth in output per head in manufacturing to go on increasing faster than the rate of growth in the rest of the economy over the next year; and if he will publish in the Official Report an estimate of the loss in gross domestic product as a result of the decline in the manufacturing base of the United Kingdom since 1979.

Mr. Major [holding answer 22 January 1988]: Manufacturing output in the three months to November 1987 was 2·7 per cent. above the level in 1979. Total output rose 17 per cent. over that same period. The Autumn Statement contained no forecast of the growth of output per head.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for each of the decades ending 1967, 1977 and 1987 the annual rate of growth in manufacturing, in industrial products less the extraction of oil and gas and in gross domestic product less the extraction of oil and gas.

Mr. Major [holding answer 22 January 1988]: Data for the whole of 1987 are not yet available. The information, based on the lastest available data, is as follows:

Annual growth rates

	1957 to 1967	1967 to 1977	1977 to 1987
Manufacturing output	+3·1	+1·7	[3]0·0

Personal Incomes (Statistics)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what evidence he has on whether increases in wage rates in manufacturing industry have led to inflation; and if he will include in the Official Report a table showing for the period since May 1979 the increase in (a) median earnings of blue collar workers, (b) median earnings of white collar workers, (c) the remuneration of directors of public companies and (d) the earnings of those employed in the financial sector.

Mr. Major [holding answer 22 January 1988]: Wage rates in manufacturing are more likely to be a determinant of manufacturing employment and I would draw the hon. Member's attention to the Treasury paper "The Relationship between Employment and Wages", published in January 1985.

On the second part of the question, the hon. Member's attention has on numerous occasions been drawn to the publications in which such information as is available may be found. In this instance, the New Earnings Survey will provide all information requested except details of remuneration of directors of public companies which are not normally collected by Government.

Government Borrowing

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the purpose of Government borrowing since 31 October 1987 in excess of the borrowing requirement; and if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for each issue the amount borrowed and the exact cost per annum.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 22 January 1988]: The public sector's net borrowing is necessarily equal to its borrowing requirement: it is an accounting identity. Figures for new issues and redemptions of gilt-edged stock are given in table 3.6 of Financial Statistics, published by the Central Statistical Office. Those issued since 31 October are as listed.

Revenue Statistics

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the increase in revenue and the decrease in expenditure as a result of the reduction in unemployment in 1987-88; how much of this would accrue to the national insurance fund via an increase in national insurance contributions and a reduction in social security payments; and if he will provide comparable figures for 1988-89 on the basis of the present level of employment and unemployment.

Mr. Major [holding answer 22 January 1988]: It is not possible to estimate the extra revenue accruing to the Exchequer as a result of the fall in unemployment. Details of the estimated effect of a fall in unemployment on overall benefit expenditure are given in table 3.15.18 of the 1987 public expenditure White Paper, and table 6.15.20 of the 1988 public expenditure White Paper (published 20 January). The estimated increase in contribution income to the national insurance fund resulting from the increase in employment in 1987-88 is £300 million. The estimated reduction in unemployment benefit expenditure in 1987-88 resulting from the decrease in the numbers entitled to unemployment benefit is £250 million. The overall effect of a fall in unemployment and increase in employment on the national insurance fund in 1988-89 is described in the report of the Government Actuary on the Social Security (Contributions, Re-rating) Order (No.2) 1987, which will be published shortly.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the total tax receipts from the sale of the following items: (a) cigarettes, (b) tobacco, (c) beer, (d) wine, (e) whisky, (f) petrol and (g) diesel for each year for which figures are available between 1979 and 1987.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 22 January 1988]: The figures, in financial years, show the information at the lowest level of detail for which total tax receipts (i.e. both VAT and excise duty) can be provided.

1986-87	5,193·6	424·7	3,124·2	1,098·5	1,989·2	8,262·2

[1] VAT statistics do not distinguish whisky from "spirits" or petrol from "motor fuels in general".

Domestic Rates (VAT)

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the increase in the rate of value added tax required in 1987-88 to replace the revenue currently raised from domestic rates; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 22 January 1988]: It is estimated that the rate of value added tax would need to be increased by about six percentage points (i.e. from the current rate of 15 per cent. to 21 per cent.) to replace the revenue currently raised from domestic rates.

Pension Funds

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the Inland Revenue plans to examine the affairs of large pension funds.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 22 January 1988]: Large pension funds are treated in the same way as any other taxpayer. Each case is treated on its merits and inquiries made where, on the available facts, they are considered appropriate.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer from how many pension funds the Inland Revenue (technical division) special office, Sheffield, has requested information.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 22 January 1988]: Information has been requested from 12 pension funds.

Inland Revenue (Sheffield)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people the Inland Revenue (technical division) special office, Sheffield, employs.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 22 January 1988]: Fifteen staff are employed.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the budgeted expenditure for the year 1987-88 for the Inland Revenue (technical division) special office, Sheffield.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 22 January 1988]: £358,000.

Retail Prices and Taxation

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the current average retail price and the corresponding tax duty payable on each of the following items: (a) 20 king size cigarettes, (b) half an ounce of tobacco, (c) a pint of beer, (d) a bottle of wine, (e) a bottle of whisky, (f) a gallon of four-star petrol and (g) a gallon of diesel.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 22 January 1988]: The information is as follows:

	Current price	Duty	VAT
(a) 20 King size cigarettes	1·45	0·92	0·19
(b) 25 gms[1] Pipe tobacco	1·36	0·62	0·18
(c) Pint of beer (bitter)	0·84	0·18	0·11
(d) Bottle of table wine (litre)	2·25	0·98	0·29
(e) Bottle of whisky (75cl)	7·47	4·73	0·97
(f) Gallon of petrol (4-star)	1·70	0·88	0·22
(g) Gallon of diesel	1·56	0·75	0·20

[1] A representative price for half an ounce of tobacco is not available.

Rental Values

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish the figures for the average increase in rental values determined for rating purposes of non-domestic properties for each year since 1973.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 22 January 1988]: At present, the rateable values of all properties are based on the level of annual rental values for similar properties at the time when the current valuation list came into force on 1 April 1973. The rateable values so determined are not adjusted to take account of any subsequent changes in the level of rental values which may occur during the currency of the list.

Books, Newspapers and Periodicals (VAT)

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimates he has of the amount which would be raised in a full year by the levying of value added tax on books, newspapers and periodicals at (a) 5, (b) 10 and (c) 15 per cent.; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 22 January 1988]: The estimated full year net revenue yield in 1988-89 of imposing value added tax on books, newspapers and periodicals is as follows:

	£ million
(a) 5 per cent	180
(b) 10 per cent.	350
(c) 15 per cent.	515

Domestic Staff

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will introduce legislation to make the wages paid to domestic staff in private households tax deductible; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 21 January 1988]: I have noted my hon. Friend's suggestion.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Illegitimate Babies (Deaths)

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give, for each year from 1975 onwards, the numbers of stillbirths, early neonatal deaths and postneonatal deaths of jointly registered illegitimate babies in England and Wales with fathers whose occupations were classified as (a) social class I, (b) social class II, (c) social class III non-manual, (d) social class III manual, (e) social class IV, (f) social class V, (g) armed services and (h) students, unoccupied and any occupations not included in (a) to (g).

Mrs. Currie: I regret that the full information requested can be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, the table shows data for the first and last year available which can be produced without incurring disproportionate cost.

Number of stillbirths, early neonatal deaths, late neonatal deaths and postneonatal deaths of jointly registered illegitimate babies by social class, England and Wales 1975 and 1985

Early neonatal: deaths in the first week of life.
Late neonatal: deaths from one week to under four weeks.
Postneonatal: deaths from four weeks to under one year.

Nursing and Administrative Staff

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the percentage change in the numbers of nursing and midwifery staff, whole-time equivalents, in (a) the north-west region and (b) England as a whole, between 1978 and the latest available year.

Mr. Newton: Between 30 September 1978 and 30 September 1986 National Health Service nursing and midwifery staff (including agency staff) in North Western regional health authority and England, increased by 14·7 and 20·4 per cent. respectively. These percentages have not been adjusted to take account of the reduction in hours introduced during 1980-81.

Doctors (Earnings)

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services by what percentage the earnings of (a) consultants, (b) house officers, and (c) general practitioners are estimated to have risen between 1974 and 1987 in real terms.

Mr. Newton: Based on the rates of pay effective on the dates specified, the real terms increases for house officers, consultants and general practitioners (intended net remuneration) were 48 per cent., 13·6 per cent. and 17·4 per cent. respectively. In relation to house officers, I should explain that because of the introduction of 1975 of a basic salary related to the first 40 hours duty per week, the figure quoted is based on a comparison between the current rate of pay, including supplements, for an average weekly commitment of 80 hours and the basic rate paid in 1974 for a commitment of up to 80 hours per week.

The changes in pay in real terms between February 1974 and March 1979 and between March 1979 and March 1987 were as follows:

	February 1974 to March 1979 Per cent.	March 1979 to March 1987 Per cent.
House Officer	+8·6	+29·8
Consultant	−25·6	+28·9
General Practitioner	−16·8	+25·9

(intended net remuneration).

Dialysis Patients

Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many patients are currently receiving kidney dialysis; how many new patients have been admitted to dialysis in the last 12 months; and what is his estimate of the number of patients in the United Kingdom who would benefit from dialysis.

Mrs. Currie: According to provisional figures provided by the European Dialysis and Transplant Association, a total of 6,890 patients were under treatment on all forms of dialysis in the United Kingdom on 31 December 1986. The number of new patients accepted during 1986 for all forms of treatment for end stage renal failure was 2,647 which represents 47 new patients per million population. The target of 40 new patients per million population was set by Ministers in 1984.

It is not possible to estimate the total number of patients who would benefit from dialysis. The assessment and treatment of individual patients is a matter for the clinical judgment of the doctors concerned. A total of 1,479 patients received a cadaveric kidney transplant in the United Kingdom during 1987 and 6,804 at 31 December 1986 had a functioning kidney transplant: both figures are provisional.

Obstetrics

Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has received a document "Anaesthetic Services For Obstetrics—A Plan For The Future" from the Association of Anaesthetists of Great Britain and Ireland; whether, because of its implications for the future of small obstetric units, he will ensure that a full discussion takes place between the anaesthetists and his officials before final decisions are made; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: A copy of the document has been received and is being considered. There are at present no plans for officials to meet representatives of the Association. Anaesthetists are represented by the Royal College of Surgeons and discussions will take place with that body as necessary.

The Government's current policy, as set out in the reports of the maternity services advisory committee, is that women should be encouraged to have their babies in a hospital offering the range of obstetric paediatric and supporting services including anaesthetics necessary to cope with any emergency. Responsibility for determining the pattern of maternity services best suited to local needs and circumstances rests with individual health authorities.

Ethnic Minorities

Miss Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he is taking to make those ethnic minority communities whose first language is not English aware of the major changes to the benefits system due to come into effect in April; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: FB2 "Which benefit?" is produced in six ethnic minority languages under the leaflet code FB22. The languages used are Chinese, Urdu, Hindi, Gujerati, Bengali and Punjabi. FB2/FB22 is the main social security overview leaflet, which briefly describes all the major social security benefits. It is intended to produce updated editions of FB22 later in 1988. These will cover the new benefits introduced in April. New posters advertising the new editions will go on display in social security offices and at normal distribution points.

Miss Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he is taking to ensure that his Department employs bilingual or multilingual staff in areas where there are substantial ethnic minority communities.

Mr. Portillo: The Department of Health and Social Security follows the long-standing principle that recruitment to the Civil Service should be by fair and open competition, and selection should be on merit. The Department's aim is that its work force should reflect the ethnic composition of the community it serves, but it does not seek to recruit bilingual or multilingual staff as such. A recent experiment at Bradford (West) local office involved the appointment of an existing member of staff as a full-time interpreter/liaison officer to the Asian community. It has been successful and we are considering proposals to extend the experiment to similar offices in other parts of the country.

Departmental Local Offices

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the allocation between local offices of the extra 2,000 posts agreed for supplementary benefit work in 1986, distinguishing between posts funded on a short term and on a permament basis.

Mr. Portillo: I assume that the hon. Member is referring to an increase in the staff-in-post target of about 2,000 for the end of the year 1985-86. This addition was made at a time when many local offices were in excess of the complement. Some were permitted to retain excess staff and others to increase staffing levels. I regret that since such decisions were made locally, I am unable to provide the hon. Member with the details of the allocation which he seeks.

Cervical Smear Tests

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many women have taken cervical smear tests in the Sunderland, Durham and Hartlepool areas in each year since 1985.

Mrs. Currie: The available information is not precisely in the form requested. Centrally, information is collected on the number of smear tests performed by the laboratories in the district health authority rather than the number of women, resident in the district, who were tested. Some districts will therefore record no smears examined where there are no laboratories in their area. The available information is given in the table. The hon. Member may wish to approach the respective District Health Authorities for further information.

Cervical cytology—number of cases examined

District health authorities	1985	1986
Sunderland, Durham and Hartlepool	36,063	34,340

Note: A woman who was tested more than once was counted on each occasion, but where more than one smear was taken from the same patient at the same session, they were counted as one test.

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what measures are being taken to encourage women living within the area of Durham, Sunderland and Hartlepool area health authorities to have cervical smear tests.

Mrs. Currie: We are committed to reducing deaths from cervical cancer and have asked all health authorities in England to implement, by 31 March this year, computerised call and recall systems to invite women to have cervical smear tests. Most health authorities, including Durham and Sunderland, already have their systems in operation. I understand that Hartlepool health authority plans to extend its existing recall system to provide a call facility from 1 April. For details of further measures taken to encourage uptake in these districts the hon. Member may wish to write to the chairmen of the respective health authorities.

Meningitis

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many cases of meningitis have been reported in the Sunderland, Durham and Hartlepool areas in each year from 1985.

Mrs. Currie: Meningitis can be caused by several different organisms. The hon. Member is probably particularly interested in meningococcal meningitis: the table gives figures for this and for all forms of acute meningitis.

Number of notifications of acute and meningococcal meningitis in Sunderland, Durham and Hartlepool district health authorities, 1985-87

(a) Acute or (all forms).
(b) Meningococcal meningitis.

Plastic Surgery

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the current number of private clinics for plastic surgery and the number in 1983 and 1978; and if he will make a statement on the method of assessment of the quality of service of such clinics.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that the statistical information requested is not held centrally. Each private clinic performing plastic surgery must register with its local district health authority. Under the Registered Homes Act 1984, that authority must inspect it at least twice per year and must be satisfied that its premises and management arrangements meet the requirements of registration. The clinical service provided in such a clinic is a matter between each individual purchaser and the clinician involved.

Health Districts (Spending Priorities)

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what criteria he uses to assess the spending priorities between health districts within a given authority; and what criteria are used for the inner London authorities, such as Wandsworth and Roehampton, within the South West Thames region.

Mrs. Currie: It is the responsibility of regional health authorities to determine district resource allocations which take account of agreed service plans and allow for a manageable pace of change. My hon. Friend may like to approach the chairman of the South West Thames regional health authority for further details in respect of Wandsworth and Roehampton.

Nurses (Accommodation)

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many units of health authority accommodation are available to National Health Service nursing staff in Greater London; and how this compares with (a) five and (b) 10 years ago.

Mrs. Currie: The Department does not at present collect information about the number of units of residential accommodation, but proposes to do so from the next financial year.

Crewe Health District

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received about the need for further resources in Crewe health district; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: A number of representations have been received from hon. Members, the Community Health Council, the local authority, hospital staff, and members of the public. However, the allocation of resources to the Crewe health authority is primarily the responsibility of the Mersey regional health authority.

Health Education Council (Advertising)

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what advertising agents were appointed by the former Health Education Council or by the Central Office of Information on its behalf to handle campaigns involving the communication of information for which it was responsible during (a) 1985-86; and (b) the succeeding period until the council's abolition; what was the subject of each campaign; how much was spent on each campaign; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: I understand from the authorities concerned that the information requested is as follows:

Year	Agency	Campaign(s)	Cost £
1985-86	Abbot Mead Vickers	Smoking	889,500
1985-86	Redheads Advertising	Whooping Cough	583,000
1986-87	Abbot Mead Vickers	Smoking	737,200

In 1985-86 the Health Education Council also collaborated with the DHSS in a Departmentally funded pilot campaign to discourage teenage smoking, which employed the advertising agents FCO and cost £1 million.

Dr. Kevin Browne

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services on what occasions his Department has been advised by Dr. Kevin Browne concerning the prescription of lung cancer in asbestos workers where there is no evidence of asbestosis or bilateral diffuse pleural thickening; and what was the consequence of any such advice.

Mr. Scott: Following publication of the Industrial Injuries Advisory Council's report on "Asbestos-Related Diseases Without Asbestosis" (Cmnd. 8750) in November

1982, a number of eminent experts in occupational chest diseases, including Dr. Browne then employed full-time by Cape Industries, wrote to my hon. Friend the Member for Hornsey and Wood Green (Sir H. Rossi) the then Minister of State for Social Security and the Disabled. As a result of their representations the report was referred back to the council for further consideration. The council subsequently modified its recommendations in a supplement to its report, which was published in March 1984 (Cmnd. 9184).

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether Dr. Kevin Browne has access to special medical board records relating to past or present employees of Cape Industries.

Mr. Scott: As a part-time adjudicating medical practitioner Dr. Browne has no access to medical boarding centre records other than those relating to the cases he boards. Special procedures have been introduced to ensure these do not include present or past employees of Cape Industries.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether Dr. Kevin Browne of the London medical boarding centre has been reprimanded or disciplined in relation to the curriculum vitae he submitted.

Mr. Scott: The senior medical officer at the London medical boarding centre (respiratory diseases) has discussed the matter with Dr. Browne. I am satisfied that Dr. Browne had no intention of deliberately misleading the Department.

Boarding Doctors (Asbestos)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list any boarding doctors employed on respiratory disease claims who have in the past had links with the asbestos industry.

Mr. Scott: Dr. Kevin Browne is the only doctor employed on respiratory disease claims who has past or present links with the asbestos industry.

Junior Hospital Doctors

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what statistical information he has about the extent and regularity of overtime working by junior hospital doctors.

Mr. Newton: Information is collected annually on the contracted hours of junior hospital doctors and dentists. The weekly average on 30 September 1986 was 85·7. These are hours of duty not hours of work. According to a survey commissioned by the Independent Doctors and Dentists Review Body in 1985, average hours of work were 57. An employing authority may, by agreement with a practitioner, contract separately with him for additional duty undertaken outside his regular commitment. Information on such additional duty is not available centrally.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received in the last nine months on the subject of overtime by junior hospital doctors.

Mr. Newton: We have received letters from 45 hon. Members and 31 other individuals or organisations concerning the hours of work of junior hospital doctors. Officials and representatives of the medical profession are currently discussing the scope for achieving further reductions in hours.

Speech Therapists

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many student training allowances were paid to speech therapy staff in the financial years 1983-84, 1984-85, 1985-86 and 1986-87; how many such allowances are being paid at the present time; and what proportion of speech therapy staff were or are in receipt of such allowances at the dates stated;

(2) what was the annual value of the speech therapists' student training allowance in 1983-84, 1984-85, 1985-86, 1986-87 and currently.

Mr. Newton: The information required about the number of speech therapy training allowances paid to speech therapy staff is not readily available and can be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Rates of allowance and estimated total cost (Great Britain) for the years 1984-85, 1985-86 and 1986-87 are given in the following table. Cost figures are not available for 1983-84 or for the current financial year.

Student training allowance

Grade	1984-85	1985-86	1986-87
1. Head or Designated Officer in approved Department	750	750	864
2. Senior II	500	500	576
3. Designated Officer	250	250	288

(a) as detailed in 1. above	375	375	432
(b) as detailed in 2. above	250	250	288
(c) as detailed in 3. above	125	125	144
Estimated Great Britain cost	412,400	434,400	500,100

Nurses

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many re-registrations of nurses occurred in each of the last five years;

(2) what income he anticipates will arise from charges for the re-registration of nurses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Responsibility for maintaining the professional register rests with the United Kingdom Central Council for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting. Since 1 January 1987 nurses, midwives and health visitors have been required by the United Kingdom Central Council to re-register every three years. Prior to that date registration was for life.

I understand from the United Kingdom Central Council that re-registrations during 1987 totalled 541,000. During the 1988-89 financial year it expects to raise £4,324,000 from periodic registration fees.

Dual Laser Beam Flow Sorter

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if his Department proposes to acquire or advise other agencies to acquire a dual laser beam flow sorter.

Mrs. Currie: No, but a number of specialised laboratories in the United Kingdom have these devices in use.

Boarding Doctors (Industrial Disablement)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether any boarding doctors have past or present links with any industrial board claimants for industrial disablement benefit for any prescribed disease.

Mr. Scott: Many of the adjudicating medical practitioners who board claimants for prescribed diseases and industrial accidents have had, or currently have, appointments in industry as occupational physicians. Such industrial experience is of considerable value in this work. Departmental practice in this matter is governed by the provisions of Regulation 33 (1), (2) and (3), of the Social Security (Adjudication) Regulations 1986.

Kidney Patients

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he can give his Department's best estimate of the annual cost to the public purse in benefits (excluding all health care costs) of the average patient with end-stage renal failure, distinguishing between those who (a) have no treatment other than amelioration and care, (b) have renal dialysis treatment and (c) have had successful kidney transplant treatment.

Mr. Scott: The diversity of medical and financial circumstances within each of the three categories, and the resulting variations in benefit entitlement, are too great to permit any worthwhile attempt at an average annual benefit cost.

Social Workers

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the estimated cost of the proposed Open University course for social workers with deaf people.

Mr. Scott: I understand that the total development cost is now estimated at about £500,000 over a period of six years.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to meet the Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work to discuss the training of social workers with deaf people.

Mr. Scott: Discussions have been held at official level and the Department will continue to keep in touch with the council about this issue.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to give the Open University a decision on funding the development costs of its proposed post-qualifying course for social workers with deaf people; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what priority he has given to funding the development costs of the Open University's proposed post-qualifying course for social workers with deaf people; and if he expects to announce a decision by the end of January to enable the course to be on offer in 1990.

Mr. Scott: I refer the right hon. and hon. Members to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Torridge and Devon, West (Miss Nicholson) on 25 January at column 584.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services which organisations have requested him to support the proposed Open University course for social workers with deaf people.

Mr. Scott: The application has been made by the Royal National Institute for the Deaf on behalf of the panel of four main national organisations helping deaf people and the national training group on which other voluntary organisations are also represented. The Association of Directors of Social Services has endorsed the proposal which also has the approval in principle of the Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will outline the present provision for training social workers to work with profoundly deaf people.

Mr. Scott: There is no formal training course at present.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many local authorities have in post a social worker designated as working with deaf people; and what proportion this is of the total.

Mr. Scott: Information is not held centrally on the nature of the work carried out by particular social workers.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any proposals to collect centrally statistics on the number of social workers qualified to work with deaf people.

Mr. Scott: We have no plans to do so, although arrangements for collecting information centrally are kept under review to take account of changing needs.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he intends to take to increase the provision of training for social workers specialising in work with deaf people.

Mr. Scott: We are well aware of the need and both the Department and the Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work are giving careful consideration to a proposal for a new course involving the Open University.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what assessment he has made of the adequacy of social work provision for deaf people; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The adequacy of such provision is for local authorities to determine in the light of local needs.

Deaf People

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the estimated number of profoundly deaf people in the United Kingdom; and how many of these are likely to require (a) environmental aids and (b) help with communication.

Mr. Scott: The information is not available in the form requested. The number of deaf people with and without speech on local authority registers in England at 31 March 1986 totalled 34,077. Figures for the rest of the United Kingdom are matters for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and Northern Ireland and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

All deaf people will clearly require some help with communication, but it is not possible to estimate how many could benefit from the provision of particular kinds of assistance or of environmental aids.

Family Planning Clinics

Mr. Nicholas Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish figures about closures of family planning clinics within the last period for which figures are available; and what representations he has received about further proposed closures of these clinics.

Mr. Newton: Information is not centrally available in the form requested. National figures for the number of health authority family planning outlets and sessions provided in the last five years for which figures are available are set out in the table. There have been a number of representations about health authority proposals for reductions in clinic services, including correspondence from the Family Planning Association. There have been no referrals to Ministers, under the defined consultation procedures where consumer views are represented, of proposals for substantial changes where agreement cannot be reached locally.

Family planning clinic service: England
Community and hospital clinics[1]

	1982	1983	1984	1985	1986
Premises regularly used for FP sessions	1,739	1,755	1,768	1,746	1,756
Sessions (all types)[2]	197,472	199,100	197,127	196,075	195,700

[1] The table covers all clinic services including any provided by voluntary bodies or others on an agency basis.
[2] A session with two doctors has been included as two sessions. If more than one nurse was present at a "nurse only" session it has been included as one session unless each nurse was advising a separate group.

Social Fund

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he plans to publish information about the social fund in minority languages; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: The Department intends to publish general information about the social fund in minority languages later in 1988. This will be in the form of a new edition of leaflet FB22 which is presently translated into six ethnic minority languages.

Health Services Information

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the progress being made in implementing the recommendations of the Korner steering group's reports on health services information.

Mr. Newton: The first phase in implementing the recommendations of the Korner steering group on health services information has proceeded satisfactorily. All district health authorities are collecting the required data. However, difficulties in interfacing computer systems meant that several districts were unable to provide some of the first quarter's returns to the Department: some of these difficulties are affecting the second quarter. A report on the first phase was published in the November issue of the British Journal of Healthcare Computing volume 4, pages 39 to 41 a copy of which is in the Library. The second phase relating to community and paramedical services is not due for implementation until 1 April 1988.

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will make a statement on progress being made with his Department's computer-based package to provide information as to the relative performance of (a) hospitals and (b) district health authorities;

(2) what information his Department's computer-based performance indicator package discloses concerning (a) the number of out-patient attendances at acute hospitals per annum and (b) the average cost per attendance; and if he will publish those details in respect of each acute hospital dealing with more than 100,000 out-patient attendances per annum;

(3) what information his Department's computer-based performance indicator package discloses concerning (a) the number of in-patient cases treated in acute hospitals per annum and (b) the average cost per in-patient case; and if he will publish those details in respect of each acute hospital dealing with more than 20,000 cases per annum;

(4) if he intends to introduce information as to diagnosis-related groups into his Department's computer-based performance indicator package.

Mr. Newton: A new set of the performance indicators for the hospital and community health services based on data for 1986-87 will be issued in February 1988. As in previous years this will be sent to every authority in England and a copy will be placed in the Library.

An improved, expanded set of indicators is currently being developed to make use of the new data collected from 1 April 1987 following the implementation of the recommendations of the steering committee on health service information (the "Kõrner committee"). Publication of the new health service indicators, based on data for 1987-88, is planned for January 1989.

The current indicators do not include information about attendances and costs of consultant out-patient clinics at acute hospitals. It is planned to include such information in the revised package of indicators. The current indicators do not provide information about the number of in-patients treated in acute hospitals; nor do they identify hospitals by the number of patients in them. Cost per case indicators are provided by district and major acute hospital but do not distinguish between hospitals by the number of cases treated.

Work is in hand in the context of resource management in the NHS to establish the potential of diagnostic related groups (DRG's). Until the value of DRGs is demonstrated there are no plans to make use of them in performance indicators.

East Anglia

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the implications for his Department's (a) planning and (b) spending on health and social services of recent projections published by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys that East Anglia will have in the next 13 years the greatest proportionate population increase of both people moving in and of new births of any English region.

Mr. Newton: The resource allocation working party formula, which is used to calculate each region's target share of available resources, takes account of changes in the size of regional populations (and of the use made of health services by people of different ages and sexes). Annual allocations aim to bring regions towards their targets over time. East Anglia's growth in population is reflected in its 6·6 per cent. cash increase for 1988-89 compared with a national average of 5·7 per cent.

Medical Treatment (Spain)

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans his Department has to seek better reciprocal arrangements for medical treatment for United Kingdom nationals injured or taken ill in Spain; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: Under the terms of European Community regulations, United Kingdom nationals receive medical treatment in Spain from the Spanish state health care system on the same basis as Spanish nationals. Negotiations are currently taking place to ease access to the Spanish state system and to provide more information about it. United Kingdom nationals may also of course, if they wish, use Spanish private sector health care facilities paid for by themselves or by private insurance.

Unemployment Costs (Sheffield)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the total cost to public funds of unemployment within the Sheffield, Brightside constituency for the year ended December 1987, including benefits paid and tax and national insurance cost.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that it is not possible to estimate the total cost of unemployment, to include tax and national insurance contributions forgone, because of the number of factors that could affect this. The cost of paying benefit in 1987 to those unemployed in the Sheffield, Brightside, constituency could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Adjudication Officer's Guide

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when the adjudication officer's guide will be published.

Mr. Portillo: It is anticipated that the adjudication officer's guide will be published shortly, in time for the new social security benefits which come into operation on Monday 11 April 1988. I will write to the hon. Member when the exact date is known.

NHS (Accounting and Auditing)

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to change accountancy methods used within the National Health Service in the United Kingdom and the auditing arrangements for the overall accounts of the National Health Service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: There are no plans to change accounting methods in use within the NHS in England.

There may be some technical differences in the treatment of accounts generally in the other countries of the United Kingdom, and of course questions concerning the NHS in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland are matters for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and Northern Ireland and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland. In England, current methods and accounting standards are closely modelled and developed in line with the statements of standard accounting practice applying within the private sector. This includes accounting for expenditure on an accruals basis, as well as accounting on a cash basis for Parliamentary Vote control purposes. Capital expenditure and income is recorded in the accounts, but there is no record in a balance sheet of capital assets, nor is there any provision for depreciation of such assets in the revenue accounts. However currently work is in hand in the NHS to develop improved methods of capital asset management, including capital accounting.

The monitoring and expenditure of health authorities that currently takes place on an informal basis will in future be reflected in the formal and regular monitoring of income, and expenditure levels and of output and activity as I announced on 16 December. This is planned to be undertaken in association with the in-year monitoring process which at present deals only with cash Vote control.

There are also no plans to change the auditing arrangements for NHS accounts, which are as outlined in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Gedling (Mr. Mitchell) on 13 January at columns 330-1.

Benefits

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the total number of claimants in England, Scotland, Wales and the Fife, Central constituency who have been refused benefit through the decision of an independent adjudication officer; if he will break this figure down according to the reasons given for the withdrawal of benefit; and if he will provide the information requested for each year from 1979 to 1987, inclusive.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 1 December 1987]: For unemployment benefit, which I assume is the benefit of interest to the hon. Member, a breakdown of disallowances in England, Scotland and Wales is shown in the tables. Adjudication work for Fife is centralised in the Edinburgh (East) adjudication office. The boundaries of the area dealt with by this office are not conterminous with those of the Fife central constituency and it is not possible, therefore, to provide separate figures for this constituency.

Mentally Ill People

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the numbers of mentally ill patients registered in the Central Nottinghamshire health authority area for each year 1979 to 1987, inclusive.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 15 January 1988]: The numbers of people in National Health Service mental illness hospitals and units in the Central Nottinghamshire health authority on 31 December are given in the table. The people concerned are not registered and may not have been resident in the area of the health authority before their admission as patients. The figures relate to in-patients only and these cannot be analysed by district of residence (for home address) as this information is not centrally collected. The numbers of residents in a particular district health authority are limited by the availability of local facilities and Central Nottinghamshire DHA has no large mental illness hospitals within its boundaries. Figures for 1987 are not yet available.

WALES

Water Rates

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what the percentages rise in average water rates for Wales has been between 1979 and the latest date available in (a) cash terms and (b) real terms.

Mr. Grist: The percentage rise in average water rates for the Welsh water authority between 1979-80 and 1987-88 in cash and real terms was 149·8 per cent. and 43·6 per cent. respectively.

These figures are based on the rates payable for the average domestic heriditament the rateable value of which was £120 from 1979 to 1982 and £124 thereafter.

EC Structural Fund (Review)

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how he expects the review of EEC structural funds to affect (a) European regional development fund assistance and (b) European social fund assistance to (i) Wales and (ii) Mid-Glamorgan.

Mr. Peter Walker: Discussions are still in progress, on the basis of the proposals made by the Commission, on the future objectives for the structural funds. Agreement on the objective criteria for defining those areas which may, in the longer term, be eligible for assistance has not yet been reached. The need to consider those areas traditionally affected by industrial decline is, however, specifically reflected both in the EC treaty and in the Commission's present proposals.

Library Authority (Newport)

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he will announce a decision on Newport borough council's application of 1984 to be designated a library authority under the provisions of the Local Government Act 1972.

Mr. Grist: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) on Friday 22 January 1988, at column 881.

Circular 44/87

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which councils received copies of his Department's circular 44/87; and why it was sent to them.

Mr. Grist: It is known that two local authorities (Swansea city council and Gwynedd county council) have received copies of a document which appeared to be an updated version of circular 30/86, "Housing for Senior Management". The Department has since written to all local authorities in Wales explaining that circular 30/86 continues in force.

Regional Aid

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is (a) his predicted expenditure on regional aid in Wales in 1988-89, excluding the Welsh Development Agency and (b) expenditure on regional selective assistance and regional development grant in 1986-87, at constant prices.

Mr. Peter Walker: The 1988 public expenditure White Paper contained planned provision of £111 million (net of non-EC receipts) for regional aid in Wales in 1988-89. The outturn figure will be very much affected by the number of Welsh firms that take advantage of the opportunity of applying for regional development grant prior to 31 March 1988, because any valid application prior to that date will have two years from approval to take advantage of the grant.

The figure for 1986-87 for regional selective assistance and regional development grant at comparable prices was £128·7 million, but £70·9 million of this was residual payments for the RDG I scheme, which was ended as a result of the review in 1984.

The substantial increase in WDA expenditure plus the increased use of regional selective assistance mean that in total expenditure on regional policy will be enhanced in coming years.

House Condition Survey

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to publish the results of the 1986 Welsh house condition survey.

Mr. Grist: Publication of the 1986 "Welsh House Condition Survey" will take place in spring of this year.

Civil Service (Redundancies)

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many Civil Service redundancies, in which Civil Service ranks, will be caused by the decision to end regional development grants in Wales; and how many new posts and at what level will be created to administer the newly announced selective grants.

Mr. Peter Walker: No redundancies will arise. It is too early to say precisely how many staff will eventually be required to administer the regional investment and regional innovation grant schemes, but staff are being redeployed to that work and further staff will be provided as required.

Public Expenditure

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a commentary on the Welsh public expenditure programme, similar to that published annually by the Scottish Office.

Mr. Peter Walker: My Department's resources, achievements and priorities are set out in the Wales chapter of "The Government's Expenditure Plans 1988-89 to 1990-91", Cm. 288. The narrative comprises almost 100 paragraphs and is further supplemented by 34 tables and charts, together with an extensive bibliography.

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish an analysis of expenditure shown in table 17.1 of "The Government's Expenditure Plans 1988-89 to 1990-91" Cm. 288, on a similar basis to those published in his reply of 28 January 1987, Official Report, column 686.

Mr. Peter Walker: The following tables provide an analysis of the expenditure shown in table 17.1 of The Government's Expenditure Plans 1988-89 to 1990-91" Cm. 288, on a similar basis to the tables which appeared in the Official Report for 22 January 1987, at columns 686-96.

In all the tables the totals have been derived from unrounded figures and the components may not therefore always add to the totals shown.

It is misleading to make comparisons between the planned level of expenditure for one year and the outturn (or estimated outturn) for other years. I am therefore including a table which sets out the planned provision within the responsibility of the Secretary of State for Wales for each of the years 1982-83 to 1987-88 as published in successive volumes of the Government's expenditure plans.

Due to changes in the definition and classification of public expenditure and to increases in the responsibility of the Secretary of State for Wales over the period, the figures shown in the tables are not strictly comparable in every case. Also, the public expenditure provision for the Secretary of State for Wales for the years 1982-83 to 1984-85 did not include regional development grants.

Capital Expenditure

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he will publish proposals for the reform of capital expenditure control.

Mr. Peter Walker: I hope to publish proposals shortly for the future control of local authority capital.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will publish the capital allocation to each local authority, within each expenditure block and in total, in 1987-88 and 1988-89, showing the percentage change for each authority between the two years in their total allocation;

(2) if he will publish the capital allocation in total to the local authorities within each region, by expenditure block, in 1987-88 and 1988-89, showing the percentage change for each region.

Mr. Peter Walker: The information requested is shown in the following table.

With the exception of housing, capital allocations are not separately identified. The "All Other Services" block includes projects of regional and national importance, special projects, TSG-related transport schemes and urban programme, together with a formula based allocation.

No meaningful year-on-year comparison can be made at an individual local authority level as £69 million (20·4 per cent. of the total) remains to be allocated for 1988-89. Wales is not split into regions other than local authority areas.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will publish the estimated outturn net and gross capital expenditure, in total, by region, for each year from 1981-82 to 1986-87, with the comparable planned figures for 1987-88 and 1988-89;

(2) if he will publish the planned, budgeted and outturn net and gross capital expenditure, in total, for each year from 1981-82 to 1988-89.

Mr. Peter Walker: Planned and outturn local authority capital expenditure is provided in the following table. This excludes law and order services falling within the responsibility of the Home Office. No information is available for budgeted expenditure and no regional breakdown is available.

	Planned (£ million)		Outturn (£ million)
Year	Net	Gross	Net	Gross
1981-82	220	259	182	248
1982-83	275	344	238	346
1983-84	305	396	315	415
1984-85	237	346	258	365
1985-86	249	349	264	347
1986-87	268	368	323	416
1987-88	298	410	350	450
1988-89	288	416	n/a	n/a

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a table similar to table 17.1 in "The Government's Expenditure Plans 1988-89 to 1990-91" showing the outturn expenditure in 1986-87, and estimated expenditure for each year in that table, at constant prices for each such year.

Mr. Peter Walker: It is misleading to make comparisons between the planned level of provision for one year and the outturn (or estimated outturn) for other years.

Table 1 shows in real terms the planned provision within the responsibility of the Secretary of State for Wales for each of the years 1982-83 to 1990-91 as published in successive volumes of the Government's expenditure plans.

Table 2 sets out the comparable outturn figures for the years 1982-83 to 1987-88 in real terms.

Due to changes in the definition and classification of public expenditure and to increases in the repsonsibility of the Secretary of State for Wales over the period, the figures shown in both tables are not strictly comparable in every case. Also, the public expenditure provision for the Secretary of State for Wales for the years 1982-83 to 1984-85 did not include regional development grants.

Cardiology

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report a list of general hospitals in Wales that do not have a physician with a specialist interest and training in cardiology.

Mr. Grist [holding answer 18 January 1988]: There is no general hospital in Wales which is without a consultant physician who will have had higher training in all aspects of general medicine including cardiology. Cardiology training has developed over time with changing technologies and therapies and general physicians with a practising interest can be expected to have a range of training backgrounds and experience consistent with their professional clinical practice. There are an increasing number of consultants with a special interest and with specialist training in cardiology in posts throughout Wales and the Department is encouraging this progress.

Social Workers

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has as to how many social workers are employed in each of the eight counties of Wales; and what is the average number of social workers per 100,000 head of population for the latest date and for each of the last four years.

Mr. Grist [pursuant to his reply, 15 January 1988, c. 424]: The hon. Member will wish to note that two figures were shown incorrectly, due to typing errors. The number of whole-time equivalents for Gwent for 1982 should have read 210·6 (instead of 210·5) and the rate per 100,000 population for Wales for 1984 should have read 50·4 (instead of 0·4). The amended table is as follows:

Free Milk

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many children under five years of age and cared for by registered childminders are currently in receipt of free milk; and how many childminders are involved.

Mr. Grist: There were 5,571 places with 2,361 registered childminders in Wales at 31 March 1987. Information is not available centrally on the number or age of children using these places or on the number of children in receipt of free milk.

WALES

Battery Hens

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what guidance he has given, or intends to give, to egg producers in Wales as to the time at which they should comply with the provisions of the Welfare of Battery Hens Regulations 1987, in the light of the further review to be undertaken in 1993.

Mr. Peter Walker: The regulations came into force on 1 January 1988. As from that date all new cages must conform: for existing cages the space allowance must be achieved by 1 January 1995. Within the seven-year lead-in period for existing cages, the timing of any change will largely be a matter for the individual producer. The Government will maintain close links with the industry on both their ongoing review and the scientific report due from the Commission by 1 January 1993.

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make representations to the European Communities Council of Ministers to ensure full compliance within Europe with the provisions of European directive 86/113 on the welfare of battery hens.

Mr. Peter Walker: Compliance with EEC directives is a matter for individual member states and for the European Commission. In this instance, article 7 requires the Commission to undertake inspection programmes within member states to ensure that the directive is complied with and uniform standards applied. The Commission is also required to produce reports on those inspections.

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy that cage sizes for battery hens should be increased by 1993 to allow greater space and height for the welfare of the birds.

Mr. Peter Walker: The Government believe that a European standard of about 600 sq cm per bird would be more appropriate in welfare terms and will be seeking improvements when the review of the directive, due in 1993, takes place.

Cardiology Service (North Wales)

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will increase the finance available to the cardiology service provided by Liverpool health authority for north Wales patients.

Mr. Grist: The Mersey RHA is historically funded to provide cardiac services for patients in north Wales. A review of cardiac services provided by Liverpool RHA is currently under way and its outcome will be discussed with the Welsh Office in due course. In the meantime, in an effort to increase the number of cardiac patients in north Wales being treated, arrangements have been made by Clwyd DHA, with funding from the Welsh Office, for individuals to be referred to a private hospital in Manchester. The need for this arrangement will be reviewed regularly.

Surgery

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list in order of frequency the 10 most common forms of surgery for which patients are admitted to hospitals in Wales.

Mr. Grist: The information requested is shown in the following table:

Ten Most Common Forms of Surgical Operation in National Health Service Hospitals in Wales in 1986

OPCS Operation Codes	Type of operation	Number
703-706	Dilation, curettage, biopsy and excision of lesion of cervix	9,384
770-779	Post-Natal or post-abortion operations	8,866
607,608	Cystoscopy (with destruction of lesion)	8,027
752,753,758-762	Other delivery operations	7,347
780-789	Treatment of fracture by operations	7,160
230-239	Tonsillectomy and Adenoidectomy	4,636
742	Termination of pregnancy	4,592
400-409	Operations on abdominal wall, peritoneum and mesentary	4,311
764-769	Caesarean Section	4,107
170-179	Operations on lens	4,094

Hospital and Health Services

Sir Raymond Gower: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he has any change to announce in the cash limit for class XVII vote 8.

Mr. Grist: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, the cash limit for class XVII, vote 8 (Hospital and Community Health Services, etc, Wales) will be increased by £3,800,000 from £716,836,000 to £720,636,000. My right hon. Friend announced this increase in his written answer of 16 December 1987, at columns 512 and 513, which should ensure that current levels of patient services are maintained without carrying forward a large burden of expenditure liabilities to 1988-89.

This increase will be charged to the reserve and therefore does not add to the public expenditure planning total.

Infants (Spinal Curvature)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures have been taken by his Department to ensure that all children born with spinal curvature are screened for non-spontaneously resolving scoliosis within two to three months of birth in all Welsh health authority areas.

Mr. Grist [holding answer 15 January 1988]: Guidance on the medical examination of the new born baby and the care of babies born with a malformation or risk of handicap, and their subsequent follow-up, has been published in the third report of the maternity services advisory committee to the Secretaries of State for Social Services and for Wales.

The report, published in 1985, was endorsed by the perinatal mortality initiative survey group in its report to the Secretary of State for Wales in 1986. Both reports were distributed to general managers of district health authorities, administrators of family practitioner committees, secretaries of community health councils and health professionals working in the maternity and neonatal services. The Department issued a circular, WHC(86)69, in December 1986 to all health authorities in Wales asking them to review their service provision and examine their performance in the light of the guidance in these two reports. Copies of the two reports are available in the Library. A copy of the circular will be placed in the Library of the House.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Social Security Commission (Cardiff Office)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list the bodies with which consultations took place, and over what period, prior to the decision being made by Her Majesty's Government to close the Cardiff office of the social security commissioners.

The Attorney-General: Consultations on the proposal to close the Cardiff office of the Social Security Commissioners took place between 4 December 1985 and 31 January 1986.

The following individuals and organisations were invited to comment:

The Welsh Office.
The Department of Health and Social Security.
National Association of Citizens Advice Bureau (South Wales Regional Office).
Child Poverty Action Group.
Council on Tribunals.
Chief Social Security Commissioner.
Mr. Roderic Bowen QC (the former Resident Welsh Social Security Commissioner).
Lord Chancellor's Department Trade Union Side.
The Staff of the Cardiff Office.

In addition, representations were received from the following:

Mr. Griffith Owen George (Resident Welsh National Insurance Commissioner 1950-1967).
Institute of Directors (Wales Division).
Wales Trade Union Congress.

Bail

Mr. A. Cecil Walker: To ask the Attorney-General how the Northern Ireland Court Service ensures that the minimum amount of time elapses between bail requirements being completed and the papers being returned to the prison in order to ensure the speedy release of the person to whom bail was granted.

The Attorney-General: In almost all cases, completed documents are given to the police for delivery to the prison.

Occasionally, if prison warders are in the courts, they effect delivery. Court staff have also delivered documents and, in the provincial areas, recourse has been made to the first-class postal system.

Mr. A. Cecil Walker: To ask the Attorney-General what has been the maximum length of time which has elapsed in any individual case relating to a male held on remand in Her Majesty's prison, Crumlin road, between bail requirements being completed and the actual release of the person who was granted bail.

The Attorney-General: This information is not readily available and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost. If the hon. Member has a particular case in mind, I would be happy to look into it.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Population Component

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will list in the Official Report the eight requests for assistance for projects with a population component on which preparatory work was in hand at 31 December 1987.

Mr. Eggar: The information is as follows:

India:
Orissa Family Welfare Project Phase II.
Gujarat Integrated Rural Development and Family Welfare project; possible extension of population component.
Population components in three slum improvement projects.

Kenya:
World Bank Third Population Project; proposed ODA co-financing.

Tanzania:
Technical co-operation input to 1988 Population Census.

Pakistan:
Possible new phase of support for population activities.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Murderers and Rapists

Mr. Dover: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many murderers and rapists have been released over the last 10 years and have committed the same crime again.

Mr. John Patten: In the period 1977 to 1986 four offenders originally convicted of murder and later released on licence from prisons in England and Wales have subsequently been reconvicted of murder.

The only information readily available on rape relates to a sample of adult males discharged from prison department establishments in 1981 and is for those discharged from a sentence for any sexual offence. About 3 per cent. of those so discharged were convicted of another sexual offence within two years. Results of this study were published in tables 8(h) and 8(i) "Prison Statistics, England and Wales, 1984" (Cmnd. 9622), copies of which are in the Library.

Horses and Ponies

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Home Department if he proposes to take any action in the light of the report on stray, tethered and abandoned horses and ponies in England and Wales, issued by the Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, a copy of which has been sent to him; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It is already an offence under the Protection of Animals Act 1911 and the Abandonment of Animals Act 1960 to cause unnecessary suffering to domestic or captive animals, or to abandon them without reasonable excuse in circumstances likely to cause unnecessary suffering. The maximum penalty for such offences has recently been substantially increased, and proposals to extend the power of disqualification from keeping an animal have been introduced. We believe that with these changes the existing legislation provides adequate remedies for offences of cruelty.

Firearms

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he intends to take to reduce the costs incurred by the Metropolitan police in the administration of the issuing of firearms and shotgun certificates, down to a level comparable with other police forces.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No sample survey of costs incurred by police forces in issuing firearm and shotgun certificates has been undertaken since 1981. A comparison of costs on the basis of the most recent Metropolitan police assessment of costs for the period 1 April 1985 to 31 March 1986 is not therefore possible. This assessment was accepted for consideration by the working party on the review of fees which we intend should resume its work in the light of the proposed new firearms legislation.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action has been taken by police officers to locate, document or seize the 45 calibre Thompson and 9 mm Bergann pistol held by the late Michael Ryan without a firearms certificate.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the chief constable that extensive investigations carried out by the Thames Valley police since the Hungerford shootings into the weapons held by Michael Ryan have not disclosed any substantive evidence that Ryan was ever in possession of the firearms indicated.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of firearms in circulation in each category have been reported as stolen in each of the past 10 years or for any lesser period for which records are readily available.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested is not available. The number of burglaries and thefts recorded by the police in which firearms were reported to have been stolen, by principal weapons, is published in table 3.12 of "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales, 1986" (Cm. 233). The number of firearms and shotgun certificates on issue at the end of each year is published in tables 1 and 3 of Home Office statistical bulletin issue 2/88. Copies of both publications are in the Library. Information is not collected centrally at present on the number of firearms stolen in each offence nor of the numbers of weapons held on certificates. The information collected on these subjects is under review.

Community Radio

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidelines he will be giving to community radio stations in Wales when granting their licences with regard to the proportion of time they will broadcast in Welsh and English; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: Under the legislative proposals that my right hon. Friend will bring before Parliament it will be for the radio authority and not the Home Secretary to award radio broadcasting licences, having regard to criteria which will reflect paragraph 7.23 of our Green Paper.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list, by species, the number of animals involved in experiments at Porton Down, in universities and other establishments of higher education, for each year 1979 to 1987; and how many of each were killed.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The number of experiments which were started on animals, in each year from 1977 to 1986, at universities and polytechnics in Great Britain is given in table 20 of "Statistics of Experiments on Living Animals 1986" (Cm. 187), copies of which are in the Library. The records are kept in terms of experiments begun each year on animals and do not show how many of these died as a result or were subsequently killed. A breakdown by species is not readily available; I will write to the hon. Member with this information.

It is not our practice to make available detailed information on the usage of particular species in animal experiments at the Chemical Defence Establishment, Porton Down.

B2 Division, Lunar House

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is (a) the average, (b) the median and (c) the maximum casework backlog in B2 division at Lunar house; what are the causes of such backlogs; and what measures are being taken to reduce them.

Mr. Renton [holding answer 19 January 1988]: On 18 January there were 269 cases which had been in B2 division for at least a month without initial action being taken. This largely reflects staff absences for a number of reasons, including leave over the Christmas period. The highest number on any one case-working officer's desk was 68, the average 7·5 and the median 0.

PRIME MINISTER

RAF Molesworth

Q68. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Prime Minister when she next expects to pay an official visit to RAF Molesworth.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

St. Philip's Marsh, Bristol

Q133. Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Prime Minister whether she plans to visit the St. Philip's Marsh area of Bristol.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Engagements

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list the time, duration and nature of her engagements on Monday 18 January.

The Prime Minister: During the morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. I gave a lunch at 10 Downing Street for the United Kingdom/Japan 2000 Group. In the afternoon I had further meetings, and in the evening I attended a dinner at the Guildhall.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 26 January.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 26 January.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 26 January.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 26 January.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 26 January.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others, including one with the President of Egypt. In addition to my duties in the House I shall be having further meetings later today.

Cabinet Committees

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a further statement on her practice in answering questions on the numbers and names of the Cabinet Committees and Sub-Committees.

The Prime Minister: There continue to be four Standing Committees of the Cabinet: a Defence and Overseas Policy Committee and an Economic Strategy Committee under my chairmanship; and a Home and Social Affairs Committee and a Legislation Committee under the chairmanship of my right hon. Friend the Lord President of the Council. Attendance at these Committees will vary according to the subject under discussion. Sub-Committees of the Standing Committees will be continued or established as appropriate. Membership and terms of reference of the Standing Committees and their Sub-Committees will remain confidential.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Teacher Training (Report)

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will identify those institutions included in Her Majesty's inspectorate's report "Quality in Schools: The Initial Training of Teachers" of which the inspectors reported that teaching accommodation showed serious deficiencies;

(2) if he will identify those few institutions described in Her Majesty's inspectors' report "Quality in Schools: The Initial Training of Teachers" as ones in which the British education degree course contained a method course designed for students to consider the application of their specialist subject to childrens' learning;

(3) if he will identify those institutions described in her Majesty's inspectors' report "Quality in Schools: The Initial Training of Teachers" of which the inspectors reported that they gave considerable time and emphasis to preparing students for work in a multi-ethnic society;

(4) if he will identify those institutions described in Her Majesty's inspectors' report "Quality in Schools: The Initial Training of Teachers" of which the inspectors reported that attention was given to preparing students for work in a multi-ethnic society;

(5) if he will identify those institutions and courses included in Her Majesty's inspectors' report "Quality in Schools: The Initial Training of Teachers" where the inspectors reported that specialist subject method courses in the British education and the post graduate certificate in education had serious difficulties;

(6) if he will identify the small number of institutions included in Her Majesty's inspectors' report "Quality in Schools: The Initial Training of Teachers" of which the inspectors reported that there was some imaginative coverage of the world of work and the industrial and commercial relevance of the school curriculum;

(7) if he will specify the number of instances covered by the reference in Her Majesty's inspectors' report "Quality in Schools: The Initial Training of Teachers" to cases where students were exposed to poor practice during their time in schools;

(8) how many of the institutions surveyed in Her Majesty's inspectors' report "Quality in Schools: The Initial Training of Teachers" had libraries which contained a minimum of 90,000 volumes in the main collection, together with subscriptions to 400 or more periodicals.

Mrs. Rumbold: It is not the practice to identify the individual institutions concerned as regards references made to particular aspects of their provision in reports of general surveys by HMI. Individuals HMI reports on each of the institutions have been published over the last three years.

Persian Studies

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received about the future funding and future location of Persian studies in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: My hon. Friend wrote to me on 18 January on this subject, and I am making inquiries. I have received only one other recent representation. Persian studies fell within the scope of the review of Asian and African languages and area studies conducted by Sir Peter Parker for the University Grants Committee, which has accepted and is now implementing his recommendations.

Achievement Profiling

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) whether the commitment to the target of 1992 for the completion of achievement profiling for all pupils in maintained schools still stands;

(2) how many pupils in maintained schools at (a) primary and (b) secondary schools are currently thought to be covered by achievement profiling;

(3) what records his Department keeps of progress on achievement profiling; and what information it requires on profiling from local education authorities;

(4) what study his Department has made, or proposes to make, of additional resources whether human or material, required in the introduction of achievement profiling.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Government's objective is to agree and establish by 1990 national arrangements under which all young people in secondary schools will have a record of achievement. Education support grants are being used to support development work in nine pilot schemes in England and Wales, to cast light on the best ways to record pupils' achievement, including consideration of the resource implications.

A national steering committee has been set up to oversee the work of the pilot schemes and to report this autumn on experience gained and the implications for introducing records of achievement nationally. The schemes have made annual reports on progress to the committee and will make their final reports in March. A national evaluation team is evaluating progress for the committee.

Information about the number of pupils involved in records of achievement schemes throughout the country is not collected centrally. The pilot schemes receiving education support grant funding involve 22 local education authorities in England and Wales and some 250 secondary schools. Records of achievement are also being developed in many schools and local education authorities outside these areas.

Universities

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will provide for each of the eight Scottish universities a table showing, for all academic staff, the location of their first degrees as between Scottish universities, other United Kingdom universities and foreign universities, only the totals being required in each case;

(2) if he will provide a table showing for all academic staff at each of Oxford and Cambridge universities the location of their first degrees, as between Oxford and Cambridge, Scottish universities, other United Kingdom universities and foreign universities, only the totals being required in each case.

Mr. Jackson: The "Commonwealth Universities Yearbook", a copy of which is in the Library, lists staff, by name, at each university and includes information on the university at which first degrees were obtained.

Modern Languages

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when the final version of the policy statement on modern languages in the school curriculum will be published.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales and I have today published the policy statement "Modern Languages in the School Curriculum". Copies have been placed in the Library of the House and are being sent to all local education authorities and secondary schools, and to other interested bodies within and beyond the education service.

The main messages of the policy statement are that pupils should study a modern foreign language throughout compulsory secondary education, and more should continue with a language into the sixth form; there should be a greater diversification of first foreign language provision into languages such as German, Italian, Spanish or Russian; and more emphasis should be placed on communication skills.

The policy statement complements our proposals for a national curriculum, which include a modern foreign language as a foundation subject for all secondary school pupils.

TRANSPORT

Night Flying

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement concerning his review of night flying restrictions at London's airports.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department is considering the many helpful responses to the recent consultation. My right hon. Friend expects to be able to announce new night restrictions for Heathrow and Gatwick in the next few weeks.

London Dial-a-Ride

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received about funding levels for London Dial-a-Ride in 1988-89.

Mr. David Mitchell: I have received a number of letters from Members of Parliament, private individuals and others concerning Dial-a-Ride. I have made it clear that as there is evidence that current resources are not in all cases being used cost-effectively, decisions on future levels of funding must depend on further efficiency improvements by some Dial-a-Ride organisations.

Roads

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to reappraise future road requirements.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We shall continue to develop the trunk road network to meet future traffic needs in a timely fashion. We have a large new construction and improvement programme which is regularly reviewed and to which further schemes are added as required. Each scheme within the programme undergoes continuous assessment to ensure that, when constructed, it will meet its required objectives. Responsibility for local roads rests with local highway authorities.

London Regional Transport

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next expects to meet the chairman of London Regional Transport to discuss problems facing London Regional Transport.

Mr. David Mitchell: My right hon. Friend next expects to meet the chairman of London Regional Transport on 4 February 1988.

London Underground

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the total number of stations covered by the station modernisation of London Underground Limited as described in paragraph 15 of the annual business plan of London Regional Transport, together with (a) expenditure already incurred (b) expenditure already committed and (c) the total sums paid to each to the five contractors, respectively, receiving the highest global sums together with the number of stations contracts awarded to each.

Mr. David Mitchell: The latest reported information shows that expenditure to date on the station modernisation programme, begun in 1981, is £73 million, with a further £32 million committed (1987 prices). The figures include additional maintenance and repair work undertaken during modernisation. The programme affects 138 stations in whole or in part. Information on the value of contracts placed respectively with individual contractors since 1981 is not readily available.

Lorry Drivers (Refreshment Facilities)

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what plans he has to encourage the provision of adequate resting and refreshment facilities for commercial lorry drivers on Britain's roads, in the light of the decline in such provision;

(2) what steps are being taken to encourage the building of refreshment establishments on Britain's trunk roads that cater for the drivers of heavy goods vehicles.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We are shortly to have meetings with representatives of the local authority associations and the private sector about steps to stimulate further provision of facilities.

Our general policy on provision of service areas on English trunk roads was set out in answer to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Worcestershire (Mr. Forth) on 1 July 1987 at column 88.

On motorways, our aim is to provide service areas at approximately 30-mile intervals. They are required to provide, for 24 hours of the day, toilets, refreshments, telephones and fuel for all motorway travellers, including drivers of heavy goods vehicles. Operators are free to agree parking stays of over two hours and may charge a fee. HGV drivers frequently rest overnight in their sleeper cabs. Operators are providing overnight accommodation blocks on many of the sites.

On all-purpose trunk roads, the provision of services, including those for heavy goods vehicles, is primarily for the private sector within the framework of local planning policies. We want to see the needs of HGV drivers met.

Responsibility for roads other than trunk roads lies with the local highway authority.

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will introduce legislation to outlaw the display of signs at refreshment establishments which refuse admittance to drivers of heavy goods vehicles.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We could not reasonably ban display of any road traffic sign which indicates that a particular service area is not for heavy goods vehicles. Some service areas off motorways do not have the capacity to take such vehicles. We have no jurisdiction over signs displayed by proprietors on their own property.

Cattle Creep (A52 Bypass)

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what would be the cost of providing a cattle creep under the A52 bypass at Bottesford, Leicestershire.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The cost would be £260,000 at Barkestone lane and £220,000 at Easthorpe/Muston lane had they been included in the design. Work on the bypass has started and it would cost considerably more to incorporate them now.

Underpasses

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will list the bypasses of trunk roads constructed by his Department over the last three years which have (a) cattle creeps, (b) pedestrian under-passes and (c) pedestrian bridges provided as part of the construction work; and what was the cost of the provision in each case.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I will write to my hon. Friend.

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what would be the approximate cost of constructing underpasses under the new A52 by-pass at Bottesford, Leicestershire, at Easthorpe/Muston lane and Barkestone lane; and how that would compare with the construction cost of the by-pass itself.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: If they had been included in the design, the cost of constructing the two underpasses would have been £480,000. Construction of the bypass is estimated to cost £2·76 million.

Provision of a cattle creep or underpasses was ruled out because of the costs involved. They would necessitate raising the level of the bypass over a distance of 1 km to achieve the required height.

At the public inquiry in April 1986, the Department gave evidence to show that, over a 10-hour period, between 8 am and 6 pm in September 1983, only 15 cyclists and 12 pedestrians used Easthorpe/Muston lane. Numbers may have increased slightly, but it is not considered that they warrant the provision of an underpass. Barkestone lane has become a dead end. No counts were taken, but we would expect the number here to be even less. Very few residents are served by it.

Coal Imports

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consultations have taken place on the creation of new port facilities, or the expansion of existing port facilities, to land imported coal; and with whom.

Mr. David Mitchell: The provision of port facilities for unloading coal is a matter for users and port operators. The Central Electricity Generating Board has recently asked officials in my Department about the statutory procedure for seeking powers to construct a jetty for seaborne coal for its proposed new power station at Fawley.

London Hackney Cabs

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many personal accidents to passengers in the new London hackney cabs have been reported, with injuries arising from contact with the metal frame of the occasional seat; and if he will ask the Public Carriage Office to investigate and to make recommendations on necessary modifications.

Mr. David Mitchell: I have received no reports of accidents of this kind. The Department would be prepared to investigate any complaints and consider whether any design modifications are desirable.

Heathrow (Night Movements)

Dr. Glyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many of the scheduled night movements from and to Heathrow are (a) landings and (b) take-offs.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 25 January 1988]: The figures provided by Heathrow Airport Limited are:

	Landings		Take-offs		Total
	Number	Percentage	Number	Percentage	Number	Percentage
Winter 1986-87	2,256	82	490	18	2,746	100
Summer 1987	1,348	67	654	33	2,002	100

Dr. Glyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to ascertain from the airlines concerned the justification for the night movements in and out of Heathrow attributable to these airlines, and the extent to which such flights could be made in daytime; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 25 January 1988]: The Department consulted airlines about night restrictions at Heathrow in 1986. We consulted again in November on our proposals for future night restrictions. It is clear from their replies that the effectiveness of Heathrow as a major international airport would be seriously impaired if flights now operated at night were required to be by day.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Financial Services Act 1986

Dr. Blackburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he intends to make an order under section 191(3) of the Financial Services Act 1986.

Mr. Maude: I have today laid before Parliament an order exempting trustees who are members of certain small self-administered pension schemes and the members of certain other small schemes in certain circumstances for the requirement in section 191(1) to obtain authorisation because of their investment management activity.

Steel

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the total output of steel, the percentage exported and the share of the domestic market taken by imports in 1958, 1960, 1965, 1970, 1975 and each year from 1979 to 1987.

Mr. Butcher: The figures are as follows:

Imports

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the percentage of home demand taken by imports in the latest available year and in 1987 for (a) metal manufacturing, (b) chemicals, (c) man-made fibres, (d) mechanical engineering (e) electrical and electronic engineering, (f) motor vehicles and parts, (g) other transport equipment, (h) instrument engineering, (i) footwear and clothing, (j) other manufacturing and (k) manufacturing (revised definition).

Mr. Atkins: The most recent information, relating to the year ended September 1987, was published in " British Business" on 15 January 1988, page 20.

Iran

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) what percentage of EEC exports to Iran, by value was accounted for by exports from the United Kingdom in 1977, 1978, 1984, 1985, 1986 and 1987;

(2) what rank, among the current members of the EEC, the United Kingdom held in value of exports to Iran in 1977, 1978, 1984, 1985, 1986 and 1987.

Sheffield

Mr. Patnick: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many Government initiatives have been taken since 1979 to deal with urban dereliction and inner-city decay in Sheffield, by means of encouraging development and raising business confidence; if he will list them, indicating the amounts expended under each heading; if he will also indicate any grants available which were not taken up; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Since 1979, the Government have developed a range of initiatives to deal with urban dereliction and inner-city decay by encouraging development and raising business confidence, as I outlined in answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Staffordshire (Mr. Heddle) on 19 January 1988, Official Report, columns 598-600.

The following table gives details of the initiatives which have been undertaken in Sheffield since 1979 and the level of Government support:

	£ million
Urban Programme	38·0
Urban Development Grant	0·9
Derelict Land Grant	1·3
Estate Action	1·1
European Regional Development Fund	23·1
Regional Selective Assistance	9·2
Business Improvement Scheme	1·7
Industrial Development Act	3·0

In addition, the Government have given support under various schemes to assist local enterprise and innovation through the Sheffield enterprise agency and joint ventures with the private sector.

We have directed over £75 million towards these initiatives in Sheffield since 1979, which represents a substantial commitment to the area. There has been an increasing level of interest and take-up across the range of initiatives available to encourage development and raise business confidence.

High Technology Audits

Mr. Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many visits he has authorised, to United Kingdom companies by United States of America officials, pursuant to his agreement with the United States of America relating to high technology audits; when these visits took place; which companies were visited; and what reasons were given.

Mr. Alan Clark: None.

Trade Mission (South Africa)

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is his policy on the forthcoming United Kingdom South Africa Trade Association trade mission to South Africa; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: Officials both in the United Kingdom and overseas provide information and advice on the market to business visitors to South Africa, whether they travel there as individuals or as members of a trade mission. Such assistance is not contrary to any of our undertakings on South Africa.

Textile Industry (False Labelling)

Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if, in the light of the report by the trading standards sub-committee of Nottinghamshire county council, dated 16 November 1987, submitted to his office on 13 January, if he will indicate what steps his Department will take to protect the textile trade from unfair competition and loss of value to consumers by false labelling of goods, with particular reference to garments labelled as wool, and found to be either deficient or containing no wool at all.

Mr. Maude: I have noted the recent report of the trading standards sub-committee of the Nottinghamshire county council. Enforcement of United Kingdom legislation governing fibre content labelling of textile products rests, as does much other consumer protection legislation, with individual local authorities. I know, however that the EC Commission has been investigating whether there are particular problems concerning the importation of fabric with overstated wool content. It has not yet announced the outcome.

Deregulation

Mr. Grylls: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will give details of the progress made by his Department in implementing the policy of deregulation in the last 12 months.

Mr. Maude: Deregulation is one of the DTI's prime objectives and central to the enterprise initiative we launched earlier this month. In the last 12 months, substantial progress has been made in the areas listed in the report "Encouraging Enterprise" published last May, particularly in relation to reducing burdens imposed by company law, the Consumer Credit Act 1974 and the Weights and Measures Act 1985. Legislation to amend those Acts and implement the proposed changes in company law will be introduced at the first opportunity.

My hon. Friend can be assured that we will continue to devote every effort to simplifying those regulations which are necessary and removing those which are not.

Regional Aid

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will publish in the Official Report the names of all those companies which have received moneys from the regional development grant and regional selective assistance in excess of £25,000 since 1978-79 in the borough of Sunderland.

Mr. Kenneth Clark: The information requested is only available at disproportionate cost. However, details of grant recipients above certain thresholds are published in British Business. The dates of publication of regional development grant payments were as follows:

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will publish the amount of regional development grant and regional selective assistance grants made in (a) county of Tyne and Wear (b) new town industrial estate of Washington and (c) Sunderland borough council area for each year 1978-79 to the latest date available.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The information is not available in the form requested but the following data can be provided:

Instead data have been given for the employment office areas of Houghton, Southwich, Sunderland and Washington for this scheme.

Planning and Expenditure

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the implications for his Department's (a) planning and (b) spending on job reinforcement of recent projections published by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys that East Anglia will have in the next 13 years the greatest proportionate population increase of both people moving in and of new births of any English region.

Mr. Butcher [holding answer 25 January 1988]: The high population growth forecast for East Anglia reflects the economic buoyancy of the region. It is to the credit of East Anglian enterprise that GDP per head in East Anglia grew from being the eighth highest in the United Kingdom in 1975 to second highest in 1985. My Department wishes to encourage wealth creation in East Anglia, as elsewhere, and is ready to work with the private sector, local authorities, and the standing conference of East Anglia local authorities to achieve this end. In particular, the enterprise initiative, soon to operate in East Anglia from a DTI office in Cambridge, will be a vital factor in encouraging the growth of real jobs throughout the region.

Regional Selective Assistance

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if there are any proposals to change the criteria for granting regional selective assistance or the ceilings of such aid as a result of the ending of automatic grants.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 25 January 1988]: As the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster said in the House on 12 January 1988 at column 160, there are no proposals to change the essential criteria for granting regional selective assistance. We shall ensure that the criteria—particularly additionalityy, ie whether assistance is necessary to enable a project to proceed—are applied rigorously in the interests of securing maximum value from the resources devoted to the scheme.

The present ceilings on regional assistance are expressed in terms of the total amount of assistance which can be provided for a project. With the ending of regional development grant it will be possible in development areas for the same amount to be provided in RSA as could previously be provided in RDG and RSA combined. The amount actually offered in individual cases is the minimum needed for the project to proceed.

Mr. Blair: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many successful applications for regional selective assistance are forecast for 1988-89, 1989-90 and 1990-91.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 25 January 1988]: The number of successful applications for regional selective assistance will depend on the number and quality of applications which come forward. It is estimated that in England there will be approximately 1,600 applications during 1987-88 resulting in RSA offers. It is not possible to provide a forecast for future years with any degree of confidence, but the number is likely to increase.

Mr. Blair: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will forecast the level of regional selective assistance for 1990-91.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 25 January 1988]: The planned level of provision for expenditure on regional selective assistance in England in 1990-91 is approximately £150 million, of which some £130 million is for industrial and training grants. Residual commitments under the business improvement services scheme, and expenditure under the exchange risk guarantee scheme account for the remainder. These amounts are net of recoveries and other domestic receipts, but gross of receipts from the European regional development fund.

Associated British Foods

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list any Government assistance which has been given to Associated British Foods, specifically in relation to its Pendleton's factory in Kirkby.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 25 January 1988]: The Department of Trade and Industry has no record of an application from Associated British Foods for assistance for the Pendleton's factory in Kirkby.

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will meet a deputation from the work force of Associated British Foods to discuss the proposed closure of the Pendleton's factory in Kirkby with the consequent loss of 185 permanent jobs and a further 200 seasonal jobs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 25 January 1988]: I see no point in meeting a deputation from the work force of Associated British Foods at this time. The company has taken a commercial decision to close Pendleton's factory at Kirkby. This decision was taken on the basis of substantial losses incurred at the plant over the last four years.

European Regional Development Fund

Mr. Blair: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the latest forecast outturn for 1987-88 in respect of money obtained for the United Kingdom from the European regional development fund.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 25 January 1988]: United Kingdom receipts from the European regional development fund in the nine months to December 1987 were £255 million. The total for the current financial year should be about £340 million.

BP Shares

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has as to the latest level of shareholding in BP by Kuwaiti interests.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 25 January 1988]: The level of shareholding stood at 18·88 per cent. as at close of trading on 22 January.

ENERGY

Coal Industry

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if he will list the opencast coal workings currently operating in the United Kingdom, by region, and (a) the annual output in each site and (b) the expected life and total output of each site;

(2) if he will list all proposed new developments of opencast coal workings for each part of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The British Coal Corporation is responsible for both its own opencast mining operations and the issue of licences to private opencast operators. I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Coal Imports

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list (a) the amount of coal imports into the United Kingdom by country of origin, for the latest year for which figures are available, (b) the ports in which they are being landed and the amounts each year and (c) the names of the companies which are registered to import coal.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Details of imports of coal into the United Kingdom by country of origin in 1986 (the latest year available) are in table 20 of the "Digest of United Kingdom Energy Statistics" published by HMSO. A copy is in the Library of the House.

In 1986 the ports into which coal was being imported and the amounts landed were as follows:

Port	Quantity thousand tonnes
Middlesbrough	2,610
Port Talbot	1,558
Immingham	1,349
Greenock	1,301
Trent	778
Medway	661
London (including Tilbury)	404
Hartlepool	295
Cardiff	247
Sunderland	243
Colchester	196
Belfast	176
Liverpool	143
Avonmouth	96
Newport (Gwent)	83
Others (38 ports)	413
	10,554

Details about coal importing companies are commercially confidential.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what discussions there have been with importers of coal on the future levels of imported coal; and what was the outcome.

Mr. Michael Spicer: None.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Savings

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish the latest figures for savings on both a per capita basis and as a percentage of gross national product; and what comparable figures he has for other members of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development.

Mr. Lilley: The latest annual figures are for 1986, when, according to the United Kingdom national accounts, total saving (by persons, companies and Government) in the United Kingdom (after providing for stock appreciation but before providing for depreciation) amounted to £70·8 billion, or £1,247 per head of the population, or 18·7 per cent. of the gross national product.

International comparisons in money terms are difficult because of the difficulties in measuring according to some common standard, the different purchasing powers of different currencies. (Current exchange rates are not always a good guide.) The following table gives 1985 figures compiled by the OECD for gross saving as percentages of gross domestic product for each OECD country.

Gross saving as a percentage of GDP in 1985[1]

Publicity

Mr. Butler: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much was spent on Government publicity in free newspapers in the last three available years; and if he will make it his policy to increase the proportion of Government publicity expenditure through this medium.

Mr. Brooke: Information is not readily available in the form requested. The criterion used by the Central Office of Information in the selection of publicity media is, and must remain, cost-effectiveness in reaching the audience required to meet the specific objectives of each campaign.

Exchange Rate

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will set out in tabular form the relationship between the three-monthly change for the period 1975 to 1987 in the real exchange rate and the three-monthly change in (a) exports (volume), (b) imports (volume), (c) profits, (d) the retail prices index, (e) gross national product growth, (f) the level of domestic economic industry and (g) unemployment, all one year later.

Mr. Major: The figures requested are all readily available from published sources. The volume of exports and imports, industrial and commercial company gross trading profits, the retail prices index, industrial production and the level of unemployment may all be found in Economic Trends. Figures for the gross national product may be found in the monthly digest of statistics. There is no unique measure of the real exchange rate. Figures for the sterling exchange rate index and various measures of United Kingdom competitiveness are published in Economic Trends.

Interest Rates

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the correlation between interest rates and the public sector borrowing requirement from 1979 to 1987.

Mr. Major: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor has made no estimate. United Kingdom interest rates are influenced by numerous factors including interest rates abroad, inflationary expectations, financial innovation and private sector borrowing, in addition to public sector borrowing. Consequently, simple correlations between interest rates and the public sector borrowing requirement are uninformative.

Customs Clearance Station (Armagh)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the existing customs clearance station near Armagh city has facilities to handle (a) the importation of live cattle from the Republic of Ireland and (b) the importation of live cattle from the United Kingdom into the Republic of Ireland.

Mr. Lawson: The existing customs clearance station near Armagh city does not have facilities to handle the regular importation and exportation of live cattle between the United Kingdom and the Republic of Ireland. It does have a limited facility for the temporary holding of cattle which on occasion may have been detained for customs purposes. The facility is only very occasionally used as the Armagh customs station is not linked to a Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland cattle pen. There are no proposals for such a link.

Industrial Building Allowances

Mr. David Howell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will now take steps to remove the restrictions imposed on the use of industrial building allowances which distinguish between manufacturing and service industries and limit their utilisation to buildings in the former category.

Mr. Lawson [holding answer 25 January 1988]: I have noted my right hon. Friend's suggestion.

THE ARTS

Business Sponsorship

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he has plans to continue the business sponsorship incentive scheme for 1988-89; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: The business sponsorship incentive scheme continues to be highly successful. Since it began in 1984 it has raised £16·4 million of new money for the arts and has attracted over 600 first time sponsors. Seventy per cent. of the awards have gone to arts groups outside London.

I believe that the scheme should be strengthened and extended in 1988-89. I am therefore making provision to increase the amount available from £1·75 million to £3 million per annum, an increase of 70 per cent., to reflect the existing and anticipated growth in sponsorship. I am also restoring the maximum limit of £25,000 which was temporarily reduced following an exceptional run of awards in 1987-88. In addition, so as to safeguard the interests for arts organisations obtaining sponsorship for winter events, the budget will be operated in two six-monthly periods, on the basis of allocations reflecting the take-up pattern of previous years.

I believe that this increase in funding and the change to six-monthly operation will provide adequate resources for the scheme to operate throughout the financial year. However, the scheme is cash-limited and may be exhausted by exceptional demand in either six-month period. In such unlikely circumstances I shall not introduce reduced awards.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Conventional Stability

97. Mr. Allen Adams: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on her Majesty's Government's latest position in the talks on conventional stability in Europe.

98. Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's latest position in the talks on conventional stability in Europe.

99. Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's latest position in the talks on conventional stability in Europe.

100. Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's latest position in the talks on conventional stability in Europe.

Mr. Mellor: The position was set out in my reply to the hon. Member for Wallsend (Mr. Garrett) and others on 8 December. I repeat it here: the Government fully support the launching of conventional stability talks covering the Atlantic to the Urals, first called for in the NATO Brussels declaration of December 1986. To this end, the Government are playing an active part in the informal discussions taking place in Vienna between NATO and Warsaw pact representatives to find a mandate for formal conventional stability negotiations. We hope these can begin in the course of this year. The Government's—and NATO's—primary objectives in these talks will be the establishment of a stable and secure balance of forces in Europe at lower levels together with the elimination of disparities in force levels and of the Warsaw pact's capability for surprise attack and offensive action.

Arms Verification

101. Mr. Thorne: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made in arms verification negotiations with the Soviet Union which have implications for the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: Significant progress in the area of verification was made at the Stockholm conference on confidence-building which concluded in September 1986 with agreement on a substantial package of measures including provision for verification of compliance through on-site "challenge" inspection. The INF treaty signed on 8 December between the United States and Soviet Union also contains stringent verification provisions, including provisions for on-site inspections. The United Kingdom signed an exchange of notes with the Soviet Union on 21 December which granted the Soviet Union the right to conduct inspections at RAF Greenham Common and RAF Molesworth, the only United Kingdom bases covered by the INF agreement. In return, the Soviet Union agreed to comply with British laws and procedures.

The negotiations for a comprehensive ban on chemical weapons will contain extensive verification arrangements, including the need to monitor certain activities of the civil chemical industry. Good progress has recently been made. However, many important details remain to be settled and early agreement is unlikely.

COCOM

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has decided to join the internal COCOM trading community.

Mrs. Chalker: The United Kingdom is a member of COCOM (the Co-ordinating Committee for Multilateral Export Controls) at which the 16 member countries meet to co-ordinate the export of strategic equipment to Warsaw pact countries and China. COCOM is not a trading community.

Mr. Douglas Forsyth

Sir Geoffrey Johnson Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what response the Egyptian Government have made to diplomatic representations with regard to Mr. Douglas Forsyth's property in Cairo; and whether, having regard to the low level of the compensation payment mentioned in his reply of 18 November 1987, Official Report, column 598, he is satisfied that the requirement for Mr. Forsyth, in common with other British subjects, to sell his property under duress of enforced Egyptian occupation is consistent with the letter and spirit of the 1959 United Kingdom Egyptian agreement.

Mr. Mellor: No formal reply to our representations have yet been received but further hearings have taken place of both Mr. Forsyth's appeals with one being found in his favour. With regard to the compensation accepted by Mr. Forsyth's late fater, this was judicially determined by the Foreign Compensation Commission. There is no requirement under the 1959 agreement for Mr. Forsyth to sell his property, but this remains an option open to him.

Middle East

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a further statement on the peace progress in the middle east and any current Government initiatives in that regard.

Mr. Mellor: We shall continue to work for an international conference under United Nations auspicies as the framework for negotiations between the parties directly concerned.

European Commission

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met the President of the European Commission; and what subjects were discussed.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend's most recent meeting with the President of the European Commission was in Brussels on 25 January when they discussed a number of issues, notably the negotiations on the control of Community spending.

Central America

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his policy towards central America, in the light of the recent meeting of Presidents of the five central American countries.

Mr. Eggar: We note that at their summit on 15-16 January, the Presidents of central America declared that they were not entirely satisfied with the implementation thus far of the Esquipulas II undertakings, and that they agreed to fulfil these unconditionally and unilaterally. We have consistently supported efforts to restore peace and promote democracy in the region and appeal to all the central American countries, and especially Nicaragua, to comply with their obligations under the agreement, especially those relating to democratisation.

Sri Lanka

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Sri Lanka concerning human rights violations in the Jaffna peninsula.

Mr. Eggar: None. We deplore terrorist violations of human rights in the Jaffna peninsula and elsewhere.

Ireland

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met the Foreign Minister of the Republic of Ireland; and what matters were discussed.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend last met the acting Foreign Minister of the Republic of Ireland on 25 November at a meeting of the Foreign Affairs Council. Their discussion was confidential. My right hon. and learned Friend was to have met the Foreign Minister on 18 January in London but, he is at present indisposed.

United Nations

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the impact the current financial situation of the United Nations is having on its policies.

Mr. Eggar: While individual programmes are kept under constant review and the Secretary-General has instituted some cost-saving measures, including a recruitment freeze, reductions in staffing and savings in travel expenses, the current financial difficulties being experienced by the United Nations have not so far had any major impact on United Nations policies.

Contra Rebels (Funding)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has made to the State Department of the United States concerning the continued funding of the Contra rebels in Nicaragua; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: We regularly discuss central America with the United States Administration, and they are well aware of our support for a peaceful rather than a military solution to the problems of that region.

Cultural Diplomacy

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking in order to consolidate and expand the work of United Kingdom cultural diplomacy.

Mr. Eggar: The needs of cultural diplomacy, like all aspects of diplomacy, are subject to continuous review. The Foreign and Commonwealth Office and the British Council are working closely together to agree the range of global priorities and objectives and the most efficient means of achieving these. The importance that we attach to cultural diplomacy was made clear in our reply to the Foreign Affairs Committee's report, and was reaffirmed by my noble Friend the Minister of State in another place on 20 January.

Youth Exchange Schemes

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the total budget for youth exchanges between Britain and Europe; and if he will make a statement on the effect on this total of contributing to the Youth for Europe scheme.

Mr. Eggar [pursuant to his reply, 18 January 1988, c. 498]: The total amount spent by us on youth exchanges with western Europe for 1986-87 was £387,198. Of this £365,233 was spent on exchanges with our EC partners. The Community's Youth for Europe programme is not yet ready for adoption. It will not be possible to estimate its effect, if any, on the United Kingdom's youth exchange programme until a budget for it has been agreed.

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many people are covered by youth exchange programmes between Britain and Europe; how many schemes there are; how many of these are administered by the British Council; within the total how many places relate to each of Scotland, Northern Ireland and the North of England; and how many places relate to each of (a) the disabled and (b) ethnic minorities.

Mr. Eggar [pursuant to his reply, 18 January 1988, c. 498.]: In 1986/87, 12,604 young people were funded by the Government to participate in 692 youth exchanges with our west Europen neighbours. The funding of such schemes was administered by the British Council. Out of this total, 1,100 young people were funded from Scotland, 554 from Northern Ireland, 1,468 from the North of England (ie from the Scottish border to south Yorkshire). A total of 822 disabled young people were also funded from the United Kingdom and Western Europe. Statistics for ethnic minorities are not available for 1986-87. They will be available for 1987-88.

EMPLOYMENT

Small Firms

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what advice his Department gives to small firms which are owed money by overseas suppliers or contractors and which are unable to secure payment; what representations he has received on this subject from LAMDEC of Frodham, Warrington, Cheshire,; what response he has made; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: The booklet "Payment on Time" issued by my Department in conjunction with the CBI and other organisations gives general advice on payment problems. Where small firms cannot resolve payment disputes with customers they should seek legal advice, whether the customer is in the United Kingdom or overseas.

A letter from LAMDEC outlining its payment problems was received on 19 January, in addition to representations recently made by my hon. Friend. The specific points raised in these representations are involved in a current High Court action and I cannot comment on them. I will reply to the representations to comment on the general issue of late payment in industry shortly.

Benefits (Adjudication Officers)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his reply of 10 December, Official Report, column 230, in which offices the additional 90 staff in support of adjudication officers have been located; what is the number of adjudication officers in each unemployment benefit office; what is the number of new unemployment benefit claims at each office in the last financial year; and what is the current number of unemployment benefit claimants at each office.

Mr. Lee: Adjudication officers are not attached to individual unemployment benefit offices. They work in groups which cover a number of offices. The additional 90 support posts were allocated in the two years to August 1987, on the basis of regional assessments of need. Since the creation of the employment service, adjudication officers have been reorganised into new regional groups and the additional 90 posts cannot be specifically identified.

The number of adjudication officers and their support staff in post on 21 January 1988 in each employment service region was as follows:

Employment Service Region	Adjudication Officers	Support Staff
Northern	32	20
Yorkshire and Humberside	50	44
East Midlands	48	42
London and South-East	133	91
South-West	53	43
Wales	34	21
West Midlands	51	37
North-West	72	62
Scotland	51	40
Total	524	400

Regional statistics on new claims to unemployment benefit are collected by the Department of Health and Social Security. These could only be disaggregated by local benefit office at disproportionate cost. The regional totals are as follows:

DHSS Region	New Claims to Unemployment Benefit 1986-87
South-East	1,495,823
East Anglia	166,936
South-West	399,868
West Midlands	458,209
East Midlands	331,212
Yorkshire and Humberside	500,444
North-West	670,064
Northern	347,324
Wales	277,672
Scotland	613,181
Total	5,260,733

DHSS and Employment Service regions are not conterminous. Details of the number of people claiming unemployment benefit at each office are also collected by DHSS and published in "Unemployment Benefit Statistics —Quarterly Analysis of Unemployment Claimants" a copy of which is in the Library.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the number of persons in employment and the number unemployed in Derbyshire in each year from 1983.

Mr. Lee: Unemployment figures can be given but information about employment in counties and smaller areas is available only for years when censuses of employment are conducted. The available information is given in the table.

County of Derbyshire[1]

Year	Number of: unemployed claimants[2] (annual average)	Employees in employment[3]
1983	45,604	[4]
1984	47,208	330,200
1985	48,936	[4]
1986	49,799	[4]
1987	46,911	[4]

[1] The county is defined in terms of ward boundaries as at 1981.
[2] The numbers are affected by changes in the coverage of the count.
[3] The figure relates to a September date and excludes the self-employed and members of Her Majesty's forces.
[4] Not available.

Trade Union Elections

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received on the conduct of ballots for union elections.

Mr. Nicholls: In addition to comments on the proposals contained in chapter 5 of the Green Paper "Trade Unions and Their Members", my Department continues to receive letters and requests for meetings about the conduct of ballots for union elections.

Deregulation

Mr. Grylls: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give details of the progress made by his Department in implementing the policy of deregulation over the last 12 months.

Mr. Cope: The Department of Employment group has continued in the last 12 months to review existing regulations and seek new opportunities for deregulation, including further reductions in burdens on small firms. The progress report on deregulation, "Encouraging Enterprise", which the then Secretary of State for Employment made to Parliament in May 1987, described action being taken on a number of proposals for reducing the burden of employment protection and health and safety legislation on employers, while maintaining necessary protections. Since then the Department has issued a consultative document on the restrictions on the employment of young people and the removal of sex discrimination in legislation. The Health and Safety Commission has issued a consultative document with proposals to replace the existing requirements to post up abstracts of the Factories Act and Office, Shops and Railways Premises Act with a simpler and more effective requirement to provide information to employees by means of a poster or leaflet. Work has also continued on simplifying and speeding up administrative procedures which affect business and on improving means of communicating information and advice to employers about the DE group's services, programmes and responsibilities. Since "Encouraging Enterprise" we have, for example, speeded up the process of making decisions on loans to small firms under the loan guarantee scheme. The group has won two Plain English awards—one for DE's series of fact-sheets explaining employment law in clear and simple language; the other for ACAS's handbook for small firms, "Employing People". We have issued staff with guidelines on good buying practice and introduced training to help ensure that contacts with firms are dealt with efficiently.

Small Firms

Mr. Grylls: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the measures introduced by the Government to encourage small firms since 1979.

Mr. Cope [pursuant to his reply, 18 December 1987, c. 830]: In my earlier reply at the above reference I promised to write to my hon. Friend and place a copy of my reply in the Official Report. The full text of that letter is as follows:

On 18 December you asked for a list of the measures introduced by the Government since 1979 to encourage small firms. I am now able to let you have the information you requested. A copy of this letter will appear in the Official Report.

In 1979 responsibility for the small firms sector resided with the Department of Industry. Responsibility was transferred from the amalgamated Department of Trade and Industry to the Department of Employment on 3 September 1985 to give a sharper focus to the promotion of enterprise and its potential for job creation. Government policy throughout has been to concentrate on tackling the particular disadvantages faced by people setting up a new business or wishing to expand an existing small firm.

Finance

The availability of finance to small firms has been improved by:

The Loan Guarantee Scheme, introduced in 1981 to facilitate the supply of finance to viable small firms where conventional loans are not available, possibly due to lack of security or track record. The Scheme was extended for a further 3 years in the 1986 Budget. The premium paid by borrowers was reduced from 5 per cent. to 2·5 per cent. of the guaranteed proportion of the loan, which remains at 70 per cent. To date 18,741 guarantees have been issued with a total loan value of £627·42 million.

The Business Expansion Scheme, introduced in 1983, provides income tax relief on new equity investment in unquoted trading companies. The life of the scheme was extended indefinitely in the 1986 Budget. In the first two years of the scheme's operation some 1,500 companies raised £252 million, half of which were small enterprises seeking to raise amounts below £50,000. The figures include 88 companies which raised finance in both years.

The Venture Capital Scheme encourages the provision of finance by enabling individuals and investment companies to set capital losses on disposal of shares in unquoted trading companies against income.

The Enterprise Allowance Scheme was inroduced on a pilot basis in 1982 and nationally from 1983 to assist people who have been unemployed and in receipt of benefit to start their own business. Over 300,000 unemployed people have been helped by the Scheme. Provision for 102,500 entrants has been made for 1987-88 and 110,000 places in 1988-89. Greater emphasis is now being placed on counselling and training for applicants.

Premises

The Small Workshops Scheme stimulated private sector investment in small industrial premises. From March 1980 to March 1985, a 100 per cent. initial building allowance was given for capital expenditure on the contruction of small workshops.

English Industrial Estates Corporation (EIEC) has concentrated on providing premises for small businesses (up to 2,500 sq. ft.). Special rental and tenancy agreements have been devised to meet the needs of small businesses and entrepreneurs. EIEC works with a number of public sector agencies—the Department of Trade and Industry, the Development Commission and universities. Similar programmes are undertaken by the Scottish and Welsh Development Agencies. The Department of Trade and Industry announced on 12 January 1988 that they will be paying special attention to increasing managed work-spaces in inner city areas.

Training

The Manpower Services Commission has developed a range of training programmes and has particularly refocussed its adult training provision to take greater account of small firms' training needs.

The Training For Enterprise programme (TFE) aims to equip potential and existing entrepreneurs with the skills and knowledge required to successfully launch, manage and develop a small business. The TFE budget has increased greatly since 1979/80; in that year 120 people were helped by the programme at a cost of £0·42 million, in 1986/87 67,000 people benefitted at an expenditure of £18·6 million. Estimates for the current financial year are for £19·3 million and 68,000 people.

Government Purchasing

The Government has improved small firms' access to information about purchasing departments, their procedures, requirements and points of contact. A Department of Employment booklet on "Tendering for Government Contracts" has been supplemented by some individual departments' own publications and information published on Prestel. Tendering and approval procedures have been simplified by exempting suppliers to most Government departments from normal approval procedures for contracts under £10,000, by allowing non approved firms to tender for non-urgent contracts subject to subsequent approval and by encouraging Departments to make regular reviews of tender lists to encourage new suppliers.

The Ministry of Defence launched a small firms' initiative at the end of 1986 to increase competitive opportunities for small firms. This included the creation of the Small Firms Advice Division within the Procurement Executive to supervise the initiative, to advise on the development of MOD policy towards small firms and to offer a variety of advice and information to small firms wishing to obtain contracts. Another part of the initiative is aimed at enabling innovative small firms to obtain a greater share of MOD's research funds.

Innovation

The Small Firms Merit Award for Research and Technology (SMART) was run for the first time in 1986 to encourage small firms and potential entrepreneurs to put forward innovative ideas that cannot attract existing sources of funding. The scheme is to be expanded.

The Support for Innovation Scheme was introduced in 1981 by the then Department of Industry to offer firms assistance with Research and Development projects. The programme was reviewed in 1985 and the emphasis shifted towards collaborative research, advisory services and improving skills. Small firms are subject to a simplified appraisal process and so far 50 per cent. of participants in the scheme have been small firms. A change in emphasis was announced by DTI on 12 January 1988 to switch support from single companies to support for collaborative research and technology transfer particularly between industry and higher education institutions.

The Teaching Company Scheme was set up by the Science and Engineering Research Council and the Department of Trade and Industry in the mid-70s. The Scheme promotes close active partnership between Higher Educational Institutions and companies to work on major industrial problems such as the application of new technology. There are currently about 275 programmes and in 1986-87 total funding for the Scheme was £10 million split between DTI, the Research Councils and Industry. United Kingdom industry has a high regard for the scheme and it had led to the recruitment and satisfactory integration of high quality graduates into small companies, especially those with no graduate employees. On 12 January 1988 the Department of Trade and Industry announced that the scheme is being substantially increased and that it will put greater emphasis on the projects of small and medium sized firms.

Taxation

Both small companies and unicorporated businesses are benefiting from tax reductions. The basic rate of income tax and the "small companies" rate of corporation tax have been reduced to 27 per cent. The highest rates of income tax have been substantially reduced.

The capital gains tax exemption limits have been increased to £6,600. Retirement reliefs have been extended to cover retirement at 60, retirement through ill health and disposal of shares in family holding companies of trading groups. In 1987 the ceiling for retirement relief was raised to £125,000. Indexation has been improved and extended as have rollover reliefs. Reliefs have also been introduced to facilitate the incorporation of businesses, and losses on loans made for business purposes can now be offset against capital gains tax.

Significant changes to capital transfer tax were introduced between 1979 and 1985 to increase thresholds from £25,000 to £67,000 and increase rate bands. From 1981, only transfers within the preceding ten years were taken into account in assessing cumulative total CTT liability. In 1985, the charge on lifetime gifts was abolished and the tax renamed inheritance tax with the threshold increased to £71,000 with further increases in rate bands. In 1987 business relief was increased from 30 per cent. to 50 per cent. for minority holdings over 25 per cent. in unquoted companies, the threshold was increased to £90,000 and the rate bands reduced from seven to four. These changes will further facilitate the transfer of business from one generation to the next without the need to dilute assets to meet the consequent tax liability.

Income tax relief is available on personal borrowings raised to make investments in partnerships, close companies, co-operatives and employee buy-outs. Relief is also available for interest on loans to partners buying plant and machinery for use in their partnership business.

Losses incurred in any of the first four years of trading by a new business carried on by an individual can qualify for special income tax relief. This can be obtained against earnings during a three-year period before the new trade started.

Expenses incurred in the process of setting up a new business are now deductible from subsequent trading profits so long as the expenditure is undertaken in the three years prior to start-up.

In 1987 a package of measures was introduced to lighten the VAT burden on small businesses including the option of cash and annual accounting for businesses with turnover up to £250,000, the registration threshold has been increased to £21,300, the period in which businesses are obliged to register extended to 30 days and simpler schemes have been introduced for small and medium-sized retailers.

Deregulation

Over the past three years, reducing the burden of administrative and legislative burdens on business — particularly on small businesses—has been established as a major part of the Government's efforts to promote enterprise.

Although prime responsibility for deregulation lies with the individual departments, work is co-ordinated centrally by the Enterprise and Deregulation Unit (EDU), which is now located in the Department of Trade and Industry. The EDU also helps with the development of policies across Whitehall to encourage enterprise more generally.

Achievements to date are set out in the White papers "Lifting the Burden" (July 1985 Cmnd. 9571) and "Building Businesses . . . Not Barriers" (May 1986 Cmnd. 9794) and the report to Parliament "Encouraging Enterprise" (May 1987).

This Department has produced a simplified guide to employment legislation for small firms' advisors, along with a model employment form and notice board kit aimed to help small firms in particular. In March the Department published a cartoon leaflet and series of fact sheets on employment law, designed to help those employing people for the first time. In addition, the Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service has published a booklet for small firms with information on various aspects of employing people.

Advice

A major priority has been to make information and advice more accessible to small businesses and the self-employed through the Small Firms Service, Local Enterprise Agencies (LEAs), the Employment Service's Jobcentres and the publications "Action for Jobs" and "Guide to Enterprise".

The Small Firms Service is a nationwide service which offers free information and impartial and confidential counselling on all aspects of starting running and developing a small business. During the 1986-87 financial year the Small Firms Service dealt with 310,000 enquiries in Great Britain and over 38,000 counselling sessions in England alone. The first three counselling sessions for a business are free, a modest charge of £30 (including VAT) is made for any subsequent sessions.

To encourage the development of LEAs the Local Enterprise Agency Grant Scheme (LEAGS), a five year scheme of financial assistance designed to establish a network of viable self-supporting enterprise agencies, was introduced on 1 April 1986. LEAGs aims to encourage greater private sector support for the agencies (by being prepared to match it, up to a limit, with Government support). Approximately £2·4 million in grants was made available in the first year to about 170 agencies. A further £2·75 million is being made available in 1987-88. To encourage private sector support for LEAs, the government made provision in the 1982 Finance Act (Part III section 48) for tax relief on contributions to approved agencies by a company or unincorporated business.

The Council for Small Industries in Rural Areas provides rural small businesses with advice through 33 offices on local opportunities and conditions, business management, marketing and technical advice, skills training and financial service.

Until recently outside consultancy advice was subsidised through the Business and Technical Advisory Services (BTAS) run by the Department of Trade and Industry. BTAS provided subsidised consultancy to small and medium sized firms on design, marketing and quality management. Advice on advanced manufacturing technology was also available.

The Business Improvement Services package of schemes run by the Department of Trade and Industry, aimed to help small firms in areas affected by job losses in particular industries—steel, textiles, ship building, deep sea fisheries and tin-mining areas. Grants were available for consultancy advice on marketing, financial management, the application of computers and licensing in of products and processes, as well as for common services for groups of small firms and investment projects. Comparable schemes were operated by the Secretaries of State for Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland.

On 13 January 1988 the Department of Trade and Industry launched the "Enterprise Initiative", which offers access to and financial support towards the cost of specialised consultancy in a number of key management functions. This is targeted at firms with fewer than 500 employees.

Marketing

Throughout 1987, this Department, together with the Manpower Services Commission, Lloyds Bank and the Institute of Marketing sponsored a series of workshops designed to show managers of small firms how to improve their competitiveness by the implementation of practical marketing techniques. In addition, with funds provided by the Department of Employment, CoSIRA is currently offering grants to assist small rural businesses to improve their marketing and sales to trade buyers.

Health and Safety

The Health and Safety Commission's Small Firms Working Group, chaired by a CBI nominated Commissioner, has special responsibility for the interests of small firms. A number of publications aimed specifically at small firms, have been produced and distributed — for example, the leaflet "500 dead" and a model guidance document designed to help small firms prepare their policy on identifying and controlling the risks within their businesses. The Health and Safety Executive is also preparing a general guidance handbook on health and safety aimed particularly at small businesses, which will be available shortly.

Support in particular sectors

The Government sponsors the Co-operative Development Agency. The Co-operative Development Agency and Industrial Development Act 1984 provided additional funding, effectively extending the Agency's mandate for a further six years, and gave it limited additional powers.

The Small Engineering Firms Investment Scheme (SEFIS) was a short term scheme set up by the Department of Industry which closed for applications in September 1983. It operated in two phases to help small engineering firms to invest in particular types of advanced capital equipment.

ENVIRONMENT

Ordnance Survey

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the implications for the Government's policy on fair competition of the lack of a direct or notional payment to the Exchequer by the co-publisher of a joint Ordnance Survey venture for the use of the Ordnance Survey logo and the goodwill associated with the name of the Ordnance Survey.

Mr. Moynihan: The value of the Ordnance Survey's name and logo is recognised in any negotiation with a publishing house on a joint-venture proposal. When considering partnership, Ordnance Survey is looking not only at the financial soundness of the project but also at the benefits in editorial design, marketing and selling skills that the proposed partner will bring to the venture. These internal skills, which play a major part in the success of any co-publication, will not be charged as a cost to the product by the commercial partner but have a value against which Ordnance Survey sets the value of its name and logo.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to the answer of 17 November 1987, Official Report, column 569, whether the Ordnance Survey commercial interest guidelines require the cost of drawing the maps used in the production of joint commercial ventures to be taken into account in the pricing of such publications.

Mr. Moynihan: The commercial interest guidelines as they apply to co-publishing require Ordnance Survey to act fairly and follow normal commercial practices in respect of setting prices and sharing all relevant production costs, along with the charging of royalty as a contribution to the use and maintenance of the mapping archive in line with that applied to other publishers. Relevant costs include those incurred by Ordnance Survey to produce the specific map components incorporated in co-publication.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his reply of 20 November 1987, Official Report, columns 681-82, whether the confidential information, concerning their future plans, which the private map-maker is required to provide to the Ordnance Survey, is seen by the publication division.

Mr. Moynihan: The information on map content and print run required from publishers by the copyright branch of Ordnance Survey to provide for prior permission to be given for the use of Ordnance Survey material and for the correct assessment of the royalty rate due, is not seen by Ordnance Survey's publication division.

Pollution

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many reportings were made, and by whom, of the chemical smell which affected a wide area of the north of England on Friday 3 April 1987; what subsequent reports have been compiled; what caused the smell; which body within the area of responsibility of his Department had responsibility for dealing with it; whether there was any evidence to connect it with the dumping of chemical waste in the North sea; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: Local authorities, the gas board, the emergency services, the Health and Safety Executive, Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution and the media all received telephone inquiries about the smell from members of the public. Her Majesty's district inspector of pollution reported on the incident. I am also aware of a report in June 1987 by the chief environmental health officer of Leeds city council to the council's health committee. No action was required of this Department, other than the monitoring of the incident undertaken by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution. It has not been possible to identify the origin of the smell, but given the prevailing wind at the time and the extent of the area affected, it has been concluded that it may have been caused by illegal tank washing by a ship in the North Sea or an offshore chemical spillage.

Planning Appeals

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on how many occasions since 1974 he has overruled his inspector's advice on planning appeals.

Mr. Waldegrave: The information requested is available on an annual basis. The table shows the number of occasions on which the Secretary of State made decisions on planning appeals contrary to the inspectors' recommendation, following a public inquiry.

Year	Total number of appeals decided	Appeals recovered for decision by the Secretary of State
		Number decided after inquiry	Number of decisions contrary to inspectors' recommendation
1974	12,198	1,216	71
1975	11,486	1,397	57
1976	9,253	1,263	52
1977	8,366	953	36
1978	8,952	882	41

Official Posts

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in the Official Report the official posts, paid and unpaid, that are in his gift; and for each post, if he will state the level of remuneration where appropriate.

Mr. Ridley: The appointments to public bodies for which my Department is responsible are shown in the HMSO publication "Public Bodies 1987", which gives information on the numbers of posts and the levels of remuneration. These appointments are made under a variety of arrangements, and I and my Department are involved in the appointments to varying extents.

In addition I make appointments to the following other bodies:

Architectural Heritage Fund:
Five members—Unpaid

National House Building Council:
Chairman—Unpaid

National Park Planning Boards and Committee:
One third of the Members—Unpaid

Sutton Housing Trust:
Four Trustees—Honorarium, £1,575

Dartmoor Steering Group:
Chairman (appointed jointly with Secretary of State for Defence)—Unpaid

Parliamentary Boundary Commission:
One Member—Unpaid

Building Research Establishment Panel of Visitors:
Up to 15 members—Honorarium, £1,000

The Chequers Trust:
One Trustee—Unpaid

Environmental Assessment

Mr. Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures Her Majesty's Government propose to take to comply with European Economic Commission directive 85/337 on the assessment of the affects of certain public and private projects on the environment.

Mr. Waldegrave: A consultation paper on the implementation of the European Community's directive on environmental assessment was issued by my Department in April 1986. In the light of the responses received to that paper, we are today issuing a further consultation document about the detailed legal and other mechanisms by which the directive will be implemented. Copies are being placed in the Library.

A further paper includes a draft departmental circular which sets out proposed procedures for projects subject to planning control, including procedures for determining whether individual projects of the types listed in annex II to the directive should be subject to environmental assessment. The draft circular gives guidance on the scale and character of projects which might require assessment under the directive.

The consultation document also includes proposals for applying the requirements of the directive to types of project listed in annexes I and II to the directive for which planning permission is not required, including certain agriculture fisheries and forestry projects, highways and other transport projects, and power stations and overhead electricity lines.

I believe that our proposals will make a positive contribution to the effectiveness of our environmental decision making, but the proposals have been designed to ensure that the requirements of the directive are met without placing unnecessary burdens on developers or unnecessarily complicating the planning process. The planning systems in Great Britain already ensure that the environmental implications of new development are considered before permission is granted. For major projects likely to have significant environmental effects, environmental assessment can be a valuable technique for drawing together information so that those effects are taken fully into account in planning the project and deciding whether it should proceed.

Member states are required to take the measures necessary to comply with the directive before 3 July 1988.

Similar consultation papers will be issued by the Scottish the Welsh Office and by (DOE) Northern Ireland Office.

Sport (Drugs Testing)

Mr. John Carlisle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if his Department will make funds available to support the Sport Council's new drugs testing regime.

Mr. Moynihan: The Department has decided to make an additional allocation of £180,000 to the Sports Council to complete the total financial package required to fund the new testing regime in its first year—1988-89. The council and the Government expect that private sector sponsorship will make a substantial contribution to funding the scheme in future years.

SCOTLAND

Electorate

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the Scottish regions in order of percentage growth in electorate since 1982; and what has been the percentage growth and the actual figures in each case.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information for the Scottish regions and islands areas for the period 1982-87 is set out in the table.

Region/Islands area	Local government electorate 1982	1987	Increase	Percentage increase
Grampian region	365,445	391,115	25,670	7·0
Highland region	142,964	151,641	8,677	6·1
Orkney Islands area	14,310	14,975	665	4·6

Mentally Disordered Prisoners

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consideration his Department has given to the problems presented by mentally disordered prisoners in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Clydebank and Milngavie (Mr. Worthington) of 11 January at column 150-151.

School Management

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, under the Government's school management proposals whether school boards will be responsible for issues of non-attendance at school.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Government have concluded that it should not be one of the basic duties of a school board to be responsible for attendance issues. It will be possible for functions related to school attendance to be delegated subsequently by the education authority.

Education Reform

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the total cost incurred by his Department in carrying out the consultative process on school management and the role of parents, showing how these were accrued in (a) printing, (b) distribution, (c) general administration costs, (d) circulation of material to the press and media, (e) foreign and domestic travel by the Minister responsible for education and (f) any other costs.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is given in the table. Where actual costs have not yet been received, or cannot be calculated, best estimates have been used. Distribution costs relate to bulk contracted distribution and exclude postage charges for copies issued in response to individual requests received by the Department; these charges cannot be estimated with sufficient accuracy.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will set out a list of the powers of the school boards under the Government's new proposals.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: We propose that all school boards should have common basic functions, the main features of which are set out in "School Management: The Government's conclusions" which was published on 18 January. A Bill to give effect to these proposals will be published shortly.

We propose that all school boards should have common basic functions, including: a right to seek information and initiate discussion on any matter to do with the running of the school; a right to approve the headteacher's plans for spending on books and materials; involvement in the appointment committees for assistant head teacher, deputy head teacher and head teacher; a right to add or delete names from the shortlist for the head teacher appointment; power to raise funds for the benefit of the school; control of out of hours use of school premises (but excluding power to set charges); power to set occasional holidays for the school within statutory limits; responsibility for encouraging liaison between parents and school; a duty to report to parents on the board's own activities.

Boards would be able to request that further powers were delegated to them by the education authority. If the authority was unwilling to grant the power request, the board is able to seek parental support in a ballot and if got that support to appeal to the Secretary of State.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table similar to that on page 285 of "The Government's Expenditure Plans 1988-89 to 1990-91", volume II (Cm. 288-II) for each year since 1979-80, at constant 1986-87 prices.

Mr. Rifkind: The information is as follows:

Museums and Galleries Commission (Report)

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he intends to announce his response to the Museums and Galleries Commission's report on museums in Scotland published in September 1986.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: An announcement will be made shortly.

Scottish Museums Council

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he intends to announce the level of the 1988-89 grant to the Scottish Museums Council.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Scottish Museums Council will receive notification of a provisional grant allocation for 1988-89 in the next week or so, pending the announcement of the Government's response to the Miles report.

Rating Reform

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the number of single parents who will pay the poll tax; and, of those, how many will be subject to full rebate.

Mr. Lang: The Green Paper "Paying for Local Government" estimated that there are about 100,000 one-parent family tax units in Scotland; the number receiving community charge rebates will depend on personal circumstances. Details of the community charge rebate scheme are now the subject of consultation with the local authority associations and are a matter for my hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimates he has made of how many people will receive poll tax rebates; and at what level.

Mr. Lang: The details of the community charge rebate scheme are now the subject of consultation with the local authority associations, and are a matter for my hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services.

Education Expenditure

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the average expenditure per pupil in (i) primary and (ii) secondary schools in Scotland; and what information he has on comparable expenditures in (a) Belgium, (b) Denmark, (c) France, (d) the Federal Republic of Germany, (e) Holland and (f) Sweden.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: In 1985-86, the latest year for which information is available, net expenditure per pupil in Scotland, at outturn prices, was £961 for primary and £1,567 for secondary. Comparable expenditure figures are not readily available for the other countries listed.

Vacant Dwellings

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the latest figures for vacant dwellings in Scotland owned (a) by Government Departments or agencies, (b) local authorities and (c) private owners.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: At 31 March 1987, approximately 21,300 dwellings owned by local authorities were vacant. Up-to-date figures for the other groupings requested are not available.

Blood Donations

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much blood was donated in (a) Scotland and (b) Greater Glasgow health board area in each month in 1983, 1984, 1985, 1986 and 1987; and in each year for both areas, by how much the amount donated was above or below self-sufficiency for those areas.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer, Monday 2 January 1988]: Greater Glasgow health board is one of six boards covered by the West of Scotland region of the Scottish national blood transfusion service and statistics relating to that board could be separately identified only at disporportionate cost. The following table shows the requested information for the West of Scotland region as a whole, and for Scotland. The information is aggregated quarterly: a monthly breakdown is not readily available.

Blood collected in Scotland is for use wherever it is needed, shortages where they arise in a particular area being met from surpluses in other areas. Scotland has been self-sufficient in blood and all normally requires blood products since the end of 1983.

Notes:
1. One donation is equivalent to 200 ml (approximately) of plasma.
2. The basis of recording changed (from 1985) from "donations collected" to "donors bled". The two figures are not totally comparable as some donors may not be able to complete the donation.

Illegal Drugs

Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has as to how many vessels were seached for illegal drugs in the Firth of Forth area during 1984, 1985, 1986 and 1987, respectively; and what were the numbers of convictions.

Mr. Lilley: I have been asked to reply.

Vessels are not searched by Customs specifically for illegal drugs, but for smuggled goods in general (although the detection of drugs is, of course, a top priority). The numbers of vessels searched, drugs and other smuggled goods found, and convictions are as follows:

	Discovering of smuggled goods			Convictions
Year	Vessels	Drugs	Other goods	Drugs	Other goods
1984	378	1	48	1	—
1985	520	—	92	—	1
1986	547	8	106	—	—
1987	612	3	77	—	—
Totals	2,057	12	323	1	1

In 10 of the 12 drugs cases the person smuggling the drug could not be traced. The non-drugs cases concerned mainly goods subject to excise duties, where smuggling offences are generally dealt with by payment of a compounded penalty rather than court proceedings.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

ADAS (Charges)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent representations he has received concerning charges made by the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service for routine visits to farms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I have received representations from individual farmers, from their Members of Parliament and from organisations such as the National Farmers' Union and Milk Marketing Board about the introduction of charges for work in connection with the milk and dairies regulations.

The decision to introduce charges reflects the need to reduce public expenditure and our view that the industry benefits from the strict enforcement of hygiene standards. I have no plans to review our policy on this point of principle, but the search for economies is continuing and any reduction in costs will be passed on to producers. In this connection my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales and I have decided, with the agreement of the Prime Minister's adviser on efficiency, that there should be a formal efficiency scrutiny to review the scope for further economies in the enforcement of the milk and dairies regulations. A member of the state veterinary service has been appointed as the examining officer responsible for undertaking the scrutiny. He will be consulting widely in the course of the study and is required to report by the end of May 1988.

Annual Review

Mr. Soames: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the outcome of the 1988 Annual Review of Agriculture.

Mr. MacGregor: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave on 25 January to the hon. Member for Caithness and Sutherland (Mr. MacLennan).

Sheep (Radioactivity)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many sheep in the restricted area of Cumbria which had died from natural causes were monitored for radioactivity in each month from January 1987 to date.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 25 January 1988]: The information requested is as follows:

Farm Woodland Scheme

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what extra provision, in terms of staff and resources, he is making for the Agricultural Development Advisory Service in order to meet the demands of the proposed farm woodland grant scheme.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 25 January 1988]: The demand for advice is hard to predict with a new scheme of this sort, since it will depend upon the regional spread, the pattern of uptake during the year, the number of farmers who may wish to explore possibilities without necessarily joining the scheme, and the number who require more detailed advice. However, we shall be making available a number of ADAS advisers to deal with this work on a full or part-time basis and we shall be keeping the position under review in the light of demand for advice. The Forestry Commission is also allocating additional staff to the scheme.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what training is being given to Agricultural Development Advisory Service employees to deal with the proposed farm woodland grant scheme.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 25 January 1988]: ADAS employs more than 100 chartered surveyors who have a sound basic training in forestry and the related questions of conservation and amenity in woodlands. Of these, 24 have already received further specialist training in these subject areas. Beyond this, ADAS's policy of continuing professional development will help to ensure that the proficiency of these officers is subject to continued improvement.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture Fisheries and Food what consultation procedures will precede the payment of grants under the proposed farm woodland grant scheme; whether they will apply to all applications; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 25 January 1988]: Applications to join the farm woodland scheme will be subject to the prevailing consultation procedures operated by the Forestry Commission, for its forestry grant schemes. In drawing up the proposals for this scheme we have been concerned to try and simplify it as far as possible and to keep administrative costs to the minimum. To this end, we have decided to reduce the amount of consultation with local authorities on planting of small areas. However, in areas such as sites of special scientific interest, environmentally sensitive areas and national parks existing arrangements would continue to apply.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture Fisheries and Food how many Agricultural Development Advisory Service staff are presently employment to give specialist advice on the planting and management of farm woodland.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 25 January 1988]: None are employed purely for this purpose. In practice, ADAS staff who give advice on woodlands have a wide range of qualifications and spend differing proportions of their time on this work.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture Fisheries and Food what special consideration will be given to applications for grants under the proposed farm woodland grant scheme to farmers in environmentally sensitive areas, sites of special scientific interest, areas of outstanding natural beauty and national parks, respectively.

Mr. Donald Thompson: [holding answer 25 January 1988]: In drawing up their applications for grant, farmers will be reminded of the need to take account of any such designations in the type of scheme they put forward.

Proposals in the above areas will then be scrutinised to ensure that they are compatible with the designation. They will also be subject to the Forestry Commission's consultation procedures where applicable.

Hedgerows

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to the reply of 12 January, if he will introduce legislation to make possible the allocation of grants to local authorities for the provision, replacement or improvement of hedgerows; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan I have been asked to reply.

Grants from the Countryside Commission are already available to local authorities and others towards the costs of replanting, reinstating or improving hedgerows, where these contribute to the landscape. The Nature Conservancy Council has power to pay grants to local authorities and others on expenditure relating to hedgerows which are an integral part of a site of nature conservation importance.

Irradiated Foodstuffs

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) how many instances there have been in each year since 1980 of irradiated foodstuffs imported into the United kingdom being returned;

(2) how many instances there have been in each year since 1980 of irradiated foodstuffs being imported into the United Kingdom for domestic consumption;

(3) if his Department has developed any method of testing imported foodstuffs in order to determine whether they have been subjected to irradiation for the purpose of preservation;

(4) how many prosecutions there have been in each year since 1980 for the importation of irradiated foodstuffs into the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Currie: I have been asked to reply.

Under the Food (Control of Irradiation) Regulations 1967, it is illegal to import irradiated food. Port health authorities are watchful for any indication of irradiation as evidenced by accompanying documentation or markings on the packaging. Only one well publicised, illegal, importation is on record. In the current financial year, the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food is providing £150,000 for research towards the development of detection tests.

DEFENCE

Royal Ordnance Factories

15. Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what action he has taken in respect of the criticisms made by the Comptroller and Auditor General of his Department in relation to the privatisation of Royal Ordnance factories; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: There is nothing in the Comptroller and Auditor General's report which is a criticism of the Department of a sort which requires any action. Therefore, no action has been taken.

Persian Gulf (Service Personnel)

16. Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many non-Royal Navy forces personnel are currently engaged in operations in the Gulf.

Mr. Ian Stewart: It is not our general practice to give details of numbers of service personnel operationally deployed.

44. Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current level of commitment of (a) operational units and (b) personnel to operations in the Gulf.

75. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current level of commitment of (a) operational units and (b) personnel to operations in the Gulf.

80. Mr. Cabom: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current level of commitment of (a) operational units and (b) personnel to operations in the Gulf.

92. Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current level of commitment of (a) operational units and (b) personnel to operations in the Gulf.

Mr. Ian Stewart: It is not our practice to comment on details of operational matters. However, I can say that there are currently three vessels of destroyer or frigate size, four mine counter-measure vessels, and associated afloat support in the Gulf area.

Nuclear Artillery

17. Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the United Kingdom's latest plans for battlefield nuclear artillery systems.

87. Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the United Kingdom's latest plans for battlefield nuclear artillery systems.

89. Mr. Allan McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the United Kingdom's latest plans for battlefield nuclear artillery systems.

Mr. Ian Stewart: As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State said in his reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Wealden (Sir G. Johnson Smith) on 23 July 1987, at column 390, it has been decided to rationalise United Kingdom-operated battlefield nuclear weapon systems in BAOR by withdrawing from the 8 in. nuclear artillery role and concentrating resources on the 155 mm dual-capable gun which is already in service. This rationalisation process is now under way.

No decisions on modernisation as it affects British forces have yet been taken. A report on this aspect will be made to the House when the appropriate moment comes.

Dartmoor National Park

18. Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what weight he gives when making decisions on future military activity on Dartmoor to the implications for public enjoyment of the Dartmoor national park of the continuing firing of live ammunition.

Mr. Freeman: The range danger areas cover only 10 per cent. of the Dartmoor national park. Moreover, there is no live firing on Dartmoor during August, on all public holidays or, so far as possible, at weekends, which are the times when most visitors would wish to enjoy the use of the national park. I shall naturally continue to give the fullest consideration to the question of public access to Dartmoor when making decisions about military activity commensurate with the overriding need to ensure the maintenance of training standards and operational effectiveness in the services.

French Defence Minister

19. Mr. Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last met his French counterpart; and what matters were discussed.

49. Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last met his French counterpart; and what matters were discussed.

79. Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last met his French counterpart; and what matters were discussed.

82. Mr. Orme: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last met his French counterpart; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Younger: I last met M. Giraud in mid-December. We discussed a range of subjects of mutual defence interest.

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on his plans in the current year for closer co-operation on defence matters with his opposite number, the French Minister of National Defence.

Mr. Ian Stewart: We will continue to seek opportunities for extending Anglo-French co-operation across a wide range of defence business with a view to developing further the close relationship that already exists between us.

Nuclear Tests (Radiation Victims)

20. Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects he receive the report of the National Radiological Protection Board on nuclear test veterans; when he will respond; and if he will make a statement.

28. Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to receive the report of the National Radiological Protection Board on nuclear test veterans; when he will respond; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Members to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Knowsley, North (Mr. Howarth) earlier today.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he next proposes to meet representatives of the Nuclear Test Veterans Association to discuss their claim for damages to soldiers caused by British nuclear tests.

Mr. Sainsbury: My noble Friend the Minister of State for Defence Procurement, who is responsible for these matters, offered to meet members of the BNTV as early as March 1987. This offer has been reiterated several times, but has as yet to be taken up. The offer still stands.

Schoolchildren (Germany)

21. Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans to review the school psychological service and pre-school facilities available to the children of service men serving in Germany.

Mr. Freeman: The Service Children's Education Authority (SCEA) conducted a review of its special needs provision including that for pre-school children during 1987. Policy changes are currently under discussion within the Ministry of Defence.

The subject of pre-school facilities is kept under continous review. The Pre-School Playgroups Association in Germany was first established in 1980 and has proved most successful — the salary and expenses of the co-ordinator and full-time organisers, one for each division headquarters, are now met from public funds.

Low-flying Aircraft

22. Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent consultations his Department has had with the National Farmers Union, the Scottish National Farmers Union and the Farmers Union of Wales concerning compensation for the effects of low-flying aircraft.

Mr. Freeman: Officials met representatives of the National Farmers Union, the Scottish National Farmers Union and the Farmers Union of Wales during 1987 as part of my Department's review of procedures for dealing with compensation claims from farmers whose livestock may have been affected by low-flying military aircraft. Discussions have continued since then, and regular contact is also maintained between my Department's officials and the farmers' unions on a case-by-case basis.

32. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about low-flying aircraft over East Anglia.

Mr. Freeman: As my hon. Friend will be aware, training in the crucial techniques of low flying is vital if we are to maintain an effective modern air force capable of maintaining our security by deterring any potential aggressor. None the less, we are acutely aware of the disturbance this essential activity may cause on the ground and will continue to do all we can to keep this to an absolute minimum. In fact, low-flying aircraft activity during 1987 was marginally lower than during 1986, a trend particularly marked in the low-flying administrative area which comprises most of East Anglia and parts of Lincolnshire, which experienced approximately 24,000 movements compared with just over 32,000 the previous year.

Nuclear Modernisation (Montebello Decisions)

23. Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with his Dutch counterpart regarding interpretation of the nature of the recommendation and decisions on nuclear modernisation reached at Montebello in 1983.

27. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with his Dutch counterpart regarding interpretation of the nature of the recommendations and decisions on nuclear modernisation reached at Montebello in 1983.

58. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with his Dutch counterpart regarding interpretation of the nature of the recommendations and decisions on nuclear modernisation reached at Montebello in 1983.

84. Mr. Marlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with his Dutch counterpart regarding interpretation of the nature of the recommendations and decisions on nuclear modernisation reached at Montebello in 1983.

Mr. Ian Stewart: My right hon. Friend and his predecessors have discussed the 1983 Montebello decision with their Dutch colleagues on numerous occasions over the last five years, both bilaterally and in NATO fora.

European Fighter Aircraft

24. Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans to reduce the Royal Air Force's current requirement for the European fighter aircraft.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Dundee, West (Mr. Ross).

Royal Navy

25. Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the effectiveness of the Royal Navy.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The Government remain committed to a modern, effective and well-balanced Royal Navy. Since 1979 we have ordered no fewer than 61 ships and submarines worth over £6 billion at 1986-87 prices; these include seven new and highly capable classes of vessel. We also continue to pursue a substantial programme of enhancements to existing weapons and sensor systems and purchases of new ones to update our capabilities and to ensure that the effectiveness of the Royal Navy is maintained.

Frigates

26. Mr. Rees: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on his plans for frigate construction over the next 12 months.

30. Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the frigate and destroyer building programme.

65. Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on his plans for frigate construction over the next 12 months.

Mr. Sainsbury: The frigate-building programme is proceeding well with 10 frigates currently under construction, four of which are expected to enter service this year. In addition, on 6 October last year, my right hon. Friend announced that we were to seek tenders for up to four more type 23 frigates. We have received tenders and their evaluation has now begun.

Cruise Missiles

29. Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his latest estimate of the numbers of United States nuclear sea-launched cruise missiles (a) currently based in the Atlantic and (b) to be based there by 1995.

38. Mr. Bidwell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his latest estimate of the numbers of United States nuclear sea-launched cruise missiles (a) currently based in the Atlantic and (b) to be based there by 1995.

53. Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his latest estimate of the numbers of United States nuclear sea-launched cruise missiles (a) currently based in the Atlantic, (b) to be based there by 1995.

78. Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his latest estimate of the numbers of United States nuclear sea-launched cruise missiles (a) currently based in the Atlantic and (b) to be based there by 1995.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Nuclear sea-launched cruise missiles (SLCM) were introduced into service with US naval forces in 1984. These forces are deployed worldwide, including the Atlantic. The number of nuclear SLCM deployed in the Atlantic is classified United States Government information.

62. Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his latest estimate of the number of United States nuclear air-launched cruise missiles (a) currently based in Europe and (b) to be based there by 1995.

74. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his latest estimate of the number of United States nuclear air-launched cruise missiles (a) currently based in Europe and (b) to be based there by 1995.

86. Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his latest estimate of the number of United States nuclear air-launched cruise missiles (a) currently based in Europe and (b) to be based there by 1995.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I refer the hon. Members to the answer given earlier today by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to the hon. Member for Bristol, South (Ms. Primarolo).

Uniforms and Equipment

31. Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what basis it is decided when to update military uniform and equipment.

Mr. Freeman: I assume that my hon. Friend is referring to items of combat clothing and personal equipment. As a general principle, any necessary improvements to items already in service are proceeded with as and when they can be accommodated in the defence programme according to their relative priority. If my hon. Friend could specify the items of clothing or equipment which he is concerned about, I would be glad to reply in detail.

Territorial Army

33. Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on progress made and current plans for the improvement and increase in size of the infantry units within the Territorial Army.

Mr. Freeman: Phase II of the Territorial Army expansion programme set out in "Defence Open Government Document 84/02" began formally in April 1986. The majority of planned new infantry units and sub-units have been formed and are recruiting.

76. Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the manpower contribution to the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation of the British Territorial Army; and what percentage of the defence estimates expenditure on the British Territorial Army this represents.

Mr. Freeman: On current plans some 55,000 Territorial Army soldiers would be assigned to NATO tasks in the event of war. The balance would be deployed on defence tasks in the United Kingdom, which also form a contribution to NATO's military strategy. The cost of NATO-assigned forces represents approximately 65 per cent. of defence estimates expenditure on the Territorial Army.

RAF Air/Sea Rescue Services

34. Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many representations he has received in favour of maintaining Air/Sea rescue services as a function of the Royal Air Force.

Mr. Freeman: The Ministry of Defence has received a considerable number of inquiries concerning the future of the United Kingdom SAR service, of which about 45 have expressed support for the continuation of search and rescue helicopter services as a military function.

43. Mr. Terry Fields: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement concerning the future of the Royal Air Force air/sea rescue services.

56. Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement concerning the future of the Royal Air Force air/sea rescue services.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Members to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Coventry, South-East (Mr. Nellist) earlier today.

F-15E Strike Eagle

35. Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if there are any plans to base the F-15E Strike Eagle equipped with (a) the joint tactical missile system or (b) nuclear weapons in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I have nothing to add to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Member for Tonbridge and Malling (Mr. Stanley) on 23 February 1987, at column 141, to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, East (Mr. Strange).

South Rona

36. Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are his long-term plans for his Department's site at South Rona.

Mr. Freeman: The shore facilities for the Royal Navy's Minches trial range are based on Rona. There are no long-term plans to change this use.

USSR Nuclear Forces

37. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what implications the modernisation of the Soviet Union's nuclear forces has for the United Kingdom's defence policy.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The Soviet Union is continually updating and improving the capabilities of both its conventional and nuclear forces. This is a major consideration in determining our own defence priorities.

Defence Programmes (Employment Implications)

39. Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he makes of the employment implications in the defence industries after considering reductions in defence expenditure programmes.

88. Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he makes of the employment implications in the defence industries when considering reductions in defence expenditure programmes.

96. Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he makes of the employment implications in the defence industries when considering reductions in defence expenditure programmes.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to my answer given to the hon. Member for Mansfield (Mr. Meale) earlier today.

Nuclear Weapons

40. Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's latest plans to modernise their nuclear weaponry.

64. Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's latest plans to modernise their nuclear weaponry.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I refer the hon. Members to the reply given earlier today by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Hillsborough (Mr. Flannery).

YTS

41. Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many young people are now enrolled in YTS placements in each of the three services.

Mr. Freeman: In November 1987 a total of 543 trainees were serving on the armed services YTS. The numbers are broken down as shown in the table.

	Number
Royal Navy	6
Army	63
Royal Air Force	474

German Defence Minister

42. Mr. Litherland: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last met his German counterpart; and what matters were discussed.

83. Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last met his German counterpart; and what matters were discussed.

85. Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last met his German counterpart; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Ian Stewart: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State regularly meets his German counterpart to discuss a wide range of subjects of mutual interest. The last such meeting was on 20 January.

Falklands Campaign Widows (Assistance)

45. Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what financial assistance is currently provided by his Department for Falklands war widows.

57. Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what financial assistance is currently provided by his Department for Falklands war widows.

63. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what financial assistance is currently provided by his Department for Falklands war widows.

71. Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what financial assistance is currently provided by his Department for Falklands war widows.

Mr. Freeman: All Falklands war widows would receive benefits, as appropriate, from my Department under the terms of the armed forces pension scheme. For examples of the benefits payable I refer the hon. Members to the answer which I gave to the right hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South (Mr. Ashley) on 13 January 1988 at columns 323-24.

In addition, my Department also meets the travel costs for the next-of-kin to make one visit to the graves of service men who are killed while serving overseas, and are buried there, within two years of burial. This provision applied to the next-of-kin of those killed in the Falklands.

Chemical Weapons

46. Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the implications for United Kingdom defence policy of the resumption by the United States of America of a chemical weapons production.

67. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the implications for United Kingdom defence policy of the resumption by the United States of America of chemical weapons production.

68. Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the implications for United Kingdom defence policy of the resumption by the United States of America of chemical weapons production.

94. Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the implications for United Kingdom defence policy of the resumption by the United States of chemical weapons production.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The modernisation of the United States' limited retaliatory chemical weapons capability with binary munitions will underline to the Soviet Union the benefits of reaching early agreement in the negotiations in Geneva for a comprehensive and verifiable global ban on chemical weapons, which remains the Government's primary aim. In the absence of such an agreement, the production of binary munitions will contribute to the maintenance of NATO's deterrent strategy in the face of the massive Soviet chemical warfare capability.

Operational Requirements (Harmonisation)

47. Sir Antony Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent progress has been made towards harmonising operational requirements.

Mr. Sainsbury: Good progress has been made. Over the past three years the United Kingdom has subscribed to 18 staff requirements agreed in NATO's conference of national armaments directors (CNAD) and nine of the 13 agreed in the Independent European Programme Group (IEPG).

Strait of Hormuz (Armilla Patrol)

48. Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many merchant ships the Armilla patrol accompanied through the Strait of Hormuz during 1987.

Mr. Ian Stewart: During 1987, the Armilla patrol accompanied 405 British merchant ships through the Straits of Hormuz.

Persian Gulf (Mines)

50. Mr. John Townend: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many mines have been located and destroyed by Royal Navy minesweepers in the Gulf.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Since they commenced operations, the Royal Navy's mine counter-measures vessels in the Gulf have detected and destroyed a total of 10 mines.

Defence Exports

51. Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures his Department is taking to assist United Kingdom defence exports.

Mr. Sainsbury: Through the Defence Export Services Organisation (DESO) the Ministry of Defence helps British firms to market and sell their defence products and services overseas. It does this mainly by advising firms on defence market prospects on a worldwide, regional or country basis. Our defence representatives overseas also provide companies with a wide range of follow-up support and assistance.

Gartree Prison (Escape)

52. Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what requests were made by prison officers at Her Majesty's prison Gartree to Royal Air Force flight controllers at the time of the helicopter escape of John Kendall and Sydney Draper; and if he will make a statement.

55. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what requests were made by prison officers at Her Majesty's prison Gartree to Royal Air Force flight controllers at the time of the helicopter escape of John Kendall and Sydney Draper; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: On the afternoon of 10 December 1987, the Leicestershire police telephoned the London air traffic control centre at RAF West Drayton to inform it that a helicopter-assisted escape from Gartree prison had taken place and to ask for assistance. Under standing instructions, immediate steps were taken to provide all possible assistance to the police in apprehending the fugitives. Subsequently, a member of the staff at Gartree prison telephoned the control centre, making a similar request. By then action was already in hand, although the helicopter was airborne for too short a period for it to be tracked successfully.

Thames House, Millbank (Centralisation)

54. Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the effect on the efficiency and effectiveness of his Department of the proposal to centralise parts of his Department at Thames House, Millbank.

91. Mr. Stuart Holland: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the impact on the efficiency and effectiveness of his Department of the proposal to locate parts of his Department at Thames House, Millbank.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Members to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner) on 20 January 1988, at column 764.

Small Firms (Contracts)

59. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what further steps he plans to take to assist small firms in tendering for defence contracts.

Mr. Sainsbury: Ministry of Defence procurement policy is based on securing value for money through greater competition. Small firms especially are encouraged to become defence contractors through the promotion of competition at the sub-contract level and by advertising contract opportunities more widely. The launch of the MOD small firms initiative in November 1986 gave impetus to these policies, through the creation of a new division specifically to advise small firms wishing to enter the defence market. Small firms have welcomed this new service and over 1,300 contacted the division directly in its first year. Some 1,100 firms have attended regional seminars conducted by the division and many have made contact at business exhibitions.

The division will continue to offer advice and assistance to small firms individually, to give presentations and to be represented at appropriate exhibitions. In addition, a new edition of the booklet "Selling to the MOD" will be published this year with information helpful to small firms. Finally, a further £1 million is being made available during 1988-89 to enable those small firms with the ability to generate new and innovative products and processes in a cost-effective manner to obtain a larger share of defence research funds.

DROPS

61. Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he has taken to satisfy himself that the tenders for the demountable rack offloading pickup system project were fairly assessed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Ministry's assessments of the original DROPS competition have been exhaustively examined by Ministers and senior officials over more than four years. No evidence of bias or impropriety has been revealed. Additionally, as my hon. Friend will be aware, the Department has co-operated fully in the Comptroller and Auditor General's review of DROPS procurement which is now the subject of consideration by the Public Accounts Committee.

Trident

66. Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the latest estimate of the cost of the Trident programme.

77. Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his latest estimate of the total cost of Trident.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer to the answer given by my right hon. Friend on 21 January at column 775.

United States Bases

69. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give the number of United States bases (a) operational, (b) part operational and (c) available for use in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Sixty-six bases and facilities are currently made available for use by United States forces in the United Kingdom. There are also two armament depots run by United Kingdom civilians on behalf of NATO which provide a service for United States forces.

The 66 bases and facilities comprise seven main operating bases, two GLCM bases, 26 storage/support facilities and 22 communications facilities, all of which are fully operational, as well as two standby deployment bases and seven contingency wartime hospitals.

National Trust Land (Installations)

70. Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what response he has received from the National Trust to his request for permission to erect military installations on National Trust land in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Caerphilly (Mr. Davies) on 22 January 1988, at column 897.

SP-70 Programme (Replacement)

72. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate he has made of the costs of the artillery programme intended to replace the cancelled SP-70 programme.

Mr. Sainsbury: A competition is currently in progress for 155mm self-propelled Howitzers for the British Army but no decisions have yet been taken and it would not be appropriate to disclose an estimated programme cost at this stage.

Contracts (Police Inquiries)

73. Mr. Campbell Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which defence contracts have been the subject of his Department's police inquiries over the last two years.

Mr. Sainsbury: The MOD police have dealt with 32 cases of alleged contractual fraud, each involving different numbers of contracts, since January 1986. It would be inappropriate to specify the actual contracts involved.

Frigates and Destroyers

81. Mr. Douglas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the number of frigates and destroyers which are currently operational and available for duties within the area of operations of NATO.

Mr. Ian Stewart: There are currently 48 destroyers and frigates in service with the Fleet, of which 41 are operational or engaged in preparing for service or trials or training. A number of these ships are at present deployed outside the NATO area but could be recalled for operations in support of NATO in the event of an emergency.

"Blundering Into Disaster"

90. Mr. James Lamond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if his Department has obtained a copy of the book Blundering Into Disaster, by Robert McNamara.

Mr. Freeman: Yes.

Contracts

93. Mr. Arbuthnot: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made towards extending the range of companies competing for his Department's contracts.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Department's policy of seeking competition at all levels wherever it is reasonable and practicable is bringing significantly better value for money for defence and for the taxpayer, and offers excellent opportunities for companies to compete for MOD business.

The number of companies seeking registration on the defence contractors list continues to increase significantly. About 38 per cent. more applications from companies wishing to join the list were received during the period October 1986 to September 1987, the last period for which figures are available, than in the preceding 12 months, and about 45 per cent. more were accepted. There are now just under 9,000 companies on the defence contractors list which are eligible to compete for direct MOD headquarters contracts. They cover a vast range of products and services.

In addition, our policy of requiring prime contractors to place subcontracts by competition wherever possible will have increased the range of companies competing at this level, although the Ministry compiles no statistics on this.

INF Treaty

95. Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received about the implications for the United Kingdom of the intermediate nuclear forces treaty.

Mr. Ian Stewart: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has received some 58 representations from hon. Members and members of the public since 1 July 1987 concerning the INF treaty.

Blue Vixen Radar Programme

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to be able to authorise the Blue Vixen radar programme into full development and production.

Mr. Sainsbury: The contract for development and producion of the Blue Vixen radar was signed in October 1984.

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what slippages have occured in the Blue Vixen radar development programme.

Mr. Sainsbury: Nineteen months from the schedule established at the start of the project in June 1983.

Research Projects

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish in the Official Report all research projects funded by his Department currently under way in universities and other institutions including Ministry of Defence establishments; showing the cost of each and indicating which were experiments on animals.

Mr. Sainsbury: The defence research programme is made up of 1,200 work items covering the major fields described on pages 57 and 58 of the "Annual Review of Government-funded R&D 1987". The aggregate cost is £400 million a year. It is not our policy to describe in detail the content and methods of the work.

Anti-Air Warfare Missile System

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on progress in the development of a new naval anti-air warfare missile system.

Mr. Sainsbury: Development of the next generation AAW system is being pursued through two separate parallel international collaborative programmes; one led by the United States, the other being a European programme with equal participation by four nations including the United Kingdom. The United States-led programme commenced in October 1987 with participants' signatures of the memorandum of understanding. We hope very shortly to be in a position to sign the MOU for the European programme.

Both collaborative programmes will commence with a feasibility study phase at the end of which a further decision will need to be made on the way forward.

The purpose of these programmes is to provide an AAW capability effective against the evolving air threat (including anti-ship missiles) for service in the late 1990s.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Health Authorities (Money Raising)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if, in the light of Government proposals to encourage health authorities to raise money for themselves, he will make it his policy that any money so raised will not be deducted from present or future revenue or capital allocations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The overall planning of health services must, of course, take account of all resources available, including those from charges and land sales. We are however emphasising to regional health authorities the need for allocation arrangements which ensure that districts see clear benefit from successful income generation schemes.

Pesticides

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps Her Majesty's Government are taking to co-ordinate reports of illness in high intensity farming areas which may have been caused by pesticide or environmental illnesses.

Mrs. Currie: No arrangements exist to co-ordinate reports of illness specifically in high-intensity farming areas. Where ill health due to specific exposure to pesticides is suspected, the details can be reported to the Health and Safety Executive. All such cases are investigated, and a report which is seen by the statutory Advisory Committee on Pesticides is made to the Government. Similarly, all cases of acute poisoning from pesticides which involve hospital treatment, or a request to a poisons centre for advice, are recorded. The Government are considering how all this available though separate information can be co-ordinated.

There would be very great difficulties in studying populations in areas of high intensity farming so as to obtain general information on possible untoward effects from long-term exposure to pesticides. However, we will be discussing with the Medical Research Council, which is the main Government funded body supporting medical research from its grant-in-aid under the Science Vote of the Department of Education and Science, whether it would be possible to investigate the feasibility of such studies in order to increase public reassurance as to the safety of approved pesticides.

The Government have established a small area health statistics unit at the London School of Hygiene and Tropical Medicine under the direction of Professor Geoffrey Rose, to develop methods and undertake studies of illnesses which might be associated with local sources of environmental pollution.

Obstetric Units

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report a list of each obstetric unit for each health authority showing for each year since 1979 the number of deliveries.

Mrs. Currie: I have arranged for the information requested to be placed in the Library.

Incontinence Advisers

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to increase the number of incontinence advisers in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: It is for individual health authorities to decide for themselves both the level of provision, and the pace and direction of further developments in their services, in the light of their local needs and circumstances.

We do, however, expect health authorities to provide appropriate services for incontinent people, and in 1977 the Department's chief nursing officer wrote to all health authorities advising them that the management of incontinence should be clearly identified as the responsibility of a designated special nurse, who should act as a "resource person" for nurses working in hospitals and the community services. Since then, most district health authorities have appointed at least one in continence adviser. Community nurses also provide advice and assessment as part of their nursing duties.

Blood Glucose Monitoring Strips

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he intends to make available the free blood glucose monitoring strips.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Member to my replies to my hon. Friends the Members for Exeter (Mr. Hannam) and for Norwich, North (Mr. Thompson) on 24 November 1987 at column 174 and on 12 January 1988 at column 247 respectively.

Surgery Statistics

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list in order of frequency the 12 most common forms of surgery for which patients are admitted to hospitals in the South East Thames regional health authority.

Mrs. Currie: The information requested is given in the table

Estimated number of the 12 most common forms of surgery (in order of frequency) performed in NHS non-phychiatric and non-maternity hospitals, South East Thames Regional Health Authority, 1985

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list in order of frequency the 10 most common forms of surgery for which patients are currently admitted to hospitals in the North West Thames regional health authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: The information requested is given in the table.

Estimated number of the 10 most common forms of surgery (in order of frequency) performed in NHS non-psychiatric and non-maternity hospitals, North West Thames regional health authority, 1985

Midwives

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many staff midwives were in post on 30 September in each region, listed separately, in England and Wales in 1985, 1986 and 1987.

Mr. Newton: The information for each region in England for September 1985 and September 1986 is shown in the table.

Similar information for 1987 is not yet available.

The information for Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

[1] Excludes agency staff midwives.
[2] All figures are independently rounded to the nearest 10 whole-time equivalents.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the current level of midwife staff vacancies within the National Health Service and the trend of such vacancies on previous years; whether Her Majesty's Government has any plans to procure a reduction of these vacancies, by the recruitment and retention of more midwives; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I regret that information on vacancies is not collected centrally and no current information on vacancies is available. The results of the 1987 regional health authority chairmen's survey undertaken for the Nurses' Pay Review Body are expected shortly. However, the results of the previous surveys show that at 31 March 1986 2·7 per cent. of midwives' posts had been vacant for at least three months compared to about 3·0 per cent. a year earlier.

Nationally the number of midwives has increased by 16·0 per cent. since 1981. Action is being taken centrally where appropriate to improve recruitment and retention of such staff. For example, the new grading definitions recently agreed by the Nurses and Midwives' Negotiating Council will provide better career opportunities for those who develop their clinical skills and will improve incentives to remain in the Health Service.

Midwifery Students

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many intakes of midwifery students were cancelled in 1985, 1986 and 1987 in each year ended 30 September; and what are the most recently available staffing figures.

Mr. Newton: I regret that information on the numbers of intakes cancelled is not collected centrally.

The latest available detailed staffing information is September 1986 and this shows:

National Health Service midwifery staff excluding agency staff at 30 September 1986: England

	Wholetime equivalents[1]
Qualified midwives	18,670
Student midwives	4,180

[1] Figures are independently rounded to nearest ten (10) wholetime equivalents.

AIDS

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the total number of AIDS tests undertaken by the public health laboratory service to the latest available date.

Mr. Newton: The public health laboratory service has carried out a total of 289,221 AIDS tests as at 30 November 1987.

Medicines Act 1968

Mr. Thornton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects the independent study carried out by Dr. John Evans and Mr. Peter Cunliffe into the operations of the Medicines Act 1968 to report; when he expects to make his decision on their recommendations; and when the results will be made publicly known to the interested parties.

Mr. Newton: The study, which I announced on 11 March last year, has been completed. Dr. Evans and Mr. Cunliffe submitted their report just before Christmas and I am placing a copy in the Library. Copies will also be generally available, price £4·75 from the DHSS leaflets unit, PO Box 21, Stanmore, Middlesex HA7 1AY. We are consulting the Medicines Commission on certain issues as appropriate. In the light of its advice, we will take decisions and where necessary will enter into discussions with the bodies concerned.

Wessex RHA (Overspending)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will indicate the extent and the reasons for the overspend by the Wessex regional health authority on its computer system; whether there are any plans for his Department to attempt to resolve the problems; whether there are any implications for his Department's own central computerisation project; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I have been assured by officers of Wessex regional health authority that their computer programme is not overspent; that current expenditure on computer systems continues to be within the capital allocation approved by the regional health authority for computing up to 31 March 1989; and that the computer programme continues to be under regular review by the regional health authority.

Officials are monitoring the progress of this project as part of the normal accountability procedures. There are at present no known implications for any existing departmental central computerisation projects.

For further information the hon. Member may like to consult the Wessex regional health authority.

Family Planning Clinics

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in tabular form the proportion of funds directed to family planning clinics by each of the health authorities in England and Wales for each year for which figures are available since 1979.

Mr. Newton: I regret that this information is not collected centrally.

Professional and Linguistic Assessment

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the following information concerning the tests held under the auspices of the Professional and Linguistics Assessment Board: (a) how many/often the tests are held, (b) what is the average time taken from application for a test until the results are made available to districts health authorities and (c) how many places are available for each test; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Information obtained from the General Medical Council, which is the independent statutory body responsible for controlling the tests, shows that in 1987 there were 11 test sessions involving 1,734 candidates. Test sessions are held at approximately monthly intervals at different locations. No figures are available regarding the average time taken from application for a test to the results being made available, although because of the demand for places candidates are advised to apply six months in advance. The availability of places for each test is limited by the seating accommodation at each test location which I understand varies from about 110 to 200 places.

Free Milk

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many children under five years of age and cared for by registered childminders are currently in receipt of free milk; and how many childminders this involves.

Mrs. Currie: Information is not available in the form requested. It is estimated that some 200,000 children in England are receiving free milk at day nurseries, playgroups or childminders at any one time.

Medical Laboratory Scientific Officers

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many medical laboratory scientific officers have been newly appointed by each health authority in England in each year since 1982.

Mr. Newton: Information in the form requested is not held centrally. The total number of qualified medical laboratory scientific officers in post rose by 14 per cent. between 1982 and 1986.

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many medical laboratory scientific officers were newly appointed by the Sunderland, Durham and Hartlepool district health authorities in 1985-86, 1986-87 and 1987 to date.

Mr. Newton: Information in the form requested is not held centrally. The latest available staff in post figures are shown in the table.

Departmental Local Offices

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the establishment figures of each local benefit office, distinguishing between short-term and permanent posts, and between contributory and non-contributory benefits sections, and showing the current case load per head at each office.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that information cannot be provided as requested. The table shows the current complement of each local social security office with the latest supplementary benefit caseload, which is based on a 100 per cent. count of liver cases. Although staff are designated as employed on either contributory benefits or supplementary benefits the totals will include staff employed on common services such as finance work. No figure comparable to supplementary benefit caseload exists for the range of contributory benefits.

The size of caseload is only one factor which determines complement. Other factors, such as activity on the caseload, play a more prominent role.

To provide a fuller answer would be disproportionately costly.

Hospital Waiting Lists (Derbyshire)

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the current hospital waiting list in Derbyshire, North-East for (a) urgent cases, (b) urgent cases which have been waiting for more than one month, (c) non-urgent cases and (d) non-urgent cases which have been waiting for more than one year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Due to the introduction of a new computer system on 31 March 1987, the data supplied by district health authorities in Trent region did not distinguish between in-patient waiting list cases classified by consultants as urgent or non-urgent. The available information for North Derbyshire health authority is that on 31 March 1987 there were 2,520 patients on the in-patient waiting list, 684 of whom had been waiting for more than one year. This is an improvement over the position at 31 March 1986 when the in-patient waiting list stood at 2,633 of whom 883 had been waiting over a year.

Cash Limits

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what assessment he has made of the extent to which, in order to remain within cash limits, district health authorities may be obliged to implement decisions that impose a real reduction in services on the population which they serve.

Mr. Newton: I announced on 16 December, an increase in health authority allocations across the United Kingdom of over £100 million in this financial year. This step was taken because our assessment of the financial pressures facing authorities showed that they would otherwise be required to take short-term measures that would not improve health care or efficiency.

General Practices (Inner Cities)

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he is taking to encourage the establishment of general practices in the inner cities.

Mr. Newton: The Government encourage the development of general practice in the inner cities mainly through payment of enhanced rates of improvement grant for practice premises and through the medical practices committee which takes into account the special needs of the inner cities in its control of the distribution of general practitioners throughout the country. In addition, resources have been made available to encourage GPs to form group practices.

Proposals in the White Paper "Promoting Better Health" (Cm. 249), published last November, are designed to further improve general practice in the inner cities. These include relating the distribution of doctors more closely to medical and social needs; the introduction of new allowances especially related to working in areas of deprivation; increasing the assistance available to doctors in improvement grants and under the cost rent scheme; and strengthening the role of family practitioner committees generally.

Resources (Allocation)

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what criteria have been taken into account by the National Health Service resource allocation working party in assessing regional and district health needs; and if any changes are contemplated in future assessments.

Mr. Newton: The resource allocation working party formula measures the relative needs of each region by taking account of: population (and the use made of health services by people of different age groups and sexes); morbidity as indicated by standardised mortality ratios; patient flows between regions; and higher staff costs in London and the south-east. Separate allocations are made to take account of the costs associated with medical teaching. The assessment of the relative needs of health districts is a matter for regions, who are expected to follow the same principles as the national formula, but to have regard also to local needs and circumstances.

The NHS management board's review of the national RAWP formula is exploring the scope for improving the way in which the formula measures relative need. The review's programme of analysis and research is now almost complete, and any recommendations which may emerge will then be carefully considered.

1991 Census

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what assumptions he makes as to the percentage of misleading answers given during the next census which will result in the census being of little use for planning purposes; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: No such assumptions are made. Tests are being conducted to ensure that proposed census questions are as clear and acceptable to the public as possible.

Mersey RHA

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the percentage increase in medical and dental staff whole-time equivalents, in the Mersey region between 1978 and the latest available year.

Mrs. Currie: The percentage increase in hospital and community health services (HCHS) staff between 1978 and 1986 is 14 per cent. This is based on the information, as set out in the table.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report the information in table 15.1 of Cm. 288-II, expressed in constant 1986-87 prices.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is set out in the table. The figures for the last two years are, as in Cm, 288, rounded to the nearest £100 million.

Infant Mortality

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the six health authorities with the highest percentage of post-neonatal deaths for each year since 1975.

Mrs. Currie: I shall let the hon. Member have such information as is available without incurring disproportionate costs as soon as possible.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will order an urgent inquiry into the causes of the increase of post-neonatal deaths.

Mrs. Currie: The increase in the infant mortality rate in the latest figures (1986), produced by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys, is small and may not be sustained. None the less, I have arranged for the matter to be further examined with the help of medical experts.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the number of post-neonatal deaths for each year since 1975 as a percentage figure for each socio-economic group.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 25 January 1988]: The exact information requested can be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, the tables show the numbers and rates for post-neonatal deaths, and percentage distribution by social class for legitimate births for 1975 to 1985, and for jointly registered illegitimate births for 1975 and 1985 only. These statistics are from data which link the infant death records to their corresponding birth records. Information on social class for illegitimate births as a whole is not shown as this is not collected on a comparable basis to that for legitimate births.

General Practice Finance Corporation

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services on what date the annual report of the General Practice Finance Corporation was (a) received by his Department and (b) made public, in each of the financial years 1966-67 to 1985-86.

Mrs. Currie: Information about the date that the corporation's report was sent to the Department is readily available only for the last two years, but I am able to supply the publication date in each of the years in question.

Private Patients and Clinics

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish for each district health authority the net income from private patients and clinics in 1986 under sections 65, 66 and 58 of the National Health Service Act 1977; if he will publish, for each district health authority, the amounts written off as bad debts under sections 65, 66 and 58 of the National Health Service Act 1977; and if he will give the regional totals for 1985.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 18 January 1988]: A table giving the information requested has now been placed in the Library.

Income Support

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many gainers and losers he assesses there will be from the introduction of income support in April for (a) single pensioners under 80 years, (b) single pensioners over 80 years, (c) pensioner couples under 80 years, (d) pensioner couples over 80 years, (e) single unemployed under 25 years, (f) single unemployed over 25 years, (g) unemployed couples with children and (h) single parent families.

Mr. Scott [holding answer 18 January 1988]: The information is in the table. It is comparable with tables 1A and 2A of the "Impact of the Reformed Structure of Income-Related Benefits", a copy of which is in the Library. The explanatory notes to those tables apply equally to this.

People on Income Support: Change in disposable income after meeting housing costs. Cash position at point of change.

Windscale (1957 Fire)

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether his Department retains any unpublished files, information and reports in connection with the 1957 Windscale fire; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 18 January 1988]: National arrangements for dealing with the fire at Windscale and for subsequent action did not directly involve the then Ministry of Health; radiation protection advice at that time came from the Medical Research Council and the Department is in possession of no original papers on the subject.

Neighbourhood Nursing Schemes

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list those district health authorities which operate neighbourhood nursing schemes.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 18 January 1988]: I regret that the information is not held centrally.

Infertility

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the names of (a) organisations and (b) individuals who responded to his Department's consultation document, Cm. 46, "Legislation on Human Infertility Services and Embryo Research", published in December 1986.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 20 January 1988]: Detailed responses were sent to the Department by the 158 organisations listed as follows and by 40 individuals. The other health departments also received comments. The list indicates those organisations whose submissions have been placed in the Library. Clearance is being sought to make similar arrangements for the remaining organisations.

Psychogeriatric Patients

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will give the levels of spending on psychogeriatric patients, of all the area health authorities in the Trent region for each year from 1979 to 1987, inclusive;

(2) if he will give the levels of spending on geriatric patients for all the area health authorities in the Trent region for each year from 1979 to 1987, inclusive;

(3) if he will give the levels of spending on the mentally handicapped of all the area health authorities in the Trent region for each year from 1979 to 1987, inclusive;

(4) if he will give the levels of spending on the mentally ill of all the area health authorities in the Trent Region for each year from 1979 to 1987, inclusive.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 15 January 1988]: Information on health authority expenditure by type of patient is not collected centrally. Hospital cost returns submitted to the Department show expenditure on hospitals of different types and cost returns in respect of community health services show expenditure relating to the major areas of activity.

Hospital cost returns submitted by district health authorities in the Trent region, since their inception on 1 April 1982, show total current expenditure on hospitals categorised as geriatric, mental handicap and mental illness as follows (nil expenditure indicates that a district had no hospitals in that particular category during the year).

NORTHERN IRELAND

Gibraltar

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he has made to the Government of Gibraltar on behalf of Northern Ireland investors with International Investments Limited, Gibraltar; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: My right hon. Friend has made no representations. This matter is essentially one for the Government of Gibraltar. Certain aspects are the subject of inquiries by the RUC.

Anglo-Irish Agreement

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many district councils have been requested by the Department of the Environment to remove signs which express opposition to the Anglo-Irish Agreement; why this form of expression is being denied; what has been the cost of this work by the Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: Ten district councils have been requested to remove advertisements being displayed in contravention of the Planning (Control of Advertisements) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 1973. In exercising its powers under these regulations the Department has regard solely to the suitability of the locations for the display of advertisements and does not take into account the content of the advertisements. It is not possible to identify the costs of dealing with particular unauthorised advertisements within the Department's overall action on such advertisements.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what consultations he has had or proposes to have with Nirex regarding nuclear waste disposal into or under the Irish sea.

Mr. Needham: UK Nirex Ltd. recently published a discussion document "The Way Forward" a copy of which is available in the Library, which sets out the options for future disposal of nuclear waste. Following receipt of comments it expects to be in a position in about a year's time to recommend to Government one or more sites worthy of further investigation. Consultations with UK Nirex Ltd. before it has made a recommendation would not be productive.

Amusement Machines

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will review the regulations relating to the establishment of amusement arcades in Northern Ireland containing fruit machines, slot machines and video machines, with a view to restricting their proliferation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: These regulations, which are contained in the Betting, Gaming, Lotteries and Amusements (Northern Ireland) Order 1985 and the Local Government (Miscellaneous Provisions) (Northern Ireland) Order 1985, have been in operation only since 1986. I have no plans to review them until there has been adequate experience of their operation, and there is a clear indication of a need to do so.

Domestic Assistance

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people were receiving domestic assistance additional requirements as part of their supplementary benefit in each year from 1981-82 to 1986-87.

Mr. Needham: Actual numbers are not known but, based on a 5 per cent. sample, it is estimated that some 213 people were receiving an addition for this purpose in May 1987. Reliable estimates are not available for earlier years.

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will provide a breakdown of the number of domestic assistance additional requirements paid by each social security office in Northern Ireland for each year from 1981-82 to 1986-87.

Mr. Needham: I regret that a reliable breakdown is not available.

Free Milk

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many children under five years of age and cared for by registered childminders are currently in receipt of free milk; and how many childminders are involved.

Mr. Needham: A total of 371 children and 148 childminders.

Single Payments (Abolition)

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the effect on the average income of pensioners in Northern Ireland in 1988-89 of the abolition of single payments.

Mr. Needham: Pensioners on income support will have access to the social fund when single payments are abolished in April 1988. As it is not known how many pensioners are likely to claim and receive social fund grants it is not possible to predict the effect on average income in 1988-89.

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the total savings he expects to make in benefit payments in 1988-89 from the abolition of single payments and the introduction of the social fund.

Mr. Needham: It is estimated that savings will amount to some £7·45 millions after taking account of partial recovery of loans.

Security

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about the current security position.

Mr. Tom King: During 1987 a total of 468 people were charged with serious offences including 28 with murder. In the same period 267 weapons, almost 20,000 rounds of ammunition and about 13,000 lbs of explosives were recovered. Six hundred and seventy-nine people were convicted during 1987 of offences related to terrorism. Security policy is continually kept under review but the threat remains high. On 21 January I announced new arrangements for the deployment of security forces in border areas. The courageous and determined efforts of the security forces are continuing to yield results.

Lignite

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what studies have been made or commissioned by his Department on the pollution caused by the burning of lignite coal.

Mr. Needham: There is ample precedent in West Germany and elsewhere for burning lignite as fuel in power stations. Any new power stations in Northern Ireland would be required to meet the emission standards for sulphur dioxide nitrogen oxides and particulates specified by the Northern Ireland alkali and radiochemical inspectorate. These standards would reflect the latest abatement technology, national policy, and the need for compliance with EC directives.

Security (Belfast)

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the security situation in central Belfast.

Mr. Tom King: Security policy in Northern Ireland is continually kept under review and the security forces are determined to prevent the terrorists from carrying out their campaign to disrupt life and destroy property in central Belfast and other major towns. The Provisional IRA carried out a bomb attack at the magistrates' court near the city centre on 9 January. The area had been cleared, damage to property was largely superficial and there were no injuries. The court resumed sitting as usual the following Monday morning.

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the future of the present supplementary benefit residence test.

Mr. Needham: From April 1988 the residence test will not feature in the income support scheme as it would not be fully consistent with EC law and with the European social charter. However, adequate measures will continue to be taken to safeguard against abuse of public funds.

Cross-border Co-operation

Sir John Biggs-Davison: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made in obtaining cross-border co-operation with the Irish Army and Air Corps; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: Both the RUC and the Garda make use of the respective armed forces supporting them in working co-operatively to improve security across the border. A notable example of this occurred during the major search operation that was conducted in the Republic with support in the Province last December. Procedures also exist wherby in the course of clearing suspected or actual explosive devices on or near the border ammunition technical officers from the British and Irish armies may by invitation cross the border to facilitate their duties.

Trawsfynydd Power Station, North Wales

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he was first advised of the proposed experimental shutdown on 12 February at Trawsfynydd power station in north Wales; what precautions are being taken in Northern Ireland; what are the implications of this experiment for Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 22 January 1988]: This is a matter for which Northern Ireland Government Departments have no direct responsibility. I understand that a proposal has been submitted to the nuclear installations inspectorate by the Central Electricity Generating Board to carry out a test at Trawsfynydd power station.

In Northern Ireland there is continuous monitoring to identify potential radiological hazards, to determine appropriate remedial measures, and to provide advice and information to the public. The proposed test is not expected to have any particular implications for Northern Ireland.

As the Prime Minister indicated during Question Time in the House on 19 January the CEGB proposal would not involve the suspension of any safety mechanisms at the Trawsfynydd plant.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Autistic Children

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) how many special places are available for autistic children at (i) primary and (ii) secondary level, by region;

(2) what is the total number of autistic children in maintained schools in England.

Mr. Dunn: The information is not available. Since 1983 neither special schools nor the pupils in them have been classified in accordance with categories of handicap.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what provision in (i) spend, and (ii) additional places, was made for schools for the autistic in the capital allowances for local education authorities for 1988-89.

Mr. Dunn: I refer the hon. Member to the reply my right hon. Friend gave on 18 December 1987 to my hon. Friend the Member for Skipton and Ripon (Mr. Curry) setting out the allocations in respect of prescribed expenditure made to local education authorities for 1988-89. Allocations are unhypothecated and it is up to each authority to decide how to use the resources available.

Rating Reform

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will increase Government grants to research councils to allow them to upgrade grants paid to postgraduate students sufficiently to compensate for liability for the community charge when this is introduced in 1989 and 1990.

Mr. Jackson: This is one of the factors that will be considered when the science budget is reviewed during the course of the 1988 public expenditure survey.

Common Seals (Scotland)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what recent discussions his Department has had with the Natural Environment Research Council regarding the survey of common seals on the west coast of Scotland and the islands of Scotland in relation to the growth of numbers of salmonid fish farms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: None. The Natural Environment Research Council, through its responsibilities under the Conservation of Seals Act 1970, provides my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for the Home Department and Scotland with estimates of seal populations.

Student Awards

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) how many students from England to whom covenants are made and who are also entitled, after means testing, to a full university or further education award, currently have a deduction made from their awards relative to the amount of the covenant;

(2) how many students from Wales to whom covenants are made and who are also entitled, after means testing, to a full university or further education award, currently have a deduction made from their awards relative to the amount of the covenant.

Mr. Jackson: The information requested is not available.

Computers

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what funding is given to the study of the psychology of the interface between computers and human operators with a view to redesigning computers; and what representations he has received from the Science and Engineering Research Council and Natural Environmental Research Council on this topic.

Mr. Jackson [pursuant to his reply, 18 January 1988, c. 461]: I regret that an error was included in my answer. The £11·5 million spent on collaborative research into studies of the interface between computers and human operators referred to the total under the Alvey programme, and not solely to expenditure by the Science and Engineering Research Council as my answer implied.

WALES

Sheep

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will take steps to ensure that no change which discriminates against those mountain sheep which do not normally bring lambs until they are two years old is made in the definition of those sheep which are eligible for premium payments under the proposals of the European Community for a single market by 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: The redefinition of an eligible ewe for the sheep annual premium scheme is one of a number of proposals which the Commission has put forward in its review of the sheepmeat regime. However, details of administrative and control procedures, which are important considerations in assessing whether a new definition would be beneficial or workable, are still awaited. Accordingly, no detailed assessment can yet be made of the Commission's proposal.

ENVIRONMENT

Hinkley Point A Power Station

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the relative ranking of Hinkley Point A as a polluter of the aquatic environment by the standards of European nuclear power stations; what proposals he has substantially to reduce this pollution; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: I refer the hon. Member to the ninth annual report on the activities of the Paris Commission from June 1986 to June 1987. I have arranged for a copy to be placed in the Library of the House.

Storm Damage

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will widen the remit of the Countryside Commission in disbursing grant for replanting trees following the October 1987 hurricane to include the clearance of fallen trees, remedial survey to damaged standing trees, assistance with timber marketing and surveys of overall damage to trees; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what representations he has received about the desirability of dedicating a substantial proportion of the grant, to be administered by the Countryside Commission, towards the cost of a tree-planting programme following the October 1987 hurricane, to remedial tree surgery, a damage survey, public information and future planting; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what representations he has received about the necessity for grants towards the cost of clearance and disposal of fallen timber prior to tree planting following the October 1987 hurricane; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: We are carefully considering the need for a programme of assistance in the long term, and we shall take into account various representations which have been received about the scope and nature of the assistance required.

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate his Department made of the cost per acre of clearing and disposing of fallen timber prior to allocating a grant of £2·7 million to be administered by the Countryside Commission towards the cost of a tree-planting programme following the October 1987 hurricane.

Mr. Moynihan: The purpose in making assistance immediately available through the Countryside Commission for tree planting was to assist in replacing the maximum practicable number of trees during the current planting season. The general principle is that clearance is the responsibility of the individual owner and the costs of clearing and disposing of fallen timber were not therefore directly relevant.

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much the Countryside Commission has provided for tree planting in each county since the October 1987 hurricane; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: The Countryside Commission has allocated the following sums for tree planting to the counties affected by the storm of 16 October:

County	£000
Bedfordshire	3
Berkshire	93
Buckinghamshire	20
Cambridgeshire	21
Dorset	9
East Sussex	293
Essex	151
Hampshire	204
Hertfordshire	33
Isle of Wight	55
Kent	350
Norfolk	34
Oxfordshire	6
Suffolk	139
Surrey	56
West Sussex	141
Greater London	800

These figures do not include amounts previously committed under the commission's existing schemes of aid for tree planting. Nor do they include allocations to be made from the further £250,000 for 1987-88 which the Government announced on 21 January, or amounts made available to certain trusts and other bodies which own land in more than one county.

London Docklands Development Corporation

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the London Docklands development corporation has any plans for affordable rented accommodation to attract teachers to docklands.

Mr. Trippier: LDDC is currently considering whether certain categories of employee, including teachers, should receive priority in the allocation of rented homes built on corporation sites.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much the London Docklands development corporation has spent on advertising in each year of its existence.

Mr. Trippier: Details of the corporation's expenditure on promotion and publicity are given in its annual reports and accounts, copies of which are placed in the Library.

Homelessness

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the cost of housing homeless families in (a) Vale Royal and (b) Chester in each of the last five years.

Mr. Waldegrave: Information on the cost to individual authorities of accommodating homeless households other than in council dwellings is included in the series of annual publications by the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy "Homelessness Statistics, Actuals". Copies are in the Library.

Bed-and-breakfast Accommodation

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the average weekly cost to local authorities of keeping a person in bed-and-breakfast accommodation.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) on 21 January, at column 826.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has had with the leader of Wandsworth council on the number of empty council properties in the borough, in the light of the numbers on the housing waiting list or living in bed-and-breakfast accommodation.

Mr. Waldegrave: Neither my right hon. Friend nor I have had any such discussions.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many people were in bed-and-breakfast accommodation in each of the 32 London boroughs on 31 October 1987.

Mr. Waldegrave: Information is available in the publication "Local authorities' action under the homelessness provisions of the 1985 Housing Act: England. Results for third quarter 1987. Supplementary tables", which is in the Library. It contains for each authority responding the number of households in bed-and-breakfast accommodation at the end of September 1987. The information is available only for the last day of each quarter.

Hedgerows

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many miles of hedgerow have been lost in Staffordshire through changing agricultural practices; and whether he has any plans to enable local authorities to introduce statutory controls to be applied to the removal of hedgerows.

Mr. Moynihan: The surveys so far completed have not provided information at the county level. On the national position, I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Ceredigion and Pembroke, North (Mr. Howells) on 13 January, at column 271.

It would be inappropriate to impose statutory controls on the removal of hedgerows. They need regular management, so the emphasis on conserving them must be on enlisting the voluntary co-operation of farmers and landowners. Grants are available from the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, the Countryside Commission or the Nature Conservancy Council, depending on the circumstances.

Football Clubs (Membership)

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has had with Football League clubs about their membership schemes.

Mr. Moynihan: Most league clubs have now either achieved the initial target of 50 per cent. coverage for their membership schemes agreed between the Government and the football authorities or have been advised by their local police that the present configuration of their grounds would make it dangerous for them to go beyond the level they have already reached. The president of the Football League and I will be holding meetings with the six clubs which have not done so on 4 February and 21 March. They are Wimbledon, Fulham, Southampton, Barnsley, Wrexham and Darlington.

Since my last meeting with the Football League on this subject, three further clubs, Chelsea, Scarborough and Tranmere, have received clear advice from their local police forces against extending their membership schemes. The league and the Association of Chief Police Officers have agreed with me that these clubs should not be invited to our meetings.

London Residuary Body

Mr. Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to lay before Parliament the 1986-87 annual report and statement of accounts of the London Residuary Body; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The 1986-87 "Annual Report and Statement of Accounts of the London Residuary Body" were laid before Parliament today. A copy of the Secretary of State's direction under section 78(2) of the Local Government Act 1985 as to the content and structure of the accounts has been placed in the Library of the House.

The LRB's report shows good progress by the board members and staff in discharging the functions inherited from the Greater London council at abolition. It complements the equally encouraging 1986-87 annual report and accounts of the six metropolitan residuary bodies which were published on 25 November 1987.

During the first year after abolition the LRB reduced its staff numbers by 468. These totals will continue to fall as the LRB's functions are discharged or transferred to successor bodies.

LRB's progress in identifying and disposing of a mass of surplus land and property accumulated by the GLC has already been substantial. Of the total £90 million capital receipts generated in 1986-87, over £69 million was attributable to property disposal. These significant receipts enabled LRB to distribute to the London boroughs £32 million of capital money in addition to £89 million of revenue balances left by the GLC. Taken together these cash refunds represent good news for the ratepayers of London who had previously financed the GLC.

Toxic Waste

Sir Bernard Braine: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he is taking to prevent toxic waste originating from outside the European Community being reshipped for disposal to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Moynihan: Toxic waste originating outside the Community which is reshipped by another member state for disposal in the United Kingdom will be subject to the EC directive on transfrontier shipment of hazardous waste, which we expect to implement later this year. Shipments will need to be notified in advance to the disposal authority for the area containing the prospective disposal facility. There will be a power to object to shipments whose disposal would be contrary to United Kingdom law for the protection of the environment and human health.

Sir Bernard Braine: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what control is exercised to ensure that imported toxic waste is not dumped in Essex and other counties because of their close proximity to continental ports; and whether he will order a review of waste disposal practices to ensure protection of the environment.

Mr. Moynihan: Imported waste, which is subject to the same control as indigenous waste, is disposed of at facilities in various parts of the country. All such facilities must be licensed by waste disposal authorities to ensure that disposal does not damage public health, water supplies or is detrimental to local amenities.

Waste disposal practices are reviewed continually and my Department publishes waste management papers giving detailed guidance on best practice, to ensure protection of human health and the environment.

Rating Reform

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what criteria his Department will recommend using for the purposes of interpreting section 13(7)(6) of the Local Government Finance Bill, for the purpose of establishing if an unmarried couple are living together as husband and wife.

Mr. Howard: My right hon. Friend will consider the need for guidance on these matters in due course. Many such couples can be expected to acknowledge that they are living together as husband and wife; some will be receiving rebates on that basis.

Water Authorities (Membership)

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many (a) local authority councillors and (b) accountants served on each water authority in each year from 1979 to date.

Mr. Moynihan: Information about board members appointed since October 1983 is contained in the authorities' annual reports and accounts which are laid before Parliament each year. The reports for the period from 1979 to 1983 list members appointed by local authorities. Information is not readily available about the occupations or qualifications of members in office between 1979 and 1983.

Industrial Site, London SE2

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what application he has received for urban development grant in respect of the redevelopment of a former industrial site at 1A Eynsham drive, London SE2; how much is involved; and when a decision is likely to be forthcoming.

Mr. Trippier: No application has been received for urban development grant, but the Department's UDG appraiser for the London borough of Greenwich has had a recent informal discussion with a developer who is interested in purchasing the site for redevelopment.

Radioactivity (Monitoring)

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the proposed locations for the 35 stations which will complete the radioactive incident monitoring network.

Mr. Moynihan: I refer the hon. Member to the booklet "The National Response Plan and Radioactive Incident Monitoring Network (Rimnet). A Statement of Proposals" the publication of which by Her Majesty's Stationery Office was announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment on 21 January. This booklet outlines the initial proposals for the monitoring sites although their exact locations have yet to be confirmed. Copies of the booklet have been placed in the Library of the House.

Rate Support Grant

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has replied to the letter to him of 11 January from the chief executive of Leicestershire county council regarding a reduction of £2·968 million in rate support grant to Leicestershire in 1988-89; and if he will make a statement on the reasons for this reduction.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 26 January 1988]: The council's letter of 11 January was a representation in response to the Department's consultation proposals for forthcoming supplementary reports for 1983-84, 1984-85 and 1986-87. It has been acknowledged and will be considered by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State before he makes final decisions on the supplementary reports. Under the consultation proposals, Leicestershire's rate support grant entitlements for the three years would not be reduced, but rather increased by about £600,000 in total. I shall write to my hon. Friend to explain why the council is wrong to assert that its grant is being reduced.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Rudolph Hess

Sir John Biggs-Davison: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if following the end of control of Spandau prison by the Allies of the Second World War, he will give the total cost to the United Kingdom taxpayers of the detention there of the late Rudolph Hess.

Mrs. Chalker: The costs of Hess's detention were not a charge to the United Kingdom taxpayer. All the costs of the three Western powers (UK, US, France) were borne by the German authorities.

La Belle Discotheque

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received from the British Minister in west Berlin on the progress of police investigations into the bomb outrage at the La Belle Discotheque.

Mrs. Chalker: It is not our practice to publish details of reporting from our posts overseas.

Foreign Affairs Council

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Foreign Affairs Council held on 25 and 26 January.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary and I attended the Foreign Affairs Council in Brussels on 25 January.

The Council discussed the financial situation in the European Community. My right hon. and learned Friend and I made it clear that there could be no overall agreement in the current negotiations without effective control on agricultural production and spending. We drew attention to the dangers in any approach which did not build on the package of measures which Heads of Government had discussed at Copenhagen. These issues will be discussed again at a special meeting of EC Foreign Ministers on 1 and 2 February.

The Council also discussed preparation for the EC/EFTA ministerial meeting on 2 February; and, meeting in political co-operation, Foreign Ministers exchanged views on the middle east, Afghanistan and East-West relations.

ENERGY

Electricity

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what was the total annual generation of electricity by standard measure in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) West Germany, (c) France, and (d) Japan, in 1958, 1960, 1965, 1970, 1975 and each year from 1979 to 1987.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The total annual generation of electricity in the following countries in the years indicated was:

TWh

	United Kingdom	Federal Republic of Germany	France	Japan
1958	114·6	97·5	64·4	85·4
1960	138·5	120·5	74·8	115·5
1965	196·2	172·3	106·1	192·1
1970	249·1	242·6	146·8	359·5
1975	271·9	300·5	185·3	475·6
1979	299·8	372·1	241·3	589·6
1980	285·3	368·7	257·9	576·3
1981	277·7	368·8	276·4	583·2
1982	272·7	366·8	279·2	581·3
1983	277·4	373·8	296·8	618·3
1984	282·4	394·8	324·5	648·6
1985	297·5	408·7	344·3	672·1

"This Week Next Week"

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will seek to obtain and place in the Library a copy of the transcript of his interview on the "This Week Next Week" programme, broadcast on BBC television on 17 January; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Parkinson: No. I understand that the Library does obtain transcripts from the broadcasters on behalf of hon. Members.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Insolvency Fees

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he intends to seek any changes in the fees charged in bankruptcy and winding-up proceedings as set out in the Insolvency Fees Order 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: A substantial contribution towards paying the costs of running the insolvency service in my Department is derived from various fees prescribed by the Insolvency Fees Order 1986. These are either of fixed amounts or on a percentage scale.

Although some of the fixed fees were increased by that order, the product this year has not come up to expectations because there has been a drop in the number of winding-up orders made and a rise in the number of insolvency cases closed where the assets are insufficient to meet the fixed fees charged. The scales of percentage fees which, by their nature, are only chargeable where assets exist, have, in the main, not been increased since 1980.

In order to provide the necessary funds to finance the work of the insolvency service, the Government intend to increase certain of the percentage fees relating to the performance by the Secretary of State of his general duties under the insolvency legislation and to the purchase of Government securities at the request of liquidators. These fees are identified by numbers 10, 11 and 12 in part I of the fees order and fee 13 in part II.

Fees 10 and 13 are calculated on moneys paid into the insolvency services account in each case where a company is wound up by the court or an individual is made bankrupt, charged on a sliding scale ranging from 10 per cent. on the first £50,000 down to 1 per cent. on any amount in excess of £5 million; these will be increased on a scale from 15 per cent. down to 1·5 per cent.

Fee 11 is charged, on moneys paid into the account in respect of companies wound up voluntarily, on two scale points of 1·25 per cent. and 0·75 per cent.; these will be increased to 1·75 per cent. and 1·25 per cent. The case limit on the total amount payable under this fee will be increased from £7,500 to £12,500. Fee 12 is charged at the rate of 0·375 per cent. on the amount expended at the request of a liquidator on any purchase of Government securities; it will be increased to 0·625 per cent. These fee increases are to be contained in a fees order which will be laid before Parliament shortly. The increases will take effect in February 1988 and are estimated to produce £500,000 in the year to 31 March next and £4 million in a full year.

The order will also include an increase of £1·15 in fees numbered 7 in part I and numbered 10 in part II of the 1986 fees order. These fees are made in respect of the insertion in the London Gazette by the Secretary of State or the Official Receiver or any notice authorised by the Insolvency Act or the rules. The increase represents no more than the additional charge now made by the London Gazette for these advertisements.

A review of the fee-charging policy and financing of the insolvency service is at present being undertaken by a project team headed by a professional accountant seconded to my Department. The team is expected to report by March 1988 and its findings may lead to further proposals for fee changes.

Labour Costs

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, what were United Kingdom unit labour costs per unit of output in the manufacturing sector, divided by a weighted average of competitors' unit labour costs, both expressed in pound sterling, for 1979, 1980, 1983, 1984, 1985, 1986 and 1987.

Mr. Alan Clark: The index of United Kingdom relative unit labour costs in manufacturing is published in tables F3 and F6 of the "Monthly Review of External Trade Statistics", a copy of which is in the Library. The data are expressed in common currency.

Manufactures

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the unit volume index of United Kingdom exports of manufactures divided by a weighted average of overseas wholesale prices, both expressed in pound sterling, for 1984, 1985, 1986 and 1987.

Mr. Alan Clark: The available information is in the following table.

United Kingdom unit value relative to competitors[1]
Wholesale prices
Manufactures[2]; 1980 = 100

1985	92·6

Capital Investment

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will publish the latest figures for capital investment on both a per capita basis and as a percentage of gross national product; and what comparable figures he has for capital investment relating to the other members of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The latest figures for the United Kingdom show that gross domestic fixed capital formation amounted to around £1,130 per head of the population in 1986. This is equivalent to 17 per cent. of GDP.

Comparisons for OECD countries are readily available only for 1985. The table summarises:

Exchange Cover

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, how many applications for tender to contract and forward exchange cover have been received in each thrice-monthly quarter since the scheme was established.

Mr. Alan Clark: The following table shows the number of applications received each quarter since the introduction of tender to contract and forward exchange cover in August 1977.

Applications for tender to contract and forward exchange supplement cover

Quarter ending	Number of applications
September 1977	22

Toys (Lead Content)

Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps he is taking to prevent the continued importation of toys with excessive lead content in their paintwork.

Mr. Maude: At present all toys placed on the market in the United Kingdom must comply with the Toys (Safety) Regulations 1974 which include requirements on the maximum level of lead and other substances permitted in paint used in toys. The Consumer Protection Act 1987 empowers Customs officers to detain goods at the port of entry for up to two working days to allow enforcement authorities time to make initial inquiries about the safety of goods detained. Trading standards authorities, which enforce the legislation, have the necessary powers to prosecute suppliers in cases of non-compliance.

The proposed European directive on toy safety will also specify levels for toxic metals which must not be exceeded.

Wine-Glass Measures

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many representations he has received during the past 12 months on the subject of wine-glass measures.

Mr. Maude: Since the beginning of 1987 the Department has received 12 representations about sales of wine by the glass; 10 in respect of enforcement authority surveys, one from the Consumers Association and one from the Restaurateurs Association.

Copyright, Designs and Patents Bill

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he has any plans to seek to amend the Copyright, Designs and Patents Bill to limit or control the amounts paid in royalties by radio broadcasters to record companies or others.

Mr. Maude: The Government are considering representations on this issue from independent radio and from the record industry. No decision has yet been taken.

South Africa

Mr. Wray: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if, further to his reply to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Hillhead (Mr. Galloway) on Thursday 21 January, Official Report, column 769, he will take urgent steps to collect the information on Scottish exports to and imports from South Africa not available referred to therein.

Mr. Alan Clark: No. Scottish trade with South Africa which passes through ports in the rest of the United Kingdom is not separately identified; to collect this information would impose an undue burden on companies.

National Metrological Co-ordinating Unit (Report)

Mr. Page: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he expects to publish the annual report of the National Metrological Co-ordinating Unit, as required by section 60(1) of the Weights and Measures Act 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: The final report of the National Metrological Co-ordinating Unit, covering the period 1 April 1986 to 31 March 1987, has been published today. I have arranged for copies of the report, which includes the audited statement of accounts, to be placed in the Library.

Investment Management Regulatory Organisation

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if a decision has been reached on whether to give leave for the recognition under the Financial Services Act of the Investment Management Regulatory Organisation.

Mr. Maude: In accordance with the procedures laid down in the Financial Services Act, the Director General of Fair Trading has submitted to my right hon. and noble Friend a report on the rules and guidance submitted by IMRO to the SIB. Having considered the director general's report, my right hon. and noble Friend has concluded that, on the basis of the information presently available to him, he does not consider the IMRO rules and guidance have, or are intended or likely to have, to any significant extent the effect of restricting, distorting or preventing competition. He has therefore today given his leave to the SIB for the recognition of IMRO.

Terms of Trade

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for each year since 1958 and the latest available date the terms of trade for finished manufacturing/manufactures for the United Kingdom, the United States of America, West Germany and Japan, together with imports and exports of such manufacturers in terms of dollars.

Mr. Alan Clark [holding answer 22 January 1988]: The available information is in the following table. Data on the terms of trade in finished manufactures are not available for the FRG and Japan. For these two countries information on the terms of trade in machinery and transport equipment (which accounted for 76 per cent. and 85 per cent. respectively of their total trade in finished manufactures) is provided instead.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Mozambique

Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what arrangements are being made to establish the special fund for Mozambique, agreed by Commonwealth Heads of Government at their meeting in Vancouver.

Mr. Chris Patten: The Commonwealth Secretary-General has written to all Commonwealth Governments requesting contributions to the fund. It will have a target of £10 million and will be administered by the Commonwealth Fund for Technical Co-operation. I have informed the secretary-general that Britain is prepared to contribute 30 per cent. of the total pledged to the fund, up to a maximum of £3 million. Payment of our contribution will be subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Estimates provision.

ODA (Funds)

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether any change has been agreed in voted provision for the Overseas Development Administration in 1987-88.

Mr. Chris Patten: Subject to parliamentary approval of the spring Supplementary Estimate, the cash limit for the overseas aid vote (class II, vote 5) will be increased to £1,096,875,000. The change allows for an agreed carryover of aid programme underspending in 1986-87, for part of the cost of the United Kingdom subscription to the Multilateral Investment Guarantee Agency and for other minor adjustments. Subject to parliamentary approval, the cash limit on the overseas aid administration vote (class II, vote 6) will also be increased to £28,191,000 to meet additional capital expenditure for the development and introduction of computer systems and other costs. The increases do not add to the planned total of public expenditure in 1987-88.

PRIME MINISTER

Nuclear Materials (Transport)

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Prime Minister under whose command it is envisaged that (a) Ministry of Defence police, (b) members of the armed forces on escort and (c) police officers should operate in the event of an accident or other serious incident affecting a nuclear weapons or materials convoy.

The Prime Minister: I am not prepared to discuss details of the movement of defence nuclear materials. In the event of an accident or other incident involving such materials any members of Her Majesty's Forces or the Ministry of Defence police assisting at the scene would act in support of the civil police.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prisoners (After Care)

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what steps have been taken to implement the recommendation of the committee chaired by the director of prison medical services that arrangements should be made for patients in prison to be assessed by National Health Service medical staff prior to planning continuing care and support on release; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what steps have been taken to improve administrative procedures within his Department and the prison service following the report of the working group chaired by the director of prison medical services on the problems presented by mentally disordered offenders in the prison system in England and Wales;

(3) what measures are being taken following the report of the director of prison medical services on mentally disordered offenders in the prison system in England and Wales to ensure that the courts are fully aware of non-custodial options open to them and of the facilities available in the health system;

(4) what representations he has received on the report of the director of prison medical services on mentally disordered offenders in the prison system in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Government welcomed this report of the inter-departmental working group of officials chaired by the director of prison medical services. As my right hon. Friend announced in response to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Norwich, North (Mr. Thompson) on 30 November 1987 at column 349 the Government accept all 16 recommendations made. The administrative procedures referred to in that answer relate mainly to transfers from prison to hospital. In sending copies of the report to managing medical officers in prison service establishments the director of prison medical services has drawn attention to the recommendation in which they are able to make a contribution, particularly the need for transfer procedures to be initiated promptly when that course is clinically indicated.

The recommendations aimed at increasing the extent to which mentally disordered offenders are detained other than in prison custody, and advance planning where that is indicated for the release of those who receive prison sentences are to be taken forward in further discussion between Home Office and DHSS officials.

Copies of the report have also been sent to regional health authorities, chief probation officers and, on request, to a number of other organisations and individuals. We have received no representations on the report. The initial impression gained by officials is that it is recognised as a useful move forward in a difficult area.

Data Protection

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the terms of reference of the registrar for data protection; how many complaints the registrar has dealt with for each year since his appointment; and if he will categorise the nature of such complaints.

Mr. Renton: The general duties of the Data Protection Registrar are specified in Section 36 of the Data Protection Act 1984.

In his last report to Parliament dated June 1987, the registrar reported that he had received 225 complaints in the year under review and 60 complaints prior to that. Since the Act came fully into force in November 1987 I am informed by the registrar that the rate at which complaints are being received has increased fourfold. From the end of November 1987 until mid-January 1988, 202 complaints have been received. The registrar broadly described the nature of complaints in his last report, and later complaints are I understand, following a similar pattern.

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish in the Official Report details of the process he adopts to monitor the Data Protection Act 1984.

Mr. Renton: The Data Protection Registrar, who is independent of the Executive, monitors the Data Protection Act 1984 and as required by section 36(5) of the Act, reports directly to Parliament. He holds regular meetings with officials to keep them informed, but my right hon. Friend is also ready to consider any representations put to him on the operation of the Act.

Wandsworth Prison

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to increase education facilities for inmates at Wandsworth prison; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There are no plans to provide additional educational facilities for inmates at Wandsworth prison. Daytime and evening classes are provided in a range of subjects and provision is made for correspondence courses and other types of education which can be pursued individually. Local management will continue to keep education provision under review.

Prisoners (Statistics)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of (a) men and (b) women who were serving a prison sentence of one month or less in prisons in England and Wales on 31 October 1987.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: From the records held centrally, it is estimated that about 770 males and 40 females were serving sentences of one month or less in prison department establishments in England and Wales on 31 October 1987. These figures include fine defaulters.

Mr. M. Naylor

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department why Mr. M. Naylor of Oadby, an officer at Glen Parva young offenders centre, South Wigston, despite completing an application form and paying a cheque for £1,200 on 29 October 1987 in relation to the free standing additional voluntary contribution pension scheme, has to date received no response from his Department.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The application form for a free standing additional voluntary contribution pension scheme completed by Mr. Naylor on 29 October 1987 was forwarded to the Home Department under cover of a letter from his insurance brokers dated 3 November 1987. Detailed information from Her Majesty's Treasury on how Departments should deal with applications for FSAVCs has only recently been received. A reply to Mr. Naylor's brokers will be sent shortly.

Police (Pay)

Sir Peter Hordern: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the figures for the pay of police officers, at each rank, both at the basic rate, and at the level of average overtime worked, at 1 June 1979, and at the latest available date showing percentage increases.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Following is the information on basic salaries:

Radio

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will publish a White Paper on the future of radio broadcasting before introducing legislation.

Mr. Renton: We are considering this possibility.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) whether he will detail the regulations under which the new Radio Authority will supervise the ownership of radio stations;

(2) how many (a) national commercial radio stations, (b) independent local radio stations and (c) community radio stations any one individual or any one company will be able to own or have a controlling interest in;

(3) whether he will introduce restrictions on the ownership of radio stations by non-British and non-EEC individuals or companies;

(4) whether he will introduce restrictions on individuals or companies who are licensed to own radio stations with regard to selling, sub-letting or sub-contracting such licences;

(5) whether individuals or companies granted licences for new radio stations will be allowed to sell, sub-let or sub-contract the use of those frequencies for any other purposes;

(6) under what regulations the new Radio Authority will operate with regard to (a) the ownership or (b) equity holdings of (i) political parties (ii) local authorities, (iii) statutory bodies, (iv) charitable organisations and (v) any body or organisation in which a political party has an interest.

Mr. Renton: Conditions regulating the award, renewal or transfer of radio licences by reasons of the status of prospective applicants or their accumulation of media interests will be included in the legislative proposals which my right hon. Friend will bring before Parliament. We have in mind, for example, provisions disallowing the control of licensed stations by companies registered outside the EC; limiting an individual or company to a financial interest in one national or six other licensed stations; and disallowing any such interest by political parties and their affiliates and public bodies (while allowing the latter to contribute to projects intended to further a specific purpose of benefit to the community concerned). Subject to such conditions and to the continuing observance of the promise of performance on the basis of which licences were awarded in the first place there will be provision for their reassignment.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) whether he will detail the regulations under which (a) national commercial radio, (b) independent local radio and (c) community radio will operate with regard to (i) advertising time per hour, (ii) weekly films and (iii) royalty and copyright payments;

(2) whether he proposes that under the regulations which will apply to radio stations, it will be permissible to run such stations by computer, without staffing;

(3) whether the regulations which will apply to (a) national commercial radio, (b) independent local radio and (c) community radio will include requirements to (a) provide news services, (b) provide staff to man such stations or (c) broadcast a minimum number of hours each day of live programmes;

(4) what powers the new Radio Authority will have to investigate and to ensure that no system of payola operates in United Kingdom radio stations;

(5) what percentage of programmes: (a) the new national commercial radio stations and (b) independent local radio stations will be required to take from independent producers.

Mr. Renton: Under the legislative proposals my right hon. Friend will bring before Parliament it will be for licensed radio stations themselves to determine their own business and programming arrangements consistent with the general law and their licence conditions including those reflecting their promise of performance.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) whether he will detail the regulations under which (a) national commercial radio, (b) independent local radio and (c) community radio will operate, with regard to (i) programme balance, (ii) news and current affairs time, (iii) obscenity and (iv) incitement to racial violence or religious intolerance;

(2) further to his written reply of 19 January, Official Report, columns 647-9, what requirements of accuracy, balance and decency there will be on licences of new radio stations;

(3) further to his written reply of 19 January, Official Report, columns 647-9, what present constraints in the Broadcasting Act 1981 will not apply to transmission arrangements for new radio stations;

(4) further to his written answer of 19 January, Official Report, columns 647-9, whether he will list the existing statutory requirements, applied to independent local radio, which will not be applied to the proposed (a) national commercial radio and (b) community radio.

Mr. Renton: The legislative proposals which my right hon. Friend will bring before Parliament will reflect paragraph 7.7 of our Green Paper "Radio: Choices and Opportunities" (Cm. 92).

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for what period of time the radio licences granted by the new Radio Authority will run for (a) national commercial radio, (b) independent local radio and (c) community radio.

Mr. Renton: The legislative proposals which my right hon. Friend will bring before Parliament will include provision for the radio authority to award licences for up to eight years.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the relationship between the new Radio Authority and the Broadcasting Complaints Commission will be.

Mr. Renton: In the light of responses to our Green Paper we have concluded that radio should continue to fall within the jurisdiction of the Broadcasting Complaints Commission.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what powers and staff will be available to the new Radio Authority to monitor the programmes of new radio stations;

(2) further to his written reply of 19 January, Official Report, columns 647-9, what sanctions the new Radio Authority will have in the event of new licence holders not living up to their promises to their audiences.

Mr. Renton: Provisions relating both to powers and to resources will be included in the legislative proposals which my right hon. Friend will bring before Parliament with a view to enabling the radio authority to enforce the conditions on which it issues licences, thus reflecting paragraphs 7.18-7.19 of our Green Paper.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what limits on transmission power will be imposed by the new Radio Authority on community radio stations.

Mr. Renton: Under the legislative proposals my right hon. Friend will bring before Parliament it will be for the radio authority to determine limits on the transmission power of stations it licenses, having regard amongst other things to the size of the area which the station is intended to serve and possible interference to other users of the radio spectrum.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many of the 500 responses he received to the Green Paper "Radio: Choices and Opportunities" recommended that radio licences should be assigned by competitive tender;

(2) further to his written answer of 19 January, Official Report, columns 647-9, what system of competitive tendering will be adopted and what steps taken to ensure that such arrangements are open and public;

(3) further. to his written answer of 19 January, Official Report, columns 647-9, who will assign, by competitive tender, the licences for radio stations;

(4) further to his written answer of 19 January , Official Report, columns 647-9, what powers the new Radio Authority will have to ensure that the national commercial radio station, broadcast programmes that appeal to a variety of tastes and interests and one not limited to a single format.

Mr. Renton: The legislative proposals which my right hon. Friend will bring before Parliament will include provision for the Radio Authority to award licences for national radio services by competitive tender, for the procedure to be followed and for the criteria which the Radio Authority will be expected to apply in deciding which applications to entertain for the purposes of tender. No responses to the Green Paper recommended this proposal, and only a small number commented on it.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) further to his written answer of 19 January, Official Report, columns 647-9, what is his definition of community radio;

(2) further to his written answer of 19 January, Official Report, columns 647-9, what method he will employ to determine the number, scale and type of stations that a local community demands or wishes.

Mr. Renton: Under the legislative proposals my right hon. Friend will bring before Parliamemt it will be for the radio authority and not the Home Secretary to consider applications for licences to provide radio services to localities or communities. We do not envisage that under the new scheme there will be any formal distinction between different kinds of radio at the local level.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, further to his written answer of 19 January, Official Report, columns 647-9, whether he will require the Independent Broadcasting Authority to sell the transmitters that it currently owns.

Mr. Renton: We do not intend to require the IBA to sell the radio transmission sites and equipment that it now owns.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, further to his written answer of 19 January, Official Report, columns 647-9, by what date the BBC will have to (a) determine and (b) reassign two frequencies to independent radio.

Mr. Renton: We shall not withdraw frequencies currently assigned to the BBC until after the enactment of the legislative proposals based on the Green Paper which my right hon. Friend will bring before Parliament.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, further to his written answer of 19 January, Official Report, columns 647-9, whether he will list all those areas which have no radio service other than those provided by the BBC, and how many (a) people and (b) households live in these areas.

Mr. Renton: This information is not readily available in the form sought. Those areas which have no radio service other than those provided by the BBC are those which do not receive radio services provided by the IBA since they lie outside the service areas of the ILR programme companies listed in appendix VIII to the annual report of the IBA 1986-87.

Radioactive Materials (Transport)

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Greater Manchester on the command and liaison arrangements in force with (a) armed forces escorts and (b) Ministry of Defence police in relation to the passage through Greater Manchester of nuclear weapons or other radioactive materials.

Mr. John Patten: No. It has been the policy of successive Governments not to give details of the movements of defence nuclear materials, but I am satisfied that adequate command and liaison arrangements have been made wherever they may be necessary.

Voting Rights

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish in the Official Report a table to show his estimate of the number of persons living in (a) England, (b) Wales, (c) Scotland and (d) Northern Ireland who are citizens of another member state of the EEC; how many of these citizens of each of these states are in each of the areas listed above; and of these how many have the right to vote in (i) parliamentary elections and (ii) local government elections in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 18 January 1988]: Information on the estimated numbers of nationals of other European Community countries usually resident in the United Kingdom is given in the table. Nationals of EC countries other than the Republic of Ireland do not have the right to vote in parliamentary or local elections. It is estimated that some 95 per cent. of citizens of the Republic of Ireland who are resident in the United Kingdom are aged 18 or over, and therefore are entitled to register to vote in parliamentary elections and, if resident in Great Britain, in local government elections; those resident in Northern Ireland have the right to vote in local government elections provided they were included in the electoral register published in 1962 and meet the residence qualifications required. My right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, has indicated the Government's intention to introduce legislation to amend the qualifications for local government elections in Northern Ireland in order to align them with those in Great Britain.

TRANSPORT

Vehicle Examiners

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many vehicle examiners were employed by his Department in the south Wales traffic area for 1986-87; and what was the number of public service vehicles and goods vehicles for which they were responsible.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The figures for the vehicle inspectorate districts that cover approximately the south Wales traffic area are as follows:

	1986-87
Vehicle examiners in post	23
Public service vehicles over one year old	3,509
Heavy goods vehicles over one year old	27,537

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what were the numbers of vehicle examiners in post at May 1987, by traffic area.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The vehicle inspectorate is organised into 53 districts, grouped into four regions. Statistics are not kept by traffic area. The information by regions is as follows:

Number of vehicle examiners in post (May 1987)

	Number
South East Region	183
South Wales and West Region	115
North Region	132
Scottish Region	54
TOTAL	484

Public Service Vehicles

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how many public service vehicles failed their annual test, by operator group, for the south Wales traffic area for 1986-87;

(2) what was the number and percentage of annual tests which resulted in immediate prohibition of public service vehicles in (a) Great Britain and (b) Wales for 1986-87, broken down by operator group;

(3) what was the number of vehicles that failed the annual public service vehicle test in 1986-87 in Great Britain, by operator group;

(4) what was the number of vehicles that failed the annual public service vehicle test in 1986-87 in Wales, by operator group;

(5) what was the number of public service vehicles, by operator group, which (a) failed the annual test, and (b) failed the annual test after rectification of minor faults, for each traffic area in Great Britain in 1986-87.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Following the reorganisation of the bus industry, it is no longer possible to split the statistics into the former operator groups. Separate information is not kept for Wales as such. The following are the statistics on failure rates for Great Britain and for vehicle inspectorate districts covering approximately the south Wales traffic area.

	Great Britain	South Wales
Number of PSV annual tests	68,376	3,509
Number of initial failures	26,448	1,575
Number of passes after rectification of minor faults	12,841	698
Number of final failures	13,607	877
	Per cent.	Per cent.
Immediate prohibition rate at annual test	0·34	0·51

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what were the results of spot checking of public service vehicles and the immediate prohibition rates for (a) Britain and (b) Wales for 1986-87.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Separate information on spot checks is not available for Wales as a whole. The information for Great Britain is:

1986-87

Number of spot checks	Number of spot checks as a percentage of the total PSV annual tests	Number of immediate prohibitions issued at spot checks	Number of immediate prohibitions issued as a percentage of vehicles spot checked

Passenger Car Miles (Greater London)

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the latest available official estimate of the number of billion passenger car miles travelled in Greater London, together with the source; and what means he has available for maintaining subsequent measurements of that figure.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: About 25 billion passenger car miles were travelled in London in 1986. This estimate, which will be updated periodically, is derived as follows:

14 billion car miles (source: On-going National Traffic census)
× 1·77 passenger per car (source: 1985-86 National Travel Survey)
= 25 billion passenger miles.

The estimate of car mileage is provisional pending completion of work on a new series drawing on data from the national traffic census and other sources including surveys which the Department of Transport continued on abolition of the GLC. Methods of restructuring traffic surveys in London to support more accurate monitoring of year on year changes are also being studied.

London Regional Transport

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will print in the Official Report the "Statement of Strategy" he set out for London Regional Transport in 1985, his reasons for planning a revised statement to be published in June, and a list of the persons and bodies he and London Regional Transport are consulting concerning its contents.

Mr. David Mitchell: LRT has a duty to publish statements setting out its policies under section 7 of the London Regional Transport Act 1984. The June 1985 "Statement of Strategy" referred to was the last (and only) statement published in discharge of this duty. A copy is in the Library of the House. Under section 7(8) of the 1984 Act statements of policies must be published at least every three years. A new statement is therefore due by June 1988. Those to be consulted are specified in section 7(4) of the Act.

Motorway Service Stations

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals there are for further motorway service stations on the M62, M63, M66 or M67.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: None. The existing MSA network in the general Manchester-Liverpool-Stoke-on-Trent-Preston area is generally adequate to meet travellers' needs and there have been no complaints about their adequacy. However, a new site is planned at Hapsford on the M56 to cater for traffic to and from the Wirral and north Wales.

Railways (Scotland)

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has about any improvements which are planned for the rail network in Angus, Scotland.

Mr. David Mitchell: I understand from British Rail that it is planning to introduce Sprinter trains on the Dundee to Arbroath local services in May 1989 and Sprinter express trains on the Aberdeen to Glasgow services in October 1989.

Blood Tests

Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if, in the course of the interdepartmental road traffic law review, he will consider the current position which disallows the use of blood tests taken from an unconscious suspect following a road traffic accident; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We expect shortly to receive the report of the independent road traffic law review under the chairmanship of Dr. Peter North. We shall consider carefully any recommendations which the review may make on this issue.

Nuclear Fuel

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the ports through which spent nuclear fuel was imported in 1985, 1986 and 1987 and the number of flasks imported through each port.

Mr. David Mitchell: The ports through which flasks containing irradiated fuel were imported, and the total number of flasks for each of the three years in question, are as follows:

	1985	1986	1987
Barrow	88	76	88
Harwich	6	none	none
Dover	1	2	2
Immingham	4	6	4

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many nuclear fuel flask transport wagons British Rail has taken out of service since 1983; and at what cost.

Mr. David Mitchell: Since 1983, 10 wagons have been withdrawn from service as part of the normal replacement programme. They cost £90,000 each at today's prices.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will update the information in the reply given to the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith) on 16 February 1987, Official Report, column 430, on notifiable incidents reported to the Nuclear Installations Inspectorate involving flasks designed to transport nuclear fuel.

Mr. David Mitchell: There have been no such incidents since February 1987.

British Airways

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport by what date he expects British Airways plc to comply with the requirements of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission to divest itself of certain routes.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: British Airways has already applied to the Civil Aviation Authority for the revocation of those of British Caledonian's European and domestic licences which it told the Monopolies and Mergers Commission it would return.

British Rail

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next intends to meet the chairman of British Rail; and what matters will be discussed.

Mr. David Mitchell: I shall be meeting the chairman on 11 February to discuss matters of current interest.

Roads

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish in the Official Report tables showing (a) the expenditure allocation to English shire counties for road construction and repair and (b) the actual expenditure outturn, for the years 1983-84, 1984-85, 1985-86 and 1986-87.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The information requested is in the following tables. No local authority allocations are made for maintenance expenditure which does not class as capital expenditure covered by the capital controls system.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Cataract Operations

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has on the average waiting period in each regional health authority for cataract operations.

Mr. Newton: In 1985, the latest year for which information is available centrally, the estimated median interval between the times a patient was placed on the waiting list and admission to an NHS non-psychiatric hospital was as follows:

Region of Treatment	Operations on eye lens[1] Median Waiting Time (weeks)
England	16
Northern	13
Yorkshire	21
Trent	16
East Anglia	15
North West Thames	17
North East Thames	11

West Midlands	27
Mersey	11
North Western	16
Special Health Authorities	10

[1] OPCS Classification of Surgical Operations (CSO) codes 170-179.

Dentists

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many dentists were in practice in (a) the Burnley constituency and (b) the Pendle constituency in each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mrs. Currie: Information of the kind requested by the hon. Member is not available centrally on a constituency basis.

Christmas Bonus

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will express the value in real terms of the 1987 £10 Christmas bonus for pensioners compared with its value in 1979, taking account of inflation.

Mr. Scott: The 1979 Christmas bonus was worth £17·02 at December 1987 prices.

Retirement Pension

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what estimates are available to him of the cost in terms of state retirement pension of reducing the male retirement age to 60 years.

Mr. Scott: Our current best estimate is that the net cost to public funds would be in excess of £3,000 million in a full year.

Nurses

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to receive (a) the preliminary report and (b) the full report on the survey of nurse shortages from the Review Body for Nursing Staff, Midwives, Health Visitors and Professions Allied to Medicine; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: A sample survey of the number of whole-time equvalent funded nursing and midwifery posts vacant for more than three months at 31 March is carried out by the regional chairmen's secretariat on behalf of the Review Body for Nursing Staff, Midwives, Health Visitors and Professions Allied to Medicine.

I am advised that whilst some preliminary results of the survey at 31 March 1987 have been sent to the review body, the final report will not be submitted to the review body until February 1988.

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he intends to bring forward legislation to require private hospitals to contribute towards the cost of nurses' training.

Mr. Newton: We expect shortly to open discussions with the private sector with the aim of encouraging a contribution to training needs which more closely matches their contribution to health care overall. We have, however, no present plans for legislation on this matter.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if, pursuant to his answer of 13 January, Official Report, columns 327-8, on nursing training expenditure, he will now break down these figures by regions.

Mr. Newton: The information is in the table.

Radiotherapy

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services pursuant to the reply by his Under-Secretary of State on 14 December, Official Report columns 400-1, if he will publish the outcome of the departmental review of the policy of centralising of radiotherapy treatment centres; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: The Department's Standing Medical Advisory Committee is expected to give its views on the organisation of radiotherapy services shortly. Ministers will consider these views as part of their review. An announcement will be made as soon as conclusions are reached.

Out-patient Appointments (Fees)

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will introduce a modest fee for out-patient appointments refundable in all cases except for belated cancellation or non-attendance.

Mr. Newton: We have no plans to do so.

Private Nursing Homes

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list by name and location (a) private nursing homes in the Northern regional health authority area, (b) the owners of such nursing homes, (c) the number of beds available in each home, (d) the amount of regional development grant and regional selective assistance grant moneys made available for each home in each of the last two years and (e) the date of opening of each home.

Mrs. Currie: The "Directory of Private Hospitals and Health Services", available in the Library, lists residential care and nursing homes. I regret that the remaining information requested by the hon. Member is not available centrally, and he may, therefore, wish to contact the chairmen of the health authorities concerned for further details.

Allergy-related Illness

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if Her Majesty's Government has any plans to increase the amount of money available for research into and treatment of allergy-related illness.

Mrs. Currie: It is for health authorities to decide how much of their resources they will allocate to the treatment of any particular condition, including allergy-related illness.

The Government are already supporting research in this area. The main Government-funded agency for the promotion of medical and related biological research is the Medical Research Council, which receives its grant-in-aid from the Department of Education and Science. I understand that the council is currently supporting research on allergies in 20 centres at a total cost in 1986-87 of £540,000. The council is always willing to consider well-founded proposals for further research in competition with proposals in other fields.

The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food is funding studies into intolerance reactions to food at a cost of £500,000 over the next three years as a follow-up to the work already completed on intolerance reactions to food additives. The Department of Health and Social Security has awarded an annual grant of £10,000 for the years 1987-88 to 1989-90 to the Asthma Society and Friends of the Asthma Research Council.

St. James' Hospital, Portsmouth

Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the latest estimate of the likely date for releasing on to the market surplus land and buildings on the site at St. James' hospital, Milton, Portsmouth.

Mrs. Currie: This is a matter for the Portsmouth and South East Hampshire health authority but I understand that preliminary negotiations are in progress between the health authority and the Portsmouth city council, prior to the submission of a formal planning application for the future use of surplus land and buildings at St. James' hospital, Portsmouth.

The health authority is unable at this early stage of the disposal process, to say when it may be possible to market this property. My hon. Friend may wish to contact the chairman if he requires further details.

Health Authorities (Administration)

Mr. Wells: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the annual administration cost of the East Hertfordshire health authority and of the West Essex health authority since 1979.

Mrs. Currie: The information is in the table. It is derived from the annual accounts of the authorities since their establishment on 1 April 1982:

Expenditure on headquarters administration

	East Hertfordshire district health authority £000	West Essex district health authority £000
1982-83	1,694 (2·15)	1,142 (3·82)
1983-84	1,686 (2·02)	1,147 (3·72)
1984-85	1,841 (2·02)	1,279 (3·93)
1985-86	1,070 (3·75)	1,486 (4·03)
1986-87	1,012 (3·29)	1,493 (3·70)

Notes:

1. Expenditure on headquarters administration includes all current expenditure on the pay and pay related costs of staff of all disciplines (including general managers) employed at district headquarters levels and their office costs and overheads. It excludes the cost of secretarial and clerical support staff employed in departments at hospital and unit levels: such costs are regarded as operational.

2. Prior to 1 April 1985 the East Hertfordshire Health Authority had an associated family practitioner committee (FPC) and the authority's expenditure figures shown for the years before that date include elements relating to the FPC's administrative expenses which are not separately identifiable.

3. The figures in brackets show that expenditure on headquarters administration as a percentage of each authority's total revenue expenditure for the relevant financial years. In the case of East Hertfordshire Health Authority the totals used for the years prior to 1 April 1985 include expenditure on family practitioner services incurred by the FPC.

4. Prior to 1 April 1982 each authority's predecessor health district formed part of a multi-district area health authority and district based figures were not collected centrally.

Plastic Surgery

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the latest number of plastic surgeons and the number in 1983 and 1978; and what steps are being taken to recruit, train and retain plastic surgeons.

Mrs. Currie: The numbers of medical staff in the specialty of plastic surgery are set out in the table. Numbers of training grade posts are related to the numbers of expected consultant opportunities. We are satisfied that there are sufficient doctors in training to meet planned developments, but the position is closely monitored by the joint planning advisory committee.

Numbers of hospital medical staff[1] in the specialty of plastic surgery at 30 September each year: England

	1978	1983	1986
Consultants[2]	79	88	98
All staff[3]	198	212	225

[1] Permanent paid and honorary staff.
[2] Including senior hospital medical officers with allowance.
[3] Excluding hospital practitioners and doctors with paragraph 94 appointments (clinical assistants).

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the number of plastic surgeons per 1,000 people in the United Kingdom and the comparable figure for France, West Germany, Italy, Denmark, the Netherlands and Belgium.

Mrs. Currie: The number of consultant plastic surgeons per 1,000 people in the United Kingdom at 30 September 1986 was 0·002. Comparable figures for other countries are not available.

Government Data Network

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether his Department is considering a network as an alternative to his Department's participation in the Government data network; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: The Department is working with others on the proposed Government data network. The work includes the assessment of alternative ways of meeting our data communication requirements. Final decisions will be taken after tenders are received.

General Practitioners (Equipment)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what proposals his Department has to encourage general practitioners to purchase desk top analysers and other technological equipment.

Mrs. Currie: General practitioners are not encouraged at present to purchase desk-top analysers. It is not yet obvious that the acquisition of technological equipment by GPs is more cost-effective than their continued use of the specialist services provided by hospital pathology departments.

Family Income Supplement

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people were in receipt of family income supplement in (a) Vale Royal and (b) Winsford in each of the last five years.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that this information is not available. Family income supplement claims are dealt with by one centre at Blackpool and no information is maintained about claims from particular local areas.

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people have been registered as claimants for supplementary benenfit in Winsford at a convenient date in each of the last five years.

Mr. Portillo: The table sets out the information requested giving the earliest data available. The district of Winsford is served by Northwich local office but the boundaries are not conterminous.

Northwich Local Office

Date	Number of supplementary benefit claimants
18 December 1984	6,464
17 December 1985	6,526
16 December 1986	6,647
17 November 1987	6,579

AIDS

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the hospitals in the Greater London area that have special provision to care for people suffering from AIDS.

Mr. Newton: In the majority of cases, any general hospital would be able to provide necessary care and treatment for people with AIDS. Some hospitals in the Greater London area, for example St. Stephen's, Fulham, St. Mary's, Paddington and the Middlesex hospital, have special provision for people with AIDS, such as designated wards, clinics and outreach teams.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the number of reported cases of AIDS in the Greater London area in each of the last three years.

Mr. Newton: It is regretted that the information is not available in the form requested. The cumulative totals of cases of AIDS reported to the Communicable Disease Surveillance Centre from district health authorities which are either wholly or partly within the Greater London area for the last three years are as follows:

	Number
1985	189
1986	399
1987	852

St. James' Hospital, Balham

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many staff employed at St. James' hospital, Balham, have found employment at St. George's hospital, Tooting; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: This information is not yet available. The transfer of services from St. James' hospital is not expected to be completed until later in the year and the process of interviewing staff is still under way. Assurances have been given that no staff will be disadvantaged by the relocation and that there will be no compulsory redundancies.

Correspondence

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he received letters from the hon. Member for Gateshead, East dated 16 November 1987 and 17 December 1987 concerning the incidence of child leukaemia on Tyneside; and when he expects to reply.

Mrs. Currie: I replied to the hon. Member on 22 January 1988.

Leicestershire Family Practitioner Committee

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the outcome of the recent meeting between an official of his Department and the Leicestershire family practitioner committee regarding financial allocations to the committee; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The purpose of the meeting on 8 January 1988 was to discuss with the chairman and administrator how a potential overspend on the committee's cash limit for administration this year might be avoided in the light of increases to funding referred to in my reply to my hon. Friend on 22 January 1988 at column 895. The Department has now received a revised assessment to the effect that the committee expects to remain within its cash limit.

Vitamin Deficiency

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has concerning any relationship between vitamin or mineral deficiency in the diet of children and inattentiveness or delinquent behaviour; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: A number of theories have been put forward linking diet or vitamin and mineral supplementation with children's behaviour. I am advised that the results so far published of studies designed to validate such theories appear to have been vitiated by inadequate research. The Department's medical advisers are studying the report published in the Lancet on 23 January relating to vitamin and mineral supplementation among Welsh schoolchildren which was the subject, together with a study in the United States of America, of a recent television programme. The Welsh study did not address inattentiveness or delinquency. Apparently the United States study was concerned with delinquency, but no details have yet been published.

Health Authorities

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what account he takes, when considering additional funding to district health authorities, of the attitude of those authorities, or hospitals within those authorities, towards the contracting out of services currently provided in-house.

Mr. Newton: Allocations to district health authorities are a matter for regions.

Benefits

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the criteria used by his Department's adjudication officers in establishing whether an unmarried claimant is living as husband or wife.

Mr. Portillo: Guidance for adjudication officers on the interpretation of social security legislation is given by the office of the chief adjudication officer, which is independent of the Department.

Guidance from the office of the chief adjudication officer to adjudication officers gives the following criteria to be considered when establishing whether an unmarried claimant is living as husband or wife:

1. Membership of the same household;
2. Stability of relationship;
3. Financial support;
4. Sexual relationship;
5. Children;
6. Public acknowledgement.

For adjudication officers considering the question of living together as husband and wife in connection with a claim to supplementary benefit this guidance is in the S Manual (S2501-S3000), which is published and available to the public. Similar guidance for adjudication officers dealing with the question in connection with a claim for a national insurance benefit is contained in the insurance officer's guide. This code is not published but a copy is held in the Library.

From April 1988 guidance for adjudication officers for all social security benefits will be contained in the adjudication officer's guide, which will replace existing material and will be published before 11 April.

In addition to the guidance issued to adjudication officers by the office of the chief adjudication officer, the Department also publishes a leaflet for the public which lists the criteria used by adjudication officers when considering the question of living together: Leaflet NI247, "Social Security: Living together as husband and wife", which is available from local social security offices.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people, shown by age and marital status, are in receipt of the long-term rate of supplementary benefit for the latest date and for equivalent dates in each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 9 December 1987]: The available information is shown in the tables. Table one shows the numbers of those who are claiming supplementary benefit as single people; table two shows the numbers of those who are claiming for a partner.

Table one: Numbers of single people in Great Britain in receipt of the long-term rate of supplementary benefit—by age group

Public Funds

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what proposals for the dispersal of public funds were discussed at a meeting of senior officials of his Department and the leaders of major voluntary organisations on 15 January.

Mr. Scott: Officials had a preliminary meeting with representatives from the National Council for Voluntary Organisations, Community Service Volunteers, the Volunteer Centre, the Community Projects Foundation and the Charities Aid Foundation on 15 January 1988.

The purpose of the meeting was to seek their assistance and advice on the disbursement of the funds arising from the error in relation to the retail price index.

Health Advisory Service

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services which district health authorities in the west midlands have been visited by the Health Advisory Service since its inception and when these visits took place.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 25 January 1988]: The information required is in the table. The Health Advisory Service makes visits to monitor services provided for the elderly and the mentally ill.

District Health Authority	Visits in respect of services for The elderly	The mentally ill
Bromsgrove and Redditch	1974	1973, 1981
Central Birmingham	1970, 1986	1972, 1982, 1986

Wolverhampton	1974, 1975	1972
Worcestershire	1973, 1974 (twice) 1981	1972 (twice) 1985

There were also visits to examine services for the elderly mentally ill specifically to Coventry, South Warwickshire and Wolverhampton in 1981 and Wolverhampton again in 1987.

Residential Care

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will take urgent steps to ensure that all providers of accommodation for people needing residential care are subject to a national registration system;

(2) if he will urgently seek the abolition of any distinction between residential care and nursing homes providing long-term care.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 26 January 1988]: Any changes in the existing arrangements for registration and inspection would need to take account of what is said about homes in the reports expected shortly of Lady Wagner's review of residential care, Sir Roy Griffiths' overview of community care, and the social services inspectorate's report on the implementation of the Registered Homes Act 1984. The registration and inspection system for homes in Scotland is a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

DEFENCE

Territorial Army

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when next he expects to meet the chairman of the Territorial Army Volunteer Reserve Association to discuss the future of the Territorial Army.

Mr. Freeman: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence has no plans scheduled for a meeting with the chairman of the Territorial Auxiliary and Volunteer Reserves Association at the present time. However, formal consultative machinery exists in the shape of the bi-annual Territorial Auxiliary and Volunteer Reserves Advisory Committee, which is next due to meet on 12 July 1988. The council of TAVRAs does, however, have the right to make representations to the Department at any time it sees fit to do so.

Category Z Berths

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the locations of all category Z berths in the Clyde area.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The locations of Z berths in the Clyde area are as follows:

Coulport
Rothesay (two berths)
Arran (two berths)
Campbeltown (four berths)
Loch Fyne—Tarbert
Inverary
Rosebank
Loch Goil
Loch Striven
Glen Mallan

Clyde Naval Emergency Monitoring Team

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on how many occasions since 1979 the Clyde naval emergency monitoring team has been called out to incidents.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The Naval Emergency Monitoring Organisation (Scotland) has been called out on three occasions since 1979. In April 1985 it was asked to provide assistance to the civil authorities under the national arrangements for incidents involving radioactivity (NAIR scheme) when a suspect package was found on a beach on the outskirts of Helensburgh which subsequently proved not to contain any radioactive material. In October 1985 it was called out when an alarm sounded at the Clyde submarine base. This was subsequently found to be spurious. In May 1986 it was called to the royal naval armaments depot, Coulport, when a slighter higher than normal radioactive reading was detected within a sealed item of equipment. It was quickly established that there was no hazard.

Clyde Area Public Safety Scheme

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what provisions are made under the Clyde public safety scheme for an accident involving a nuclear weapon.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The aim of the Clyde area public safety scheme is to safeguard the public, not only in the unlikely event of a submarine reactor accident, but in the event of any other accident in the Clyde area which might lead to a release of radioactivity, and which interferes with the normal activities of the local population.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the names, dates and locations of exercises held under the Clyde public safety scheme since 1979.

Mr. Ian Stewart: It is not our practice to discuss details of nuclear accident response exercises.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the amendments made to the Clyde public safety scheme since 1983.

Mr. Ian Stewart: There have been two amendments to the Clyde area public safety scheme sine 1983, one issued in July 1985 and the other in September 1986. A copy of the scheme is held in the Library and a copy incorporating the amendments since 1983 has now also been placed in the Library.

European Fighter Aircraft

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last met his West German counterpart to discuss the future of the European fighter aircraft.

Mr. Sainsbury: My right hon. Friend holds frequent and regular meetings with his West German counterpart at which a wide range of matters of mutual interest is discussed. The last such occasion occurred on 20 January.

Mr. Martin Kettrick

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the question of compensation payments for disabled ex-Marine Martin Kettrick was first raised with his Department by the right hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South; on how many occasions it has been raised since and in what form; when he expects a decision to be made; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The right hon. Gentleman first raised the case of Martin Kettrick in a letter to my Department in March 1982. It has been raised since on a considerable number of occasions, both in correspondence and in the House. As the right hon. Gentleman is aware, Mr.

Kettrick has submitted a case for consideration by the Defence council under the procedures which provide for submission for redress of grievance. A decision is expected to be made on this shortly.

Ex-Service Personnel (Injury Payments)

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many ex-service people have claimed ex-gratia payments after being injured whilst serving; what payments have been made; how many people are still awaiting settlement; and when he expects to reach decisions on the outstanding claims.

Mr. Freeman: Complete records are not available for the period before 8 December 1986, when my hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence announced that, pending repeal of section 10 of the Crown Proceedings Act 1947, claims for personal injuries to service personnel would be considered for settlement on an ex-gratia basis. In respect of the period from 8 December 1986 to 15 May 1987, when section 10 was repealed, seven claims have been received from ex-service people. A decision to make a payment has been taken in one case, two claims have been rejected and four are still under investigation. Decisions will be taken on the four outstanding claims as soon as inquiries have been completed.

Nuclear Materials (Transport)

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if there are any plans to deploy his Department's police in connection with nuclear materials convoy duties in Greater Manchester.

Mr. Ian Stewart: It has been the policy of successive Governments not to give details of the movement of defence nuclear materials.

SCOTLAND

Housing

16. Mr. Lambie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he intends to meet the chairman of the Scottish Special Housing Association to discuss housing in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend has no immediate plans to do so.

Regional Aid

18. Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many firms in the Arbroath travel-to-work area applied for regional development grants in 1987.

Mr. Lang: In 1987 applications for revised regional development grant were received from 28 firms in the Arbroath travel-to-work area. Information on applications under the old regional development scheme is not available.

24. Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received on the announcement on the withdrawal of regional development grant for Scotland.

Mr. Lang: I have not received any representations following the announcement of the ending of regional development grant for Scotland.

31. Mr. McCleish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the likely impact of recent changes in regional aid policy on the attraction of inward investment to Scotland.

Mr. Lang: Scotland is an attractive location for inward investment. Since 1981 Scotland has attracted £2·6 billion of planned investment with related employment amounting to 46,000 jobs. I am satisfied that the change in regional assistance announced recently together with Scotland's other attractions will enable us to be similarly successful in the future.

39. Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the effect of the changes announced on 12 January 1988, Official Report, columns 145-47 on the one-door approach adopted by the Dundee project.

Mr. Lang: The changes announced by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on 12 January 1988 will improve the effectiveness of the work of the Dundee project. The administration of the new Department of Trade and Industry advisory service in Scotland by the Scottish Development Agency, allied to the agency's new regional structure, will increase the range of business support services on which the Dundee project can draw.

40. Mr. Douglas: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on any changes in the relationship between his Department and the Scottish Development Agency as a consequence of the recently announced proposals to alter regional financial assistance.

Mr. Lang: As I announced on 13 January 1988 in the context of the launch of the Industry Department for Scotland booklet "Regional Development: Encouraging Enterprise in Scotland", the agency will, together with the Highlands and Islands Development Board, act as agent for the Department of Trade and Industry's business development initiatives in Scotland. It will also take over from April 1988 the administration of the better business services scheme in those parts of Scotland where it is currently administered by my Department. Otherwise, there will be no changes in the present relationship between the Scottish Office and the Scottish Development Agency.

"The Way Forward"

19. Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he has had with Nirex since the publication of the executive's document, "The Way Forward".

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend has had no discussions with Nirex since this document was published on 12 November.

Education (Strathclyde)

20. Mr. Michael J. Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, when he next expects to meet Strathclyde regional council representatives to discuss education within the region.

29. Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will meet representatives of Strathclyde regional council to discuss problems in the educational field within the region.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans at present to meet representatives of Strathclyde regional council to discuss education.

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many representations he has received concerning the proposed reorganisation of school education in Strathclyde; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: At the most recent count I have received 2,555 representations including three petitions in connection with the proposed reorganisation of school education in Strathclyde. I recognise that difficult decisions will have to be taken by Strathclyde and other education authorities in rationalising school provision so as to reduce surplus capacity. But I am also concerned that the options being considered include the closure of schools which are so highly regarded by parents that they remain full to capacity even at a time when school rolls generally are falling.

I have therefore decided to take powers to review in certain circumstances education authorities' proposals for school closures. I am laying regulations today — the Education (Publication and Consultation etc.) (Scotland) Regulations 1988 — which will require education authorities to submit for my consent any proposal to close or reorganise a school where the pupil numbers exceed 80 per cent. of the school's capacity.

Cardiac Facilities

21. Mr. Buchanan-Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to complete his review of hospital cardiac facilities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The national specialist services advisory committee is nearing the end of its review of cardiac surgery provision throughout Scotland. Its report is expected in the next few months.

Municipal Rents

22. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the level of municipal rents in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Responsibility for setting rent levels for council housing lies with the individual local authority concerned. Average local authority rents in Scotland in 1987-788 stand at £14·65 per house per week. They have risen from an average of £4·92 per house per week in 1979-80, some 75 per cent. of the average for local authorities in England and Wales, to a level which is now 84 per cent. of the England and Wales average of £17·40 per week.

Student Grants

23. Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has as to how many university students in the Strathclyde area have been refused all or part of their grant allowance due to the fact that the student's parent has failed to complete part 2 of the application form.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: We are aware of seven such cases among students attending Glasgow and Strathclyde universities in session 1987-88.

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many students from Scotland to whom covenants are made and who are also entitled, after means testing, to a full university or further education award, currently have a deduction made from their awards relative to the amount of the covenant.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not available.

School Closures

25. Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on representations received about school closures in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. and learned Friend and I have received representations about many of the schools currently being considered for closure in Strathclyde region. In particular we have received over 2,000 representations and a petition with 7,300 signatures protesting about the proposal to close Paisley grammar school.

Scottish Special Housing Association

26. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions his Department has had with the Scottish Special Housing Association regarding the transfer of its tenants in Shetland to the Hjaltland Housing Association.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Officials of the Scottish Development Department met officials of the Scottish Special Housing Association on several occasions last year to discuss proposals for the association's tenants in Shetland to be given the opportunity to transfer to Hjaltland housing association. The tenants are now considering this matter.

Crown Estates Commission

27. Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received urging a review of the powers of the Crown Estates Commission over the development of fish and shellfish farming in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. and learned Friend has received representations from several hon. Members, local authorities, other bodies and individuals. The majority of such representations have concerned both the role of the Crown Estate Commissioners and the exclusion of marine fish farms from the scope of planning controls.

Court Actions (Costs)

28. Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will indicate the costs incurred by the Crown Office in bringing (a) interdict proceedings against The Scotsman and (b) contempt proceedings against The Glasgow Herald and its editor, in each case indicating the cost incurred: (i) before any writ was lodged in the Court of Session and (ii) thereafter; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The actions have been brought by the Lord Advocate on behalf of the Government. The expenses of these actions and liability for their payment will only be known once the actions are concluded.

Scottish Development Agency

30. Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what additional resources he will give to the Scottish Development Agency following the announcement of regional aid cuts.

Mr. Lang: There have been no such cuts. On the contrary, the 1988 public expenditure White Paper (Cm. 288), published on 20 January by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer, shows total expenditure on the Scottish industry programme for 1988-89 as £266 million, an increase of £25 million over the planned provision in the 1987 expenditure White Paper (Cm. 56).

Primary Schools (Pupil Costs)

32. Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much was spent per pupil in primary schools in Scotland in the most recent year for which figures are available; and what was the comparable figure in 1978-79, at constant prices.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: In 1985-86 net expenditure per pupil in primary schools in Scotland at outturn prices was £961. This is 24 per cent. more than the comparable figure in 1978-79 which, at 1985-86 prices, was £774.

School Management

33. Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to ensure that the comments expressed in the responses to the consultation paper "School Management and the Role of Parents" are reflected in any ensuing legislation.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Government's conclusions on school management were published on 18 January in the booklet "School Management — the Government's Conclusions" and they reflect many of the helpful comments expressed during the consultation. Copies of the booklet have been sent to all Scottish Members and have been placed in the Library. A Bill to give effect to our intentions will be brought forward shortly.

Public Expenditure

34. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to be able to publish the Scottish commentary on public expenditure.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend expects to publish "Public Expenditure to 1990-91: A Commentary on the Scotland Programme" around 17 February. As in previous years a copy will be sent to each Scottish Member. Copies will also be placed in the Library.

Rating Reform

35. Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what will be the financial implications for each of the regions of Scotland of the failure to introduce a uniform business rate at the same time as is proposed for England and Wales; and what will be the financial implications for Scotland as a whole of the non-introduction of a uniform business rate for Great Britain.

Mr. Lang: I refer the hon. Member to my replies to his questions on 27 November 1987 at column 132, 17 December 1987 at column 643 and 14 January 1988 at column 367, which explained policy on the reform of non-domestic rates in Scotland. Detailed estimates of the kind requested have not been made.

38. Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will seek to amend the Abolition of Domestic Rates Etc. (Scotland) Act 1987 so that married students, who depend on their spouse's income for grant purposes, will not be jointly and severally liable for that spouse's poll tax.

Mr. Lang: No.

Newbattle Abbey College

36. Mr. Eadie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what processes of consultation he undertook before announcing the withdrawal of funding from Newbattle Abbey college in Dalkeith.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: There was no public consultation before the decision was announced, but there will be adequate opportunity for the governors and others to express their views before the decision takes effect.

Disabled People (Transport)

37. Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, if he will make a statement on the provision of transport for the disabled in the Strathclyde region since deregulation.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I understand that Strathclyde passenger transport executive, on behalf of the regional council, last year carried out a review of dial-a-bus services for the mobility handicapped within the Glasgow area. As a result of the review an extension of the concept of door-to-door dial-a-bus services was recommended and the council has now approved changes in the style and scope of the service.

The extended network, which is subsidised by the council, will start on 1 February in the following operating areas:

Glasgow North West
Glasgow North East
Glasgow South East
Glasgow South West
Hamilton/East Kilbride
Renfrew
Clydesdale

I understand that there are, in addition, three community transport schemes operated by the voluntary sector which provide transport for the mobility handicapped within the conurbation.

Job Creation

41. Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent discussions he has had with the Confederation of British Industry about new industries coming to Scotland during the past year and on how many jobs will be created.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend keeps in regular touch with the Confederation of British Industry on a range of issues, and addressed its annual conference in Glasgow in November when he drew attention to the continuing attractiveness of Scotland as a location for industrial investment. Last year there were announcements of over 50 major new industrial projects with the prospect of over 12,000 jobs.

Housing Finance

42. Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the provisional non-housing revenue account and housing revenue account capital allocations for 1988-89 for (a) Scotland and (b) Edinburgh; and if he will express them as a percentage of the allocation in the 1987-88 financial year.

Mr. Lang: The provisional non-housing revenue account and housing revenue account capital allocations for 1988-89 for Scotland as a whole are £122·6 million and £387 million, respectively. These represent 83·1 per cent. and 106·8 per cent. respectively of the equivalent allocations at this stage last year.

The provisional non-housing revenue account and housing revenue account capital allocations for 1988-89 for Edinburgh district council are £24 million and £26·4 million respectively. These represent 70 per cent. and 107 per cent. respectively of the equivalent allocations at this stage last year.

This year, as a result of substantial increases in receipts, the housing revenue account allocations at final stage were higher than the provisional allocations. Similarly next year, any receipts additional to those assumed will enhance 1988-89 allocations.

Roads (North Ayrshire)

43. Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on Government policy for improving road communications in north Ayrshire.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The north of Ayrshire is served by two trunk roads, the A77 and the A78. On the A78 there are plans to bypass the towns of Ardrossan and Saltcoats. On the northern section of the A77, the Ayr road route is a joint central Government-regional authority project, which will provide an all-purpose dual carriageway between the centre of Glasgow and Ayrshire. Roads connecting with the trunk road network are the responsibility of the local roads authority, Strathclyde regional council.

Legal System

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to introduce legislation to reform the Scottish legal system; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend will continue to introduce well-based proposals for appropriate reforms of the Scottish legal system.

Paisley Grammar School

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many representations he has received concerning the proposal to close Paisley grammar school; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: At the most recent count 2,385 representations and a petition with 7,300 signatures have been received in connection with the proposal to close Paisley grammar school.

Road Improvements

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of major road improvements projects which are under way or are to be initiated during the current year in Angus, Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: There are no major trunk road schemes under construction at present, or planned to commence in the current financial year, in Angus.

Hospitals

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of new hospital building projects which are planned to take place in Angus, Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The initiative on new hospital building projects lies with health boards in the first instance. Tayside health board has, I understand, long-term plans to provide a new community hospital in Forfar, Angus. These proposals are however currently subject to a detailed option appraisal and if the board decides to proceed, a submission for approval-in-principle will be made to the Scottish Home and Health Department.

Educational Expenditure

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of any educational projects which are planned for the current year in Tayside.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The educational building projects being undertaken or proposed in the financial years 1987-88 and 1988-89, as listed in Tayside regional council's current financial plan, are given in table 1. Table 2 gives details of projects in 1987-88 in central institutions in Tayside and the Dundee campus of the Northern college of education. Comparable information for 1988-89 is not yet available.

National Health Service (Resources)

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to increase resources allocated to the National Health Service in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Yes. My right hon. and learned Friend announced on 9 December that the provision for the National Health Service in Scotland would rise by about £130 million next year, to £2,393 million and by a further £100 million in each of the next two years. I also refer the hon. Member to the additional £7·6 million of which details were mentioned in the reply I gave on 18 December 1987, at column 820, to my hon. Friend the Member for Eastwood (Mr. Stewart).

Meningitis

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many cases of meningitis have occurred in Scotland during each of the past three years; how many of these have been fatal; what evidence he has as to the principal cause of the disease; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The number of cases of meningococcal meningitis, which is a notifiable disease, for the past three years in Scotland is as follows:

1985	136
1986	180
1987	159 (provisional)

The number of laboratory reports of all forms of meningitis received by the Communicable Diseases (Scotland) Unit is as follows:

1985	460
1986	419
1987	432

The number of deaths from all forms of meningitis is as follows:

1985	22
1986	25
1987	n.a.

The principal attributable cause of the disease has not yet been identified. The recent position is that meningitis in Scotland appears to be confined to sporadic cases with no significant upsurge in numbers beyond anticipated variation. We are, however, keeping the situation under close review.

Graduates (Teaching)

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the percentage of Scottish graduates who went into teaching as a first job in 1970, 1975, 1980 and 1985.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The numbers of persons entering postgraduate teacher training courses in Scotland in 1970, 1975, 1980 and 1985 expressed as rates per 100 graduates from academic establishments in Scotland during the previous academic year are 28, 30, 14 and 6, respectively. Information on the proportion of graduates commencing teaching employment for the first time in each of these years is not readily available.

Teachers

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of teaching posts in Scottish primary schools is held by (a) males and (b) females.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: At September 1984 11·4 per cent. of the full-time teachers in education authority primary schools were male and 88·6 per cent. were female.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the average salary of (a) a male and (b) a female teacher in Scotland's schools.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Scottish teachers, whether male of female, receive the same rates of pay which are determined from a single salary structure. The estimated average salary for all Scottish teachers at October 1987 is £13,200. Information on the separate average salaries of male and female teachers is not available.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the average age of (a) male and (b) female teachers in Scotland in 1970, 1975, 1980 and 1985.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The average ages of full-time teachers in education authority schools are as shown. Information for session 1970-71 is not readily available; 1984-85 is the latest year for which information is available.

Ayr Road Route

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the timetable for completion of the Ayr road route; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: All of the statutory orders have now been published for this scheme. The number and nature of the objections received, both to the trunk road section and to Strathclyde regional council's proposals, mean that a joint public local inquiry will be required. A provisional starting date for an inquiry of 23 March is being investigated and a press announcement confirming details will be made in due course. I hope my hon. Friend will appreciate that I cannot give an indication of when construction of the Ayr road route might start since whether it goes ahead or not will depend on the recommendation of the inquiry reporter and my final decision.

South African Consul General for Scotland

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on how many occasions the South African consul general for Scotland has met any Minister or any official of his Department or the Scottish Development Agency; and what was the purpose and outcome of the meetings.

Mr. Rifkind [holding answer 21 January 1988]: None of my ministerial colleagues has met the South African consul general for Scotland. An official of the Industry Department for Scotland attended a lunch in Glasgow on 26 November 1987, along with others from Scottish industrial and commercial interests, to mark a visit to Scotland by the South African ambassador.

In addition, Scottish Office officials have occasional meetings or discussions with consular officials in the normal course of their duties.

Peterhead Prison

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what role he envisages for Peterhead prison within the Scottish penal system;

(2) what is his policy on the conclusion of the Buyers report into prisoners' grievances at Peterhead, that on balance the building of a new prison at Peterhead is justified;

(3) whether he will accept the recommendation of the Buyers report into prisoners' grievances at Peterhead on the establishment for new alternative secure units in Scottish prisons;

(4) when he intends to respond to the recommendation and points of note in the Buyers report into prisoners' grievances at Her Majesty's prison, Peterhead;

(5) if he will make a statement on Scottish prison policy.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 26 January 1988]: My right hon. and learned Friend made a speech on 25 January on penal policy and the operation of the Scottish prison service in Scotland. Copies of his speech have been placed in the Library. My right hon. and learned Friend indicated in his speech the main measures which he is pursuing in response, inter alia, to the advice put to him by Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Prisons (following his special investigation into grievances of prisoners at Peterhead).

For the time being Peterhead prison will operate with a reduced capacity. At present places are available for up to 60 long-term prisoners who present management or control problems; this capacity will be increased when D hall becomes available in December this year. There is also capacity for up to 50 long-term prisoners who are unable to go into normal circulation and for 20 local prisoners serving short sentences.

For the longer term, my right hon. and learned Friend is considering a range of options including the possibility of changing the plans for building a new prison at Peterhead. He has made it plain, however, that nothing has been decided yet and that this possibility is only one of the options for the future of Peterhead prison.

The Government's initial response to Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Prisons' report on his inquiry into prisoners' grievances at Peterhead prison was published on 6 May. A number of recommendations have already been implemented. Action on other matters will be announced in due course.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Experimental Husbandry Farms

Mr. Ashby: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many experimental husbandry farms there are; what is the purpose of these farms; and if he will make a statement on his future policy in respect of such farms.

Mr. Donald Thompson: There are 12 experimental husbandry farms throughout England and Wales representing all the main farming enterprises on a range of soil types and under a variety of climatic conditions. The primary purpose of these farms is to conduct developmental work in general areas and on specific projects where there is a demonstrable need within the farming industry, with the aim of the early adoption of these systems or techniques by the industry. The development work at the centres is an integral part of the ADAS R and D programme and as such is inseparable from the future decisions on support for agricultural R and D.

Mr. Ashby: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the cost of running each experimental husbandry farm; what revenue is received in respect of each farm; and how much of that revenue comes from charges to visitors.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The table shows the running costs and the revenue received in respect of each experimental husbandry farm for the financial year 1986-87. None of these receipts are attributable to charged visits.

	Total costs £'000s	Receipts £'000s

Trawscoed	1,503	704

Mr. Ashby: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the number of visitors to each experimental husbandry farm in each year since 1984.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The table shows the numbers of visitors to experimental husbandry farms for the years 1984 to 1987.

	1984	1985	1986	1987
Boxworth	2,861	2,932	1,821	1,958

Basking Sharks

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what representations he has received from the Marine Conservation Society concerning the fishing of basking sharks in British and European waters; if he will seek their current views on this matter; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many tonnes of basking shark liver have been taken by the Norwegians from British waters during 1987;

(3) what currently is the quota of Norway in respect of basking shark fishing in British and European waters; and if he intends to make any representations or take any action in respect thereof.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The 1988 Norwegian quota for basking shark in Community waters is 400 tonnes of basking shark liver, as in 1987. Details of catches against this quota for 1987 are not yet available.

Officials of my Department and the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland have had a number of contacts with the Marine Conservation Society about the fishery for basking sharks and its effects on stocks. The Government are aware of the views of the Marine Conservation Society and see no need for further consultation at this stage. Fisheries and Environment Ministers are, however, giving further consideration to the case for inclusion of basking sharks in schedule 5 to the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981.

Forestry

Ms. Quin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement concerning the implications for forestry of the Government's and the EEC's proposals for set-aside in agriculture.

Mr. MacGregor: The Community set-aside scheme, on which discussions are continuing in the Council of Ministers, is expected to include provision for land taken out of arable crop production to be used for woodland. The consultation document issued by the Agricultural Departments on 8 December 1987 contained suggestions as to how this option might be put into practice in the United Kingdom and linked with the new farm woodland scheme. I and my colleagues will wish to consider the matter further in the light of the Community's final decisions, and of views expressed during our current consultations in this country.

Pesticides

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish the criteria which are used for the review of pesticides under the control of pesticides regulations.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 26 January 1988]: Pesticides under review are evaluated in relation to a wide range of criteria, including their chemical properties, function, efficacy, residues, toxicity and environmental effect. Each product is considered individually, but the fields of interest are those set out in appendix 4 of the volume "Approval for Data Requirements for Approval under the Control of Pesticides Regulations 1986" which is in the Library of the House.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Agricultural Development Programme

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will announce the details of the Northern Ireland agricultural development programme; which items will be grant-aided; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Viggers: Council Regulation (EEC) No. 1942/81 under which the Northern Ireland agricultural development programe was introduced, was recently amended by Council Regulation (EEC) No. 3156/87 to permit its continuation. An amended programme has been drafted by the Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland but it is still subject to the formal approval of the EC Commission. However, I hope that approval will be obtained soon, and that I will be able to make an early announcement about the details of the programme.

Amusement Machines

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will introduce legislation to regulate the growth of fruit machines, slot machines and video machines in shop premises in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: Fruit machines and other slot machines which are used for gaming are already illegal in these premises under the provisions of the Betting, Gaming, Lotteries and Amusements (Northern Ireland) Order 1985. However, I am aware that there are problems associated with the illegal use for gaming of certain types of machines which are designed for amusement only, for example video poker machines and I am considering what action, needs to be taken in regard to these.

Terrorist Attacks

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what were the casualty figures due to terrorist attacks for the last three months; what were the figures for the same period for each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: The information is as follows:

	October-December
	1983	1984	1985	1986	1987
Number of persons murdered by terrorists (also includes those murdered as a result of internal disputes)	28	8	9	10	19

	October-December
	1983	1984	1985	1986	1987
Total injuries associated with terrorist activity	178	159	193	260	332

Mentally Disordered Prisoners

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what consideration his Department has given to the problems presented by mentally disordered prisoners in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: In Northern Ireland prisoners who are diagnosed as suffering from mental illness or severe impairment (as defined in the Mental Health (Northern Ireland) Order 1986) of a nature or degree which warrants detention in hospital for medical treatment, may be transferred to hospital for such treatment. Male prisoners who do not require hospitalisation but who need treatment for mental disorders are housed in the psychiatric unit in Belfast prison where they are assessed and treated by consultant psychiatrists and prison medical staff. A new purpose-built psychiatric unit in the male prison at Maghaberry is due to open later this year to replace the existing unit in Belfast prison. Female prisoners who need psychiatric attention are treated in Maghaberry (female) prison.

Students (Republic of Ireland)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish in the Official Report the estimated cost to public funds for students from the Republic of Ireland now receiving their higher education in Northern Ireland as a result of European Community regulations.

Dr. Mawhinney: Information in the form requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, the cost of reimbursing the tuition fees of these students in the 1987-88 financial year will be about £450,000.

Police Meetings

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many meetings have taken place between the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary and the Commissioner of the Irish Republic's police force since 15 November 1985 (a) within Anglo-Irish conferences and (b) outside Anglo-Irish conferences;

(2) how many meetings have taken place between the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary and the Commissioner of the Irish Republic's police force since 15 November 1985 (a) within Northern Ireland, (b) within the Republic of Ireland and (c) elsewhere;

(3) during how many of the meetings between the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary and the Commissioner of the Irish Republic's police force held since 15 November 1985 a Minister or official of his Department was present.

Mr. Stanley: Since 15 November 1985, the Chief Constable and the Garda Commissioner have attended eight meetings of the Intergovernmental Conference, four of which were held in Belfast, three in London and one in Dublin. They have also participated in a further six meetings within the ambit of the conference attended by officials from both sides, five of which were held in Belfast and one in Dublin. In addition, the Chief Constable has had a number of private discussions with the present and former commissioner, both in Dublin and Belfast.

Maghaberry Prison

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the total capital cost of the construction and equipping of Her Majesty's prison, Maghaberry; when work commenced; when it was first used to accommodate prisoners; and if it is now complete.

Mr. Stanley: The prison complex at Maghaberry has cost some £35 million to construct and equip. Construction commenced in 1976 and prisoners were first accommodated there in March 1986. The complex is now essentially complete.

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what have been the annual (a) maintenance costs and (b) operating costs at Her Majesty's prison, Maghaberry for each year that it has been in use.

Mr. Stanley: Maintenance costs in the first full financial year of use (1986-87) were £333,939 and in the same period, operating costs were £7,023,058. Corresponding costs in the current financial year to date (April to December 1987) are £227,941 and £7,127,330 respectively.

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the prisoner capacity of Her Majesty's prison, Maghaberry; and what has been the average annual prison population for each year it has been in use.

Mr. Stanley: The female prison at Maghaberry has 56 cells and was designed to accommodate all the female prisoners in Northern Ireland. The male prison has a capacity for 432. The average weekly female population during 1986 was 29 and in 1987 it was 30. The corresponding figures for male prisoners are eight and 16 respectively.

Students (Covenants)

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many students from Northern Ireland to whom covenants are made and who are also entitled, after means testing, to a full university or further education award, currently have a deduction made from their awards relative to the amount of the covenant.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information is not available.

Salmon Tagging

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he has any plans to combat salmon poaching by the introduction of a tagging scheme.

Mr. Viggers: I have no plans at present to do so.

Fish Disease UDN

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the disease in fish known as UDN was first recorded in a Northern Ireland river; what were the peak years of incidence; which rivers were most affected; when the incidence of this disease became so low as not to cause concern over the future of salmon stocks; and what were the principal effects on salmon stocks.

Mr. Viggers: I assume the hon. Gentleman is referring to UDN (ulcerative dermal necrosis) which was first recorded in a Northern Ireland river in 1966. The peak years of incidence were 1966-68. No information exists to allow an accurate assessment of which rivers were most affected. By the early 1970s the incidence of UDN had become so low as to stop concern over the future of salmon stocks. The principal effect on salmon stocks in Northern Ireland was to reduce the number of adult fish surviving to spawn, thus lowering the amount of ova deposited.

Extradition

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many persons were extradited from the Republic of Ireland to Northern Ireland in each of the last three years where the charge was in respect of (a) terrorist activity and (b) non-terrorist activity.

Mr. Stanley: The information is as follows:

	1985	1986	1987
Numbers of persons extradited in respect of terrorist activity	0	0	0
Number of persons extradited in respect of non-terrorist activity	4	1	0

On 14 January 1988, the Irish Supreme Court ordered the extradition of Robert Peter Russell, who escaped from the Maze in 1983. He will be returned to Northern Ireland on completion of a three-year sentence imposed in the Republic.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he has taken, in conjunction with the security forces to draw up a list of persons believed to be living in Republic of Ireland, for which applications for extradition might be appropriate, what percentage of such persons are being sought by the Royal Ulster Constabulary for terrorist offences; and if the list has been extended as a result of changes in extradition law in the Irish Republic.

Mr. Stanley: As I said in my reply to the hon. Gentleman on 10 November at column 66 it is not the practice to give details of possible individual extradition cases. I can assure him, however, that the Royal Ulster Constabulary has always given consideration to possible extradition cases involving both terrorists and non-terrorist offences.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many applications for extradition of persons from the Irish Republic to Northern Ireland have been made since the recent changes in extradition law in the Irish Republic came into effect; and of these how many were for (a) terrorist offences and (b) non-terrorist offences.

Mr. Stanley [holding answer 26 January 1988]: The Extradition (ECST) Act 1987 came into force on 1 December and the Extradition (Amendment) Act 1987 came into force on 14 December. I understand that between 1 and 14 December there were three new applications for the extradition of persons from the Irish Republic to Northern Ireland. There have been no further new applications since 14 December.

Salmon and Grilse

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what numbers of salmon and grilse have been taken by (a) rod anglers, (b) draft nets, (c) drift nets in the Foyle System and other fixed engines in each of the last 20 years to the end of 1987.

Mr. Viggers: The information requested for the years 1985 and 1986 is shown below. Information for 1987 is not yet available. The information for previous years is given in the annual reports of the Foyle Fisheries Commission which are laid before Parliament.

	1985	1986
Reported rod catch	1,814	1,172
Draft nets	14,066	12,709
Drift nets	24,528	32,280
Fixed engines	1,927	1,365

Crime Statistics

Sir John Biggs-Davison: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland to what factors he attributes the fact published in the 1986 statistics that overall crime rates in Northern Ireland are consistently lower than in most other regions of the United Kingdom; how the Royal Ulster Constabulary's clear-up rate now compares with that of mainland forces; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley [holding answer 21 January 1988]: The reasons for the overall crime rate being lower in Northern Ireland than in England, Wales or Scotland must necessarily be somewhat speculative. Adherence to traditional values and the strength of the family unit in the Province may be contributory factors. The RUC's clear-up rate for all forms of crime in 1986 was 37 per cent. compared to 32 per cent. in England and Wales and 34 per cent. in Scotland in the same year. The RUC is to be congratulated on this performance, particularly as it is achieved amidst a terrorist campaign which makes conventional police work that much more difficult.

Royal Ulster Constabulary

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information he has as to the number of days off work sick reported for members of the Royal Ulster Constabulary for each of the last five years; and if he will express this as an average figure.

Mr. Stanley [holding answer 22 January 1988]: The following number of days were lost by members of the regular RUC as a result of sickness and injury on duty for each of the last five years:

	Days lost
1983	91,388
1984	110,048
1985	132,669
1986	148,307
1987	[1]

[1] Figures not yet available.

In 1986 these figures represented an average loss of 18·01 days per member.

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics

Miss Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Bristol, North-West (Mr. Stern) on 14 December 1987, Official Report, column 338, if he will list the area of buoyant labour demand where new claimants will be provided with information on available jobs.

Mr. Lee: This will be a matter for regional and local managers in the employment service to decide, based on the prevailing circumstances in their areas.

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment by how much unemployment has fallen in the northern region since July 1986.

Mr. Lee: On 10 December 1987, the number of unemployed claimants in the northern region, adjusted for seasonality and excluding school leavers, was 191,400, a fall of 34,500 since July 1986.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps his Department takes to help reduce the problem of seasonal unemployment.

Mr. Lee: Seasonal fluctuations in unemployment have always occurred here and in other countries, reflecting seasonal patterns of demand. They occur even when unemployment is very low. Those affected usually remain unemployed for only short periods.

In tourism, one of the industries particularly affected by seasonal unemployment, it is Government policy, and that of the national tourist boards, to encourage year-round tourism through marketing and investment in tourism facilities.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the latest unemployment figures for Cornwall.

Mr. Lee: On 10 December 1987 the number of unemployed claimants in the county of Cornwall was 23,972.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the present level of job vacancies in the Blackpool travel-to-work area.

Mr. Lee: On 4 December 1987 the number of unfilled vacancies at the jobcentres Blackpool central, Blackpool south, Thornton Clevelys, St. Annes, Kirkham and Fleetwood, which cover an area closely corresponding to the Blackpool travel-to-work area, was 864.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the percentage change in (a) employment levels and (b) unemployment levels of those aged under 25 years, 25 to 54 years, and 55 years and over (i) from mid-1979 to mid-1986 and (ii) from mid-1986.

Mr. Lee: The regularly published working population series does not separately identify those in employment by age. Also estimates by age from the monthly unemployment count for 1979 and 1986 are not comparable because of changes in coverage. The Labour force survey (LFS) provides information on a different basis.

LFS estimates of the percentage change in the number of persons in employment in Great Britain between spring 1979 and spring 1986, for the age groups requested, are as shown:

Age (Years)	Change per cent.
16-24	+2·7
25-54	+2·0
55 and over	−20·8

LFS estimates of the percentage change in the number of persons unemployed in Great Britain are not available for 1979 on a basis consistent with later years. The estimated percentage changes from spring 1981 to spring 1986 are as follows:

Age (years)	Change per cent.[1]
16-24	+2·9[2]
25-54	+29·0
55 and over	−12·3

[1] Estimated change in the number unemployed on the definition adopted in the Department of Employment's estimates of the Great Britain labour force.

[2] The 1981 LFS estimate for 16 to 24-years-olds is on a slightly different basis from later years and the estimated change since 1981 is therefore less reliable than for the older age groups.

Figures on this basis are not yet available for 1987. However, the percentage changes in claimant unemployed in Great Britain from July 1986 to October 1987, for the age groups requested, are as shown:

Age (years)	Change per cent.
16-24	−22·6
25-54	−14·1
55 and over	−9·8

These claimant unemployed figures are affected by seasonal influences.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been (a) the annual percentage change since 1979 in the total (i) employed and (ii) unemployed, and (b) the aggregate percentage change since 1979 to the latest available date in the total (i) employed and (ii) unemployed, in each of the categories of employment listed in tables 1·2 and 1·3 of the Employment Gazette.

Mr. Lee [holding answer 22 January 1988]: The available information is as follows:

As a result of the change to a claimant-based unemployment count, statistics of unemployment by industry have not been available since May 1982. Figures prior to 1982 are not available by the 1980 standard industrial classification (SIC) definitions as given in tables 1.2 and 1.3 of the Employment Gazette.

Professional and Executive Recruitment

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) how, for the purpose of its flotation, the valuation of Professional and Executive Recruitment will be taken, given the service/knowledge orientation of its work;

(2) what safeguards are proposed to ensure the autonomy of Professional and Executive Recruitment;

(3) what consultations have taken place with trades unions concerning the proposed privatisation of Professional and Executive Recruitment.

Mr. Cope: These issues do not yet arise. On 2 December my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced the appointment of Lloyds Merchant Bank Limited to advise early in the new year on the options for transferring Professional and Executive Recruitment out of the public sector. We are awaiting Lloyds' advice and recommendations before taking a decision.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the income to Professional and Executive Recruitment in each year since 1979 from (a) social welfare subvention and (b) the Manpower Services Commission.

Mr. Cope: The information requested is as follows:

	Social subvention[1]	Manpower Services Commission[2]	MSC/DE Grant[3]
1979-80	3,535,000	205,000	Nil
1980-81	4,914,000	131,000	Nil
1981-82	4,920,000	370,000	Nil
1982-83	4,591,000	618,000	Nil
1983-84	Nil	2,886,000	123,000
1984-85	Nil	2,179,000	170,000
1985-86	Nil	2,754,000	170,000
1986-87	Nil	3,514,000	271,000

[1] Until 31 March 1983, PER operated with the assistance of a subvention from public funds to cover the identifiable costs of PER's non-commercial activities. On 1 April 1983, this subvention was withdrawn. PER was given a new "break-even" objective requiring that operating costs are met in full from earned revenue.
[2] Net income from recruitment work for MSC programmes.
[3] Grant from MSC/Department of Employment for non-commercial work.

Tourism

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the latest figures he has on tourist-related employment in the county of Durham.

Mr. Lee: The latest data relate to September 1984 when there were an estimated 11,800 employees in employment in tourism-related industries in the county of Durham. This figure does not include self-employed persons for whom a comparable estimate is not available.

Flammable Gases and Liquids

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement, pursuant to his answer, Official Report, 15 December 1987, column 914, on the consideration by the Health and Safety Commission of the report by the Advisory Committee on Dangerous Substances on proposals for the future controls over flammable gases and liquids, including standards relating to the keeping and use of liquefied petroleum gas.

Mr. Nicholls: The Health and Safety Commission sought the advice of its Advisory Committee on Dangerous Substances on controls over flammable gases and liquids. The committee recommended a number of specific initiatives to improve controls and standards and to fill particular gaps. These initiatives include the development of up-to-date standards and guidance in close co-operation with industry, in such fields as piped gas transmission and distribution, the keeping and use of liquefied petroleum gas at residential premises, and the construction and operation of petrol filling stations. The commission has accepted the committee's advice and the Health and Safety Executive has embarked on discussions and consultations to carry the initiatives forward.

Mines and Quarries Act 1954

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many responses to "Restrictions in Employment of Young People" and the "Removal of Sex Discrimination in Legislation" are in favour of repealing section 93 of the Mines and Quarries Act 1954 which prohibits women and young people from lifting, carrying or moving a load so heavy as likely to cause injury at a mine.

Mr. Nicholls: No responses have been received to date concerning section 93 of the Mines and Quarries Act 1954. The closing date for comments on the consultative document is 29 February 1988.

Health and Safety

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has on the average fine for breaking the health and safety laws in 1985 and in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Nicholls: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher) on 1 December 1987 at column 504.

Manpower Services Commission Programmes

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will provide the number of projects, the amount of expenditure, the percentage of United Kingdom expenditure, and expenditure per head of regional population, in each United Kingdom standard region for the following Manpower Services Commission programmes (a) the business enterprise programme, (b) the private enterprise programme and (c) training grants to small employers.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 25 January 1988]: It is not possible to provide the information in the precise form requested. The available information is shown in the tables.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Dollar-denominated Bonds

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the extent of the United Kingdom's present commitments in the form of dollar-denominated bonds, broken down between the public and private sector; and what is his estimate of the losses incurred on these bonds (a) since their original purchase, (b) over the last 12 months and (c) since 19 October 1987.

Mr. Lilley: It is not the practice to publish a currency breakdown of United Kingdom's official reserves, including any overseas bond holdings. Comprehensive recent information on United Kingdom residents' holdings of dollar-denominated bonds is not available.

Trading Fund Status

Mr. Lord: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if, in the light of the establishment of the Atomic Energy Authority as a trading fund, any other authorities or Government organisations will be brought into the category of a trading fund.

Mr. Major: Trading fund status is an option for organisations whose operations make it a suitable method of financing. There are no firm proposals to establish additional trading funds at present, but cases will continue to be considered on their merits.

Business Expansion Scheme

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many taxpayers invested in the business expansion scheme in 1984-85, by the marginal rate of tax and the amount of business expansion scheme investment, as set out in table 5.7 of "Inland Revenue Statistics 1987."

Mr. Norman Lamont: The information is as follows:

Investors by marginal rate of tax and amount of BES investment for 1984-85

Percentages

Marginal rate of tax per cent.	Amount of BES investment (£'000)
	0-5	5-10	10-20	20-30	30+	Total
30	12	6	1	—	1	20
40-55	35	9	3	2	1	51
60	11	7	7	2	4	30
Total	58	22	11	4	6	100

Note:

This table includes later information not available when "Inland Revenue Statistics 1987" was compiled; hence the final column does not correspond exactly with that in table 5.6.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Michael Shersby: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether (a) a jaffa cake, (b) a chocolate chip cookie, (c) a cereal bar, (d) a chocolate bar and (e) a chocolate-coated biscuit are subject to value added tax.

Mr. Lilley: The liability to value added tax of confectionery is governed by excepted item No. 2 of group 1 of schedule 5 to the VAT Act 1983. Under this provision chocolate bars and chocolate coated biscuits are liable to VAT at the standard rate. Jaffa cakes and chocolate chip cookies are regarded as zero-rated. The liability of cereal bars, of which there are a wide variety, falls to be determined in individual cases.

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when Her Majesty's Customs and Excise intend to make available the value added tax annual accounting scheme under section 11(1) of the Finance Act 1987.

Mr. Lilley: The scheme will be available from 1 July 1988 and a copy of the proposed draft Value Added Tax (Annual Accounting) Regulations 1988 has been placed in the Library today.

Nuclear Establishments (Payments)

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the formula employed by the Crown Estate Commissioners to calculate the payments due to them in respect of pipelines and associated works on the seabed at Dounreay, Sellafield and Hunterston nuclear establishments.

Mr. Lawson: The Crown Estate Commissioners use the district valuer to assess the value of their foreshore and seabed dealings. In assessing these values the district valuer acts on the basis of instructions from the valuation office to the effect that the price or rent should be the best which is obtainable in the open market and estimates should therefore be capable of justification on normal considerations of supply and demand, including the demand of the particular purchaser or lessee. The objective is to get the best price or rent obtainable having regard to all the circumstances of the case. In the case of the disposal of rights or interests in the foreshore or seabed, the commissioners often hold the monopoly. They do not, however, wish any element of monopoly value to be included. In such cases, therefore, the district valuer assumes, for the purpose of making his valuation, that there is a measure of competition and that, if the negotiations with the commissioners break down, equally suitable facilities could be obtained from other landowners on payment of a consideration which is reasonable in the circumstances of the case.

Written Answers to Questions

Thursday 28 January 1988

HOME DEPARTMENT

Heathrow Airport (Policing)

Sir Peter Hordern: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what arrangements have been made to meet the cost of policing Heathrow airport; and whether such police count towards the strength of the Metropolitan police.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The provisions of the Aviation Security Act 1982 require Heathrow Airport Limited to pay the Metropolitan police for policing Heathrow airport and to provide accommodation and facilities for this purpose. Metropolitan police officers stationed at Heathrow airport count towards the strength of the force.

Michael Ryan

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what date the late Michael Ryan made an application for a firearms certificate, or a variation of a firearms certificate; and what was the nature of that application.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to a Question from the hon. Member for Caerphilly (Mr. Davies) on 22 January at columns 869-70.

Prison Libraries

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to increase the special prison library grant.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Each year, a payment is made to public library authorities for the provision of library services in prison establishments. The payment is based on a formula agreed with the local authority asssociations and takes account each year of current costs in the public library service. There are no plans to change the basis on which these payments are made.

Abortion Lobby (Policing Costs)

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to how many policemen were involved in policing the demonstration and abortion lobby on 21 January; what was the cost; and what was the police estimate for the number of demonstrators.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that 531 officers were rostered to police demonstrations and lobbies on 21 January at an additional cost (mainly overtime and catering) of £21,580. A further 248 officers were drafted in from other duties on the day. About 9,000 demonstrators are estimated to have been in attendance.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to prohibit all sight deprivation experiments on animals under the terms of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No.

Royal United Services Institute (Publications)

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will list those publications by the Royal United Services Institute which he has approved for publication since 1979.

Mr. Hurd: I have authorised no such publications as far as I am aware. A comprehensive check of records since 1979 would involve disproportionate cost.

Parole

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what percentage of prisoners in England and Wales who were eligible for parole were subsequently granted parole, under section 33 of the Criminal Justice Act 1982, in 1987;

(2) how many prisoners in England and Wales were eligible for parole, under section 33 of the Criminal Justice Act 1982, in 1987.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: This information is not yet available.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many prisoners in England and Wales in 1987, who were eligible for parole under section 33 of the Criminal Justice Act 1982, had not been notified of their release date by the time of their parole eligibility date during 1987;

(2) how many parole applications, under section 33 of the Criminal Justice Act 1982, have passed their parole eligibility date and are currently outstanding.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The parole eligibility date is the date before which an inmate cannot be released on licence but must have his case for parole reviewed at the prison. The review arrangements are designed to enable the inmate to be released on parole licence on the parole eligibility date if parole is granted. It is not always possible to meet that objective. Delays can occur for a number of reasons in individual cases. The increasing parole caseload has also led in recent months to a general increase in the number of cases in which prisoners are not informed of the decision in their case until after their parole eligibility date, but the cases which are most affected are those which have to be referred to the Parole Board. In the overwhelming majority of cases of prisoners' sentences of less than two years (known as section 33 cases) the prisoner is notified of the decision to grant parole sufficiently in advance of the parole eligibility date to make release on that date possible.

Radio

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which frequencies he has in mind to withdraw from the BBC to enable national commercial radio stations to broadcast.

Mr. Hurd: I have it in mind, after the enactment of the legislative proposals outlined in my reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Fylde (Mr. Jack) on 19 January at columns 647-649, to reassign the medium frequencies now used by BBC Radio 1 and Radio 3. A VHF network will also be available for use by a national commercial station.

London City Airport

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the cost of police services associated with the London City airport, and who pays.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 18 January 1988]: It is not possible to identify the total cost of police services which may be associated with the airport. Such costs are borne by the police.

DEFENCE

Computers

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the ICL series 39 computers used by his Department's auditors in connection with fraud cases with IDETOL software are capable of the fuzzy matching of data.

Mr. Sainsbury: ICL series 39 computers and INDEPOL software are not used by MOD auditors.

Building Projects

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give details of any building projects which are planned by his Department in Angus, Scotland.

Mr. Freeman: The only building projects planned by my Department in Angus, Scotland are:

1. A small new build of single living accommodation at Barry Buddon Training Camp.
2. Some married quarters improvements and Stage 4 of a project to build single living accommodation and dining facilities at RM Condor, Arbroath.

HMS Dreadnought

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on plans for the disposal of HMS Dreadnought, now sited at Rosyth.

Mr. Sainsbury: No decisions have yet taken on the preferred disposal route for reactors from decommissioned nuclear submarines.

Nuclear Waste (Rosyth and Fife)

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has had any discussions with Nirex over the disposal of nuclear waste in the Rosyth and Fife areas.

Mr. Sainsbury: No.

Polaris

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on his plans for the siting of the four Polaris submarines once they are decommissioned.

Mr. Sainsbury: No Polaris are planned to be decommissioned for several years. No decisions have been taken on how they should be dealt with when they do.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence where he plans to store the nuclear waste that will arise from the decommissioning of the four Polaris submarines.

Mr. Sainsbury: Decommissioning of the Polaris submarines will not begin until the first of the Trident submarines is ready to enter service in the mid-1990s. Nuclear waste disposal issues will only arise over the reactor compartment and associated components, and will therefore be identical to those raised by the decommissioning of nuclear attack submarines. The first of these HMS Dreadnought, has already been safely defuelled, de-equipped and laid up. Small items categorised as low-level or intermediate-level waste will be removed, suitably packaged and disposed of by routes currently under investigation by UK Nirex Ltd. The ultimate disposal of the reactor compartments themselves is still under study in my Department.

Channel Islands

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the estimated cost incurred in providing for the defence of the Channel Islands.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The cost of providing for the defence of the Channel Islands is not separately identifiable within the defence budget.

Falkland Islands

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all the costs to his Department of the recapture and occupation of the Falkland Islands for each year since 1982 inclusive.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Total defence expenditure, including campaign and garrison costs, relating to the Falkland Islands from 1 April 1982 to the end of the last financial year is as follows:

	£ million
1982-83	780
1983-84	637
1984-85	644
1985-86	572
1986-87	402

BATES Software

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what difficulties arose over the contract let to subcontractors by Marconi for BATES software prior to 1985.

Mr. Sainsbury: The management of sub-contractors is a commercial matter for the prime contractor and it would not be appropriate for MOD to comment.

RUSI (Publications)

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will list those publications by the Royal United Services Institute which he has approved for publication since 1979.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Books and articles written by service personnel or Ministry of Defence civil servants should be cleared through the appropriate Ministry of Defence channels before publication by the Royal United Services Institute. A list of books and articles approved for publication since 1979 could only be made available at disproportionate cost.

Nuclear Testing (Mortality and Cancer Incidence)

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he will respond to the report of the National Radiological Protection Board into mortality and cancer incidence among United Kingdom participants in United Kingdom atmospheric nuclear weapons tests and experimental programmes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: The report by the National Radiological Protection Board on mortality and cancer incidence in United Kingdom participants in the United Kingdom atmospheric nuclear weapon tests and experimental programmes is being published today. A copy has been placed in the Library. The report compares the health of the participants (over 80 per cent. of whom were included) with that of a similar number of matched controls to show whether their health has been affected. The roughly equal number of deaths in both groups (1,600) shows that participation has not had a detectable effect on their expectation of life. Indeed, both groups appear to be somewhat healthier than would be expected from the national rates of mortality, possibly due to the social class distribution and to their having been to some extent selected for overseas duties. The expected number of deaths according to national rates would be about 2,000.

Compared with the control group, more participants were found to have died from leukaemia and multiple myeloma. Although the excess was only marginally above national rates, because of the association of these diseases with exposure to ionising radiation, even a small increase merited detailed analysis. Investigation showed that it did not occur so strongly among those present at any nuclear detonation, nor among those known to have been exposed to measurable doses of radiation, nor among those for whom inhalation or ingestion of radioactive material was a remote possibility. Consequently, although no cause of the increased leukaemia was identified, this investigation as not proved that the cause was exposure to ionising radiation.

The Government welcome, and will co-operate with the NRPB in implementing, the recommendation to continue to observe the mortality and cancer incidence of the participants over a further period of 10 years, as a means of testing the three hypotheses which have been formulated. Meantime, however, they regard the results of this study to date as fully vindicating their view that the radiological protection measures adopted were effective and that the chance of anyone suffering harm to health as a consequence of participation is extremely small.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether the order under the Access to Personal Files Act currently under discussion will extend to universities, polytechnics and all schools.

Mrs. Rumbold: No. The draft regulations issued by my right hon. Friend for consultation in October 1987, which would be made under section 27 of the Education Act, 1980, would allow parents access to records of pupils in maintained schoolss and non-maintained special schools. Universities are outside their scope, as will be the polytechnics when the Education Reform Bill is enacted and the polytechnics cease to be local authority-maintained.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has met vice-principals of the universities to discuss the implications of their code of practice and the right of subject access under the Data Protection Act; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: There has been no such meeting. This is a matter for universities, within the law. I understand that the code of practice was finalised in consultation with the Data Protection Registrar's office.

City Technical College, Solihull

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proportion of applications to the city technical college in Solihull were on behalf of female students; what proportion of female students have been accepted; and what is the total number of applications and acceptances.

Mrs. Rumbold: Of the total 315 applications which were received for places at the Kingshurst city technology college, 43 per cent. were on behalf of female students. All but one of the places offered to students have been accepted and 47 per cent. have gone to female students.

Geological Surveying

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science on what date he received a copy of Sir Clifford Butler's report on geological surveying; when he received the comments of the Natural Environment Research Council and the British Geological Survey upon it; and if he will now announce his decision on the recommendation that the British Geological Survey should be separated from the Natural Environment Research Council.

Mr. Jackson: The report of the study group into geological surveying, chaired by Sir Clifford Butler, was addressed to the chairmen of the Advisory Board for the Research Councils and the Natural Environment Research Council, who submitted it to my right hon. Friend in June 1987 with a recommendation that it be published. The views of the BGS staff were sent to the chairmen of the ABRC and the NERC and copied to my Department on 10 August 1987.

The recommendations of the report that fall to be considered by Government are being discussed with the Departments concerned and with the NERC. A decision on the future status of the British Geological Survey will be reached in conjunction with decisions on other relevant recommendations in the report.

Nursery Education

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish in the Official Report a list of local education authorities in England which provide nursery education for children aged three to five years.

Mr. Dunn: In January 1987 the local education authorities in England that provided nursery education for children under five in either nursery schools or nursery classes in primary schools were as follows.

Medical Schools (Recruitment)

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list in the Official Report those medical schools which are currently recruiting approximately equal numbers of women and men students.

Mr. Jackson: In 1986-87 all medical schools in the United Kingdom, except for the medical schools at Cambridge, Manchester and Dundee universities and the London hospital medical school, recruited between 40 and 60 per cent. of women students. The average proportion of women entrants for all medical schools was 45 per cent. compared with 42 per cent. for all university entrants.

Advanced Supplementary Level Courses

Mr. Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many schools have mounted advanced supplementary level courses in the current year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: A survey carried out by my Department last autumn shows that 407 maintained and independent schools in England have mounted GCE advanced supplementary level courses this year. This represents nearly 15 per cent. of schools with A-level pupils.

These schools have mounted nearly 1,000 AS-level courses, most frequently in mathematics, computing, French and English. This accords closely with the priorities expressed by higher education.

In the schools offering AS-levels, 18 per cent. of the first year A-level pupils have also chosen at least one AS-level course. The five most popular subjects are those set out above, together with general studies. In total, over 6,000 pupils are on AS-level courses.

More than three times as many schools intend to offer AS level courses from September 1988. The survey indicates that 1,300 schools, which represents 50 per cent. of those offering A-levels, will also offer AS-level courses next year.

The full results of the survey will be published shortly.

PRIME MINISTER

Gwent

Q29. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister if she is planing to visit the county of Gwent in the near future.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

North Devon

Q116. Mr. Speller: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to visit north Devon.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Official Secrets

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what evidence she has as to the extent of public support for more stringent protection of official secrets.

The Prime Minister: As my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary has said, we shall be bringing forward proposals for the reform of section 2 of the Official Secrets Act 1911 which are effective, enforceable and reasonable. I believe we have general public support for that objective.

National Health Service

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister what are the terms of reference for Her Majesty's Government's consideration of the National Health Service; and when she expects to bring forward proposals for consultation.

The Prime Minister: The Government are undertaking an internal review of the National Health Service, with special emphasis on the hospital service. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services will consider carefully any submissions put to him. We shall be bringing forward proposals in due course.

Non-departmental Public Bodies

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Prime Minister whether the programme of reviews of non-departmental public bodies, which she announced on 19 November 1984, Official Report, column 57-58, has now been completed; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Yes. I have now received a report on the review programme from the Minister of State, Privy Council Office and the Paymaster General. By April 1987, reviews had been carried out in over 75 per cent. of executive non-departmental public bodies, 75 per cent. of advisory bodies and over 60 per cent. of tribunals. For the period under review, departments reported total savings from their funding of NDPBs of some £30 million and 1,830 staff, as a result of winding up some 150 bodies, rationalisation of others, financial management reviews and other initiatives. Further savings are planned of 290 posts leading in total to continuing savings of some £33 million per year. NDPBs also expect to achieve additional value-for-money improvements from better standards of financial management. In all, there were 524 fewer NDPBs on 1 April 1987 than in 1979.

For the future, I have accepted the recommendations in the report that the main responsibility for maintaining this progress should be placed on senior management in the NDPBs and their sponsoring Departments. In addition, all NDPBs will be subject to a comprehensive review at least every five years, which will consider the continued need for each NDPB, its objectives and its financial and other management systems.

For some particular tasks, non-departmental public bodies can be the most appropriate and cost-effective solution, but we shall continue to resist proposals for new bodies unless this can be clearly demonstrated, within a strict framework of financial and management controls. Legislation setting up new bodies should normally contain powers to permit winding up at a later date, if a fixed lifetime is not established at the outset.

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 28 January.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 28 January.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 28 January.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 28 January.

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 28 January.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 28 January.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 28 January.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 28 January.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Council

Sir John Biggs-Davison: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Council last met; and what is Her Majesty's Government's future policy and programme for that body.

Mrs. Chalker: The Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Council last met in November 1985. It continues to provide a framework for a wide variety of meetings between the two Governments, including those of the Intergovernmental Conference established by the Anglo-Irish Agreement of 1985. This was explicitly set up within the framework of the AIIC. There will continue to be regular meetings, including those of the AIIC co-ordinating committee and its cultural and educational working group.

Rare and Endangered Species

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will raise with the Chinese Foreign Minister when he meets him in the spring the need to prevent the trade in rare and endangered species of wildlife between the Dongmen market in Shenzhen and Hong Kong; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: We have already drawn to the attention of the Chinese authorities the concern which is widely felt in this country about this matter. I understand that the Chinese authorities entirely share this concern.

Kenya and Nigeria (Prime Minister's Visit)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give details of the extra costs incurred by the high commissions in Kenya and Nigeria due to the recent visits by the Prime Minister.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 15 January at column 416.

Royal United Services Institute (Publications)

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will list those publications by the Royal United Services Institute which he has approved for publication since 1979.

Mr. Eggar: The following articles and volume written by present and former officials, have been approved. They are listed by date of publication.

1981
Adrian Hill—Whither Pegasus

1983
Sir Antony Acland—The Relationship between Foreign and Defence Policy

1985
Sir Clive Rose—Campaigns against Western Defence

1987
Pauline Neville-Jones — Foreign Policy Objectives and the parameters of military power
Robert Cecil — The assessment and acceptance of intelligence: a case study.
John Bruce Lockhart—What is intelligence

Iran and Iraq (Arms Embargo)

Mr. Neil Hamilton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government will support proposals to the United Nations Security Council for an arms embargo jointly on Iran and Iraq.

Mr. Mellor: We remain committed to the twin-track approach agreed by the Foreign Ministers of the five permanent members of the Security Council on 25 September 1987. The Secretary-General has our full support as he continues his efforts to obtain compliance with Security Council resolution 598. In the meantime we have begun work with other members of the Security Council on the terms of an arms embargo. It is the responsibility of the Security Council as a whole to determine non-compliance.

Iran-Iraq War

Mr. Neil Hamilton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government will make it their policy to go further than the proposals in United Nations resolution 598 (1987), requesting the Secretary General to explore the possibility of appointing an impartial body to inquire into the responsibility for starting the Iran/Iraq war, and propose that such a body be now appointed.

Mr. Mellor: The establishment of an impartial body to investigate responsibility for the conflict is one of a number of elements of Security Council resolution 598 currently under discussion. We are anxious to see both parties comply with the resolution as a whole.

TRANSPORT

London Coach Terminal

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when and under whose auspices he expects the proposed public inquiry into the proposed relocation of the main London coach terminal at Paddington to take place; when and by what means he expects to publish the detailed plans; and what range of time scale he envisages for the relocation.

Mr. David Mitchell: The inquiry will be held only once a planning application for the proposed terminal is received. I understand that London Regional Transport intends to submit such an application later this year. The inspector would report to my right hon. Friends the Secretary of State for Transport and the Secretary of State for the Environment jointly. The plans for all applications made would be available for inspection at the inquiry and at the office of the local planning authority. Decisions on the time scale for any relocation would be made in the light of the outcome of the inquiry.

Search and Rescue

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many search-and-rescue incidents involving small boats and non-commercial small vessels have occurred in each of the past 10 years; and how many were concluded successfully.

Mr. David Mitchell: Search-and-rescue incidents involving small boats and non-commercial small vessels from 1982 to 1986 inclusive are summarised in the table. Information so far available on 1987 incidents is also included.

As the statistical records kept prior to 1982 were not specific with regard to vessel types, it is not possible to provide figures for the past ten years.

	1982	1983	1984	1985	1986	[1]1987
Number of incidents	1,488	1,873	1,662	2,108	1,992	1,680
Persons assisted	3,821	5,095	4,886	5,792	5,064	4,256
Lives lost	41	54	42	35	45	18

Tractor Units (Gross Weight)

Mr. Biffen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if, having regard to safety factors, he will authorise the raising of the 16 tonne gross weight of a two-axle tractor unit in line with the gross weight now allowed for two-axle trucks.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Two-axle tractor units with a minimum axle spacing of 2·7 m have since May 1983 been permitted a gross weight of 17 tonnes provided the vehicle has a total train weight of more than 32·52 tonnes. Statutory Instrument 1987 No. 676 removes that proviso and fixes the maximum gross weight of two-axle rigid lorries also at 17 tonnes. The SI comes into effect on 1 April 1988.

Traffic (Damage)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will provide details of recent assessments of the damage caused to the environment by the impact of various modes of transport, lorries, cars and other road users.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [pursuant to his reply, 19 January 1988, c. 702]: Information on some recently published reports on various effects of traffic on the environment is as follows. I have arranged for copies of those reports (shown with an asterisk) not already in the Library to be deposited there.

(1) Traffic-induced ground-borne vibrations in dwellings. TRRL Research Report 102, 1987.
*(2) The effects of a simulated traffic vibration on a dwelling house. TRRL Contractor Report 44, 1987.
(3) Public attitudes to drawbar goods vehicles. TRRL Research Report 108, 1987.
*(4) Pollution levels near a motorway in a cutting. TRRL Paper presented at the International Symposium on Environmental Meteorology in West Germany in 1987.
(5) Digest of environmental protection and water statistics. No. 9 1986, HMSO.
(6) The impact of the reduction in the lead content of petrol on airborne lead concentrations in the United Kingdom from January 1986. Warren Spring Laboratory Report No. LR 633 (AP)M, 1987.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Suspension (Pay forfeiture)

Mr. Dickens: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will further consider seeking to introduce a system whereby an hon. Member suspended from the service of the House should forfeit his salary for a period of up to three months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wakeham: This is ultimately a matter for the House to decide. I would, however, refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Northampton, North (Mr. Marlow) during the course of business questions on 14 January at column 460.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Food (Colouring Matter)

Dr. Twinn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to announce his response to the Food Advisory Committee final report on the Colouring Matter in Foods Regulations 1979.

Mr. Donald Thompson: We received a large number of detailed representations on the recommendations in the report, and these need to be carefully evaluated before I can come to any conclusion on the issues. We are dealing with the matter as quickly as possible and I shall make an announcement just as soon as we have reached decisions.

Common Agricultural Policy

Sir Michael Shaw: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress was made towards reforming the common agricultural policy at the meeting of Ministers in Brussels.

Mr. MacGregor: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer which I gave on 25 January, at columns 52-53, to my hon. Friend the Member for Wansdyke (Mr. Aspinwall).

Fishing Industry (Decommissioning Grants)

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether Falkis Ltd. has received decommissioning grants for either freezer or fishing vessels.

Mr. Donald Thompson: No decommissioning grants have been paid to Falkis Ltd.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether Berkeley Sound Shipping has received decommissioning grants for either freezer or fishing vessels.

Mr. Donald Thompson: No decommissioning grants have been paid to Berkeley Sound Shipping.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether Thomas Hamling Ltd. has received decommissioning grants for either freezer or fishing vessels.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Under the Fishing Vessels (Financial Assistance) Scheme 1983 grants have been paid in respect of four freezer trawlers which were decommissioned by Thomas Hamling Ltd. The details are as follows:

Vessel	Grant £
St. Jason	537,200
St. Jerome	515,280
St. Jasper	514,484
St. Benedict	581,504
	2,148,468

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on what date information relating to the awarding of decommissioning grants to Messrs. Putford Enterprise was provided to the National Audit Office by officials in his Department.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Information was available to the NAO on the awarding of decommissioning grants to Messrs. Putford Enterprises from the moment it commenced its examination in spring 1986.

Pesticides

Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action has been taken to ensure the safe use of pesticides on the farm.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Part III of the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985 gave wide powers which were implemented by the Control of Pesticides Regulations 1986 and its consents. When using pesticides operators have been obliged since 6 October 1986:

(a) to use only products which have been approved under the regulations;

(b) "to take all reasonable precautions to protect the health of human beings, creatures and plants, to safeguard the environment, and in particular to avoid the pollution of water"; (Consent No. 2, 2nd Condition).

(c) to ensure that they are competent for the duties they are to perform.

From 1 January 1988 they must observe certain conditions of use described on the pesticide label, including the target crop, maximum dose-rate and environmental and operator safeguards.

The consents have also introduced a number of additional conditions upon use with which aerial operators must comply.

To help farmers to fulfil these obligations we have:

(i) issued and amended a booklet which lists all pesticides which have approved status;

(ii) supplemented guidance booklets and leaflets with a first draft of a code of practice on agricultural and horticultural use; a revised text of which will be made available in the early spring;

(iii) established training standards with the agricultural training board and certification arrangements with the National Proficiency Tests Council;

(iv) arranged with the Civil Aviation Authority for the guidance booklet which it issues to aerial operators to contain details of the further rules now applicable to aerial operations.

In order to avoid farmers being inspected by different bodies for different safety legislation, an agency agreement has been entered into with the Health and Safety Executive, and Her Majesty's agricultural inspectors are authorised to enforce the Control of Pesticides Regulations 1986.

Intervention Stocks

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the amount of intervention stocks in the United Kingdom at present in the following commodities: butter, beef, SMP, wheat, barley and rye; and what the figures represent in terms of days' supply.

Mr. Donald Thompson: A note setting out the volume of United Kingdom intervention stocks of agricultural commodities, and the number of days' supply these stocks represent, is deposited in the Library of the House and updated monthly.

Pigmeat

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he intends to take to protect United Kingdom pigmeat producers from heavy losses due to the advantage to Dutch and Danish producers receiving monetary compensatory amounts for the export to the United Kingdom of bacon, fresh pork loins and middle bacon.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Improvements which we have secured in negotiations in the Community, together with the strengthening of sterling, have resulted in a fall of 16 points in our pigmeat MCAs over the past year. I shall continue to seek further improvements in the position at every opportunity. I must, however, stress that this is a highly controversial issue in the Community.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will strengthen the present arrangements for controlling pigmeat imports so as to assist in stopping the spread of classical swine fever.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Imports of pigmeat are already the subject of stringent veterinary conditions laid down by European Community directives. Following pressure from the Government, the rules on classical swine fever controls have been strengthened by a package of measures which had to be implemented by 1 January 1988.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any plans to introduce private storage aids to United Kingdom pigmeat producers.

Mr. Donald Thompson: This is to be discussed at the Pigmeat Management Committee in Brussels on Friday 29 January.

Intervention Grain Stocks

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will allow feed users to use intervention grain stocks at intervention prices.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Decisions on the sale of intervention grain stocks on to the domestic market are taken by the European Commission; in view of the current surplus of feed grain on the market both in the United Kingdom and in the rest of the Community sales from intervention for use as feed could not at present be justified.

Windscale Fire

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether his Department retains any unpublished files, information and reports in connection with the 1957 Windscale fire; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Various papers held in my Department have some connection with the 1957 Windscale fire; these have been or will be made available for public inspection in strict conformity with the Public Records Acts.

Surplus Food

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will take steps to alter the agricultural support mechanisms of the European Economic Community so as to facilitate the release of surplus food for use overseas.

Mr. MacGregor: The Community's existing commodity regulations contain appropriate provisions enabling food from intervention and from the market to be made available for export and for use as food aid.

ADAS (Charges)

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his policy towards the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service charging for advice and services following an emergency; and how this operated the severe storm in south-east England in October 1987.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 27 January 1968]: I am always prepared to look at the case for making appropriate information and advice available without charge following an emergency; but each incident must be considered on its own merits.

In the immediate aftermath of the October storm ADAS provided free general advice on such matters as emergency repairs, ways to preserve produce in cold stores and save damaged trees and glasshouse crops and the financial implications for growers. Advice notes covering the four main horticultural sectors were sent without charge to growers in the worst affected areas and growers in th south-east were also invited to "storm clinics" giving general advice on how to cope with the damage, including the financial implications. ADAS also provided some free help with particular livestock problems.

WALES

Investigating Accountants (Regional Aid)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, how many investigating accountants he has within his Department to evaluate applications for regional selective assistance; how many cases on average each of them has prepared for the Welsh Industrial Development Advisory Board to consider over the past two years; and how many cases each of them is on average expected to prepare over the next two years.

Mr. Peter Walker: There are currently four investigating accountants in my Department regularly engaged in evaluating applications for regional selective assistance. On average, each investigating accountant has prepared 47 cases over the last two years for consideration by the Welsh Industrial Development Advisory Board. The number of cases that each will prepare in the future will depend on the volume of RSA applications received, the amount of the grant sought and the complexity of the cases, and I am unable to give a precise estimate. I am expecting an increase in demand for RSA and will keep the requirements for accountancy staff under review.

Regional Development Grant

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his most up-to-date estimate of the expenditure on regional development grants in Wales in the next financial years, if there were no changes in the regional aid scheme to industry.

Mr. Peter Walker: The 1988 public expenditure White Paper contained planned provision of £63·5 million (net of EC receipts) for regional development grants in Wales in 1988-89. Equivalent provision in the 1987 public expenditure White Paper was £26·7 million. The increase in provision results from a combination of several factors, including the need to provide resources for those RDG applicants who meet the deadline of 31 March 1988 and are thus subject to the transitional arrangements provided for the ending of the scheme. I am not able to make any precise estimate of the cost of such transitional arrangements at this stage.

Industrial Assistance

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many cases of industrial assistance the Welsh Industrial Development Advisory Board has been considering each month on average in each of the past three years; and how many cases he expects it to be considering on average in each of the next three years.

Mr. Peter Walker: In the past three years, the Welsh Industrial Development Advisory Board has considered the following number of cases on average per month:

	Cases
1985	8
1986	6
1987	7

The number of cases to be considered by the board in future years will depend on the volume of regional selective assistance applications which will be received and the value of assistance sought. I am expecting the demand for RSA to increase in future years. I am unable at this stage to make a precise assessment of the effect of this on the caseload of the board but I am confident of the board's ability to cope with what I hope will be a substantial increase in applications.

Regional Aid

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his most up-to-date estimate of the increase in corporation tax receipts arising from the switch away from tax-free regional development grants to taxable selective assistance.

Mr. Peter Walker: The tax position of regional selective assistance applicants is likely to vary widely depending on the circumstances of each company. It is not possible therefore to make any reliable estimate of the tax receipts which may arise from present or potential applicants for regional selective assistance.

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will estimate the amount of regional selective assistance to be paid out in Wales for each year from 1988-89 to 1990-91.

Mr. Peter Walker: The 1988 public expenditure White Paper contained planned provision for regional selective assistance in Wales of £45·9 million, £52 million and £61·2 million respectively in the three years 1988-89 to 1990-91. The increase in provision between the years reflects additional demand for RSA, which I envisage as a result of the ending of the regional development grant scheme. There will be a further substantial contribution to regional assistance in Wales as a result of the substantial increase in the expenditure of the Welsh Development Agency and the new investment, innovation and business development grants scheme.

National Museum of Wales

Sir Raymond Gower: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if the consultants appointed to carry out a financial management and policy review of the national museum of Wales have now submitted their report; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: I am publishing today the report prepared by P-E Inbucon. Copies have been placed in the Library of the House and the executive summary is being made available to the press. It is a major document. The role, organisation and management of the museum have been critically examined. The Report identifies deficiencies and contains detailed and positive proposals for improvements which will have far-reaching implications for the future management of the national museum of Wales and for its relationship with the Welsh Office. I have had a preliminary discussion with the president of the museum and have asked for a considered response from the museum by 4 March 1988. This is a wide-ranging and penetrating analysis and the consultants' individual recommendations will need careful and thorough consideration. I intend to ensure that the recommendations are treated with urgency and determination. A major task confronts the museum and the Welsh Office. The museum will need additional administrative support and that will be provided. The museum has an important place in the life of the Principality and a major contribution to make to the culture and heritage of Wales and it is important that it should fulfil its role effectively and efficiently. I intend to see that it is able to do so.

Circulars

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report a list of all circulars issued by his Department in 1985, 1986 and 1987, together with the corresponding numbers of those circulars.

Mr. Peter Walker: I will write to the hon. Gentleman shortly and will place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

Nursery Education

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report a list of local education authorities in England which provide nursery education for children aged three to five years.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Nursery education is provided in each of the Welsh authorities. Seventy per cent. of the total three and four-year-old population in Wales was receiving nursery education last year.

Radiation

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he expects that the bequerel counts in sheep in the Llyn Vyrnwy and Ysbyty Ifan areas will fall below (a) 1000bq. and (b) 600bq. within the next 30 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: Monitoring of sheep from the north Wales restricted areas during 1987 indicated that some 86 per cent. already had readings below 1,000 bq/kg which is the action level the Government have adopted. Research work is under way on the recycling of caesium from peat soils into different types of pasture and this should enable an estimate to be made of how long restrictions on the movement and slaughter of sheep will be necessary. It does not follow that because the half life of caesium 137 is 30 years, restrictions will be necessary for anything like that long.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the latest available figures for the number of patients waiting for hospital admission for (a) more than one month for urgent treatment and (b) more than one year for non-urgent treatment.

Mr. Grist: At 31 March 1987, 2,639 patients on waiting lists had waited more than one month for urgent hospital treatment; and 9,139 had waited more than a year for non-urgent treatment.

Education Reform

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how the eradication of surplus school places will be affected by the parental choice provision of the Education Reform Bill, based on 1979 school rolls.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The continuing need for local education authorities to remove surplus school places is not affected by the provisions in the Education Reform Bill on admission to county and voluntary schools, which aim to give additional scope for parental choice.

SCOTLAND

Rating Reform

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will publish in the Official Report the recent letter from the Data Protection Registrar concerning the community charge, together with his response; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: I have today placed in the Library copies of the registrar's letter of 17 November 1987 and my response of 18 January 1988.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will list those organisations which will not be allowed to obtain copies of the community charge register; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: Under section 20(2)(b) and (c) of the Abolition of Domestic Rates Etc. (Scotland) Act 1987, access to the full community charges register is restricted to local authorities for the purpose of determining levying and collecting the community charges, and to assessors and electoral registration officers.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) whether the community charge officer will be able to access sources of information other than those data held by a local authority; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether the community charge officer will have access to non-clinical records held by health authorities when compiling the register; and if he will make a statement;

(3) whether Scottish community charge officers will be able to use the data collected during the next census; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: Under section 17(2) and (3) of the Abolition of Domestic Rates Etc. (Scotland) Act 1987, community charges registration officers will have access, for the purpose of discharging their functions, to information held by the assessor or registration officer for their area and, on request, to information held by local authorities or housing bodies in their area, or other registration officers. The Act gives registration officers no other general right of access to information.

Under section 17(5) of the Act, registration officers are able to require responsible persons to give them information in respect of premises in their area. In certain circumstances, local authorities and health boards may be responsible persons for this purpose. The information which may be requested is limited to that prescribed for the purposes of section 17(5). Otherwise, registration officers will have no access to information held by health boards. Under no circumstances will they have access to census information.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what advice he will be giving to prisoners just before their release as to their responsibility to pay the community charge from their first day of freedom; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what advice he will be giving to homeless persons which describes their responsibility to pay the community charge; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend has launched a public information campaign to help ensure that all future community charge payers are aware of their obligations under the new system.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he intends to introduce regulations obliging the community charge officer to seek the consent of individuals as to whether they want their name and address on the community charge register to be sold; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: I refer to the answer I gave on 3 November 1987 at columns 550-551. My right hon. and learned Friend is still considering whether any amendment to section 20(4) of the Abolition of Domestic Rates Etc (Scotland) Act 1987 is required to provide for any restriction on the parts of the public register which may be made available for sale.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what precautions he is taking to ensure that addresses of members of the armed forces, security services or other public figures who may be at risk do not appear on the community charge register; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend is considering this matter.

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has given any instructions or advice to the Scottish new town development corporations on the implementation of the poll tax; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 26 January 1988]: My officials have had discussions in the last few months with representatives from Scottish new towns about the implementation of the community charge and in addition the new towns have received copies of the consultation drafts of regulations which have been issued. The role which new towns, as housing bodies, may play in implementing the community charge will depend on the nature of any agency agreement reached by them with the levying authority, the regional council.

Mearnskirk Hospital (Staff Houses)

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he now expects the sale of staff houses at Mearnskirk hospital to sitting tenants to be completed.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I expect the Greater Glasgow health board to be in a position to make formal offers to the tenants concerned within a month, following the meeting of the board's property and land sub-committee on 27 January. The conveyancing procedures are normally completed within three months of offers being accepted.

Housing

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of housing projects which are planned to take place in Angus, Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Angus district council's latest housing plan, published in January 1986, sets out its general strategy for housing provision in its area. it is, however, for the council to deploy resources available for capital expenditure according to the priorities it determines on a year-to-year basis, and details of council projects programmed are not held centrally.

The Scottish Special Housing Association will shortly be starting work on 35 special needs houses in Arbroath. The Housing Corporation in Scotland has approved housing association projects of various kinds in the district. These projects, which are at different stages of development, will provide 300 units.

No detailed information is available centrally on proposed private sector housing projects.

Forestry

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of new forestry projects which are planned to take place in the current year in Angus, Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: On the basis of schemes approved to date, it is expected that between 700 and 800 hectares of new planting will take place in Angus in 1988 under the Forestry Commission's grant schemes. Some 60 hectares of new planting will be carried out by the Commission.

Births

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what is the average cost to the local health authority of each baby born; and what are the highest and current costs of delivery for each health board;

(2) what is the average cost to health boards of delivering babies born at home.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I regret that the information requested is not held centrally.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proportion of babies are born in units handling more than 1,500 deliveries a year.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The proportion of babies born in units handling more than 1,500 deliveries a year is 79 per cent.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proportion of babies in each local health authority area are born in maternity units which handle under 200 deliveries a year.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The proportion of babies born in units handling fewer than 200 deliveries a year is 4·3 per cent.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proportion of babies in each health authority are born at home.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is as follows:

Dinoseb

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will consult the National Farmers Union and local industries in the Angus area, regarding the consequences of his decision to ban the use of Dinoseb.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: We have been in regular contact with the National Farmers Union of Scotland over the last 18 months on the use of Dinoseb. These contacts will continue as necessary. It is not possible at this stage to make any assessment of the likely consequences on local industries of the decision to ban the use of Dinoseb.

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what research is being conducted in (a) alternatives to the Glencova variety of raspberry and (b) a replacement for Dinoseb; and if he will produce extra funds for such research.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Two new raspberry varieties bred with Government support at the Scottish Crop Research Institute are already available to growers. Both show considerable promise as replacements for Glen Clova. Work also funded by Government has been ongoing for some time to find alternative means of controlling cane vigour in Glen Clova. There are no signs of any early breakthrough and the grant-aided work is continuing.

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimates he has of the economic and employment effects on the raspberry and associated industries of his decision to prohibit the use of Dinoseb.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: It is not possible to estimate with any degree of accuracy the extent of the losses that will be caused by raspberry producers and associated industries as a result of the ban on the use of Dinoseb. Much will depend on how farmers and others react to the new situation.

While we appreciate that the decision to ban the use of Dinoseb will have serious consequences for raspberry producers and associated industries, we had no option but to take this decision in the light of the conclusion by the Advisory Committee on Pesticides that Dinoseb and its related products could pose a health risk to people using them.

Operations

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the arrangements he proposes with private sector hospitals to carry out National Health Service operations; and what money he has set aside in this and the next financial year.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I am encouraging health boards in Scotland to consider the extent to which Scotland's private health sector could help them to improve their services for National Health Service patients. I have not set aside money for this purpose in this or the next financial year, but as part of our initiative on waiting lists £300,000 of the additional resources for the current financial year announced by my right hon. and learned Friend on 16 December has been allocated to meet bids from boards to use private sector hospitals to carry out National Health Service operations.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the latest estimate available to him of the cost of the following operations in (a) National Health Service hospitals and (b) private hospitals in Scotland for (i) hysterectomy, (ii) tonsillectomy, (iii) hernia, (iv) hip replacement, (v) heart by-pass and (vi) varicose veins.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Comparative information on this basis is not available. Information on health service costs is not generally held in a form which permits total costs of individual procedures to be identified; progress is, however, being made in improving cost information for resource management.

Salmon

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the number of prosecutions which have occured in each of the past five years as a result of salmon proprietors (a) failing to provide his Department with statistical returns or (b) being found to have made fraudulent returns.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 14 January 1988]: There have been no such prosecutions.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give, by district salmon board area, how many riparian proprietors, upper and lower, were required to complete returns for the compilation of Scottish salmon and sea trout statistics in each of the past five years; and how many have complied.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 14 January]: Information related to salmon catch statistics is published by region and statistical district. The number of proprietors and occupiers of salmon fisheries, upper and lower together, who were sent statistical forms and made returns for 1984, 1985 and 1986 are given by statistical district in the following table. Accurate information for earlier years is not available.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will take steps to ensure that future statistical bulletins on Scottish salmon and sea trout catches published by the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland, contains full information about the levels of non-reporting, and the identity of those responsible for it.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 14 January 1988]: Consideration is already being given to including some indication about levels of reporting in future statistical bulletins. It is not intended that the identity of those who have not made returns will be published.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the procedures used by the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland to check the accuracy of catch returns provided by Scottish salmon proprietors, prior to the publication of total reported figures.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 14 January 1988]: The forms are checked to ensure that relevant parts have been completed and that there are no inconsistencies in the entries for example between numbers and weights of fish reported as caught. Any omissions or inconsistencies would be pursued with the proprietor or occupier of the fishery as would any large discrepancy noted between a return and returns for earlier years.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the salmon proprietors, upper and lower, who have failed to make returns of the numbers and weight of fish caught in each of the past five years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 14 January 1988]: No.

Salmon (Illegal Netting)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many incidents of illegal netting for salmon in Scottish waters by fishermen from the Irish Republic were detected in each of the last five years to the end of 1987.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 27 January 1988]: There have been no such incidents reported by enforcement officers of the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland in the five years to the end of 1987.

Laughing Goose

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make it his policy to withhold grants for agricultural developments which might endanger the habit of the laughing goose; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 27 January 1988]: Section 17 of the Agriculture Act, 1986 imposes on Ministers charged with agricultural responsibilities, an obligation to have regard to the endeavour to achieve a reasonable balance between the interests of agriculture and a number of other considerations including flora and fauna. A blanket prohibition on grants as suggested would be at variance with that obligation: individual cases will be considered on their merits.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Barristers' Clerks

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Attorney-General what consideration has been given to recommendation 34.1 of the 1979 Royal Commission on legal services that barristers should not be required to have a clerk; what representations have been received on the matter; and what proposals he has for implementing the recommendation.

The Attorney-General: In its response to the Royal Commission on legal services in a White Paper published in November 1983, Cmnd. 9077, the Government indicated that this recommendation among others was for consideration by the profession. The Government have received no representations on the matter and have no plans to implement the recommendation.

Family Courts

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Attorney-General what further representations he has received on the time that has elapsed since proposals for a family court were first considered by the Lord Chancellor's Department; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: There is no record of further representations having been received, on the time that has elapsed since proposals for a family court were first considered by the Lord Chancellor's Department, since the hon. Member's question on 11 January 1988, at column 7. I have nothing to add to my answer on that date.

Kent Police

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Attorney-General whether he will take legal proceedings against Kent county constabulary requiring it to fulfil its statutory responsibility under section 228 of the Local Government Act 1972 and provide information on the precise nature of items purchased from Q.E.D., Parker Hale Ltd., Hull Cartridge Co. Ltd., royal small arms factory, royal ordnance factory and Longstaff (Rec) Ltd.

The Attorney-General: If the hon. Gentleman would care to furnish me with particulars of any case he has in mind, I shall consider the matter.

Prosecutions

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Attorney-General how many decisions have been taken in each year since 1985 not to prosecute people against whom there was otherwise sufficient evidence to justify prosecution, on the grounds of public interest or the interests of national security.

The Attorney-General: In every case where the evidence is in law sufficient for criminal proceedings it is necessary to consider whether the public interest requires a prosecution. There are no records of how many decisions not to prosecute have been taken on the ground that the public interest did not require a prosecution.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Attorney-General in how many instances court proceedings have been instituted in each year since 1985, despite the evidence being otherwise regarded as insufficient to justify a prosecution, on the grounds of public interest or to protect national security.

The Attorney-General: No prosecution should in any circumstances be instituted if the evidence is regarded as insufficient to justify a prosecution, and none has been so instituted within my knowledge by any prosecuting authority.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Attorney-General on how many occasions in each year since 1985 (a) the Director of Public Prosecutions or (b) the Director of Public Prosecutions (NI) has concluded that, despite advice from the law officers that a prosecution would not be in the public interest, such a prosecution should be instituted.

The Attorney-General: None.

EMPLOYMENT

Employment Service

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a further statement on the progress of the new employment service.

Mr. Lee: The employment service now provides under a single management the full range of services formerly provided by the separate unemployment benefit and jobcentre services.

We are developing new approaches to helping unemployed people, and particularly long-term unemployed people, which take advantage of this single management. We are introducing a number of changes to ensure both that benefit claimants can be offered the most appropriate help available and to enable us to check more systematically that people claiming benefits continue to be available for work.

We are looking at ways of helping with job-finding and making benefit payments simpler, more accessible and more effective. A current management priority is to test a range of models which will bring together services currently delivered from separate premises.

Small Firms

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what guidance is given to small firms on the opportunities to do business with the Government; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: This Department has made considerable efforts to open up Government contracts to small firms. We publish a summary booklet, "Tendering for Government Contracts", which gives broad guidance on what the various Government Departments seek to buy and the names and addresses of the relevant contacts. This information is also on Prestel. Departments, including the Ministry of Defence and our Department, also publish booklets providing more specific information on the purchasing opportunities within their Departments. Fuller information can be obtained through the small firms service by telephoning Freefone Enterprise.

"Building Businesses . . . Not Barriers"

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to implement the proposals in the White Paper, "Building Businesses . . . Not Barriers"; if he will estimate the numbers of part-time workers who currently qualify for employment rights but who would be excluded if those proposals were implemented; and what proportion of those excluded would be women.

Mr. Nicholls: The proposals and their implementation are still under consideration. As to the effect of the proposals on part-time workers I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Barnsley, West and Penistone (Mr. McKay) on Monday 7 December 1987 at column 31.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the percentage of the population nationally and in the Rotherham-Mexborough travel-to-work area which is in full-time employment.

Mr. Lee: The latest available local area information on persons in full-time employment comes from the 1981 census of population, which found that 43·5 per cent. of all persons aged 16 and over resident in the Rotherham and Mexborough travel-to-work area were in full-time employment. The comparable figure for Great Britain was 45·6 per cent. Later information for Great Britain is available from the labour force survey, which estimated that in spring 1986 43·2 per cent. of all persons aged 16 and over in Great Britain were in full-time employment.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the percentage change in (i) employment and (ii) unemployment in each of the regions (a) from mid-1979 to mid-1986 and (b) since mid-1986.

Mr. Lee [holding answer 25 January 1988]: The figures are give in the following tables.

Table 1 gives in percentage terms the net changes in the size of the civilian employed labour force (the sum of employees in employment and the self employed) in each region between June 1979 and June 1986 and between June 1986 and June 1987. The figures are not adjusted for the effects of seasonal variation.

Table 2 gives in percentage terms the changes in the numbers of unemployed claimants in each region between June 1979 and June 1986 and between December 1987. The figures are adjusted for discontinuity and for the effects of seasonal variation.

Social Fund

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment ,pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Lewisham, Deptford, (Ms. Ruddock) Official Report, 21 January, column 807, if he will give similar information on European social fund allocations to Merseyside in the current year.

Mr. Cope: The European Commission is not expected to announce its decision on the allocation of 1988 European social fund grants until April 1988 at the earliest. My Department will not be able to inform organisations of the result of their applications until then. The following list details social fund applications and aid applied for which have been submitted to the European Commission for schemes to operate in Merseyside during the calendar year 1988. The list does not, however, include national schemes run, for example, by the Manpower Services Commission, and industrial training boards from which those living in Merseyside will benefit. Separate figures for Merseyside for these national schemes are not readily available.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Lewisham, Deptford (Ms. Ruddock), Official Report, 21 January, column 804, if he will give similar information on European social fund allocations to Merseyside in 1987.

Mr. Cope: The European Commission allocated the following amounts from the European social fund to projects based in Merseyside for the calendar year 1987. The list does not, however, include national schemes run, for example, by the Manpower Services Commission, and industrial training boards from which those living in Merseyside will have benefited. Separate figures for Merseyside for these national schemes are not readily available.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the absolute total of, and the percentage change in the number of, persons unemployed (a) less than three months, (b) three to six months, (c) six months to 12 months, (d) one to two years, (e) two to three years, (f) three to five years, and (g) over five years during the periods (i) each year since 1979,(ii) over the period since 1979 as a whole, (iii) from mid-1979 to mid-1986 and (iv) since mid-1986.

Mr. Lee [holding answer 26 January 1988]: Direct comparison of unemployment by duration since 1979 are not possible because of the change to the method of compilation. The following is the available information, which is also in the library.

Table A shows the average number of unemployed registrants in the United Kingdom for each year from 1979 to 1982, who had been unemployed for the durations requested, except of for those unemployed for three to five years and over five years, for which figures were not separately identified together with the percentage change over the previous year. It is not possible to give this change for 1979, as unemployment figures for Northern Ireland are not available by duration for 1987.

Table B shows the average number of claimants who had been unemployed for each duration requested for each year from 1983 to 1987, together with the percentage change over the previous year. Comparisons are affected by changes in the method of compilation.

Table C shows the numbers at 8 October 1987, the latest date for which figures are available, together with the percentage change since 10 July 1986. The change over this period is affected by seasonal factors.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has anything to add to his reply of 18 January, Official Report, column 506, relating to overseas visits by Ministers in his Department.

Mr. Fowler: I regret that there was an omission in my earlier reply. The full test should read as follows:

A total of 25 official overseas visits were made by Ministers in my Department during the period January 1983 to December 1987, excluding short-term visits made specifically to attend conferences held by international bodies, for example, EC, OECD, ILO.

Details are as follows:

Industrial Skills

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is at present the average cost of training people in industrial skills.

Mr. John Cope (holding answer 26 January 1988]: The most recent estimate of employer spending on training comes from a survey conducted on behalf of the Manpower Services Commission by IFF research in 1984. It estimated employers invest on average £200 per employee per head on all types of training. More up to date and more detailed information is expected to become available later this year as part of a study of funding of vocational education and training being carried out by the MSC.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the total public investment in industrial skills, for each year since 1974, in 1986 values.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 26 January 1988]: The information is not available in the form requested. However expenditure (at 1986 prices) by the Manpower Services Commission on vocational education and training each year since 1974 has been as follows:

	£ million
1974-75	262
1975-76	482
1976-77	635
1977-78	635
1978-79	738
1979-80	763
1980-81	798
1981-82	971
1982-83	1,070
1983-84	1,211
1984-85	1,263
1985-86	1,295
1986-87	1,447

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are, for each year since 1974, the figures for people trained for industrial jobs.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 26 January 1988]: The information is not available in the form requested. Estimates are available from the labour force survey for the number of economically active people of working age receiving any job-related training during a four week reference period in the Spring of each year. Those estimates are as follows:

	million
1984	2·1
1985	2·5
1986	2·6

Estimates are not available prior to 1984.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

COCOM

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster by what percentage he intends to cut the COCOM international lists; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: The aim of the Department is to achieve maximum reduction of COCOM's international lists consistent with our national security interests. It is not practicable to express our objectives in percentage terms.

Insider Dealing

Mr. Battle: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when the investigation appointed on 18 December 1986 to look into the possibility of insider dealing by employees of his Department, the Office of Fair Trading and the Monopolies and Mergers Commission is due to report; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: The inspectors recently submitted an interim report to the Secretary of State. This has been passed to the Director of Public Prosecutions for his consideration.

Imports-Exports

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will give imports as a percentage of domestic sales of motor cars and exports as a percentage of domestic production for (i) United Kingdom, (ii) France, (iii) West Germany, (iv) Italy and (v) Japan for 1975 and each year from 1979 to 1987.

Mr. Butcher: So far as the United Kingdom, France and West Germany are concerned, I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave him on 26 January 1988, Official Report, columns 143-144.

Information on Italy and Japan is shown in the tables.

Business Consultancy Initiative

Mr. Blair: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will estimate, in respect of each region separately, for the years 1988-89 to 1990-91, the amount of money to be spent on the Government's business consultancy initiative announced in the recent White Paper on the future of his Department.

Mr. Butcher: The Government expenditure plans 1988-89 to 1990-91, published earlier this month, set out planned DTI expenditure on support for consultancy services under the business development initiative as follows:

	Plans £ million
1988-89	74
1989-90	91
1990-91	109

No regional breakdown is available. Consultancy support under the enterprise initiative is available to qualifying companies on a first come, first served basis.

New Enterprise Initiative (Blackpool)

Mr. Jack: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list in the Official Report the forms of help to all types of industry and commerce within the Blackpool travel-to-work area that will be available when his Department's new enterprise initiative is fully implemented.

Mr. Butcher: Under the Department's new enterprise initiative, which brings together both new and existing measures of support, industry and commerce within the Blackpool travel-to-work area may currently benefit from the marketing, design, quality and manufacturing initiative, the research and technology initiative, the export initiative and the business education initiative.

In April 1988, three further initiatives will be available to industry and commerce within the Blackpool TTWA — the business planning initiative, the financial and information system initiative, and the small firms merit award for research and technology (SMART).

A comprehensive range of further support services is available to all industry and commerce from the Department, either to complement action taken under the enterprise initiative or separately. These include overseas and United Kingdom market trade and business information, company registration advice and information, contract research, testing and analysis services through DTI's own research establishments, and advice and guidance on patent and trade mark issues.

All the enterprise initiative services to industry and commerce within the Blackpool TTWA will be administered from the Department's enterprise initiative offices in Manchester (75 Mosley street, Manchester M2 3HR Tel: 061-838 5011), supported by a new satellite office at Preston.

Royal United Services Institute

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he will list those publications by the Royal United Services Institute which he has approved for publication since 1979.

Mr. Butcher: I have no such knowledge of approving things for this publication and to refer back to 1979 would incur disproportionate costs.

Consumer Safety

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many prohibition orders and prohibition notices his Department has issued for each of the last five years, relating to consumer safety.

Mr. Maude: During the last five years, the following four prohibition orders and three prohibition notices have been made.

Prohibition Orders
The Toy Water Snakes (Safety) Order 1983[1]
The Gas Catalytic Heaters (Safety) Order 1983[2]
The Expanding Novelties (Safety) Order 1983[1]
The Scented Erasers (Safety) Order 1984[2]

Prohibition Notices
Automatic Rice Cooker (1983)

Sprint 0-6 T A Scissor Jack (1984)
Expanding Novelties known as New Grobots, New Grobugs and New Grobeasts (1985).

Note:
[1] Lapsed, goods having been removed from the market.
[2] Now covered by regulations made under the Consumer Safety Act 1978.

Consumer Protection

Mr. Neil Hamilton: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he has yet reached a decision on the concordat's proposals for regulations on misleading price indications under part III of the Consumer Protection Act 1987.

Mr. Maude: After careful consideration, in consultation with the concordat and others, and in the light of revision of the draft code of practice on price indications, I have concluded that there is no need at this stage for further regulation in three of the five areas proposed by the concordat.

The issues of introductory offers, worth and value claims and substantiation of price indications are now adequately covered by part III of the Consumer Protection Act and the draft code of practice. I have, however, concluded that there is a good case for regulations on the 28-day rule for comparisons with previous prices and on recommended prices, although in different terms from those proposed by the concordat. As required by the Act, my Department is today issuing a consultation paper seeking views on draft regulations to remove any possible uncertainty about whether comparisons which comply with the 28-day "rule" meet the requirements of the Act and to define "recommended price" and similar terms so as to ensure that comparisons with articial recommended prices are caught by the general offence. At the same time, we are seeking views on a revised and I believe much improved version of the draft code. Subject to the outcome of this consultation, I aim to bring the new legislation on price indications into force on 1 September 1988. Copies of the consultation paper will be placed in the Library.

Investments

Mr. Page: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he will clarify the definition of investments in schedule I to the Financial Services Act in respect of forward contracts and bank lending.

Mr. Maude: I have issued a statement giving the Government's view of the effect of certain of the definitions in schedule 1 to the Financial Services Act, defining investments and investment business. This covers the position of forward contracts and bank lending and certain other issues. I have placed a copy of my statement in the Libraries of both Houses.

Unit Trusts

Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he has taken decisions on the regulations on pricing of authorised unit trusts to be made under the Financial Services Act 1986.

Mr. Maude: My Department has had useful discussions with a number of interested parties on this subject, taking forward the consultations started by the Securities and Investments Board. The Securities and Investments Board has been actively involved in our discussions on these issues and endorses the approach I have decided upon. Our aim has been to achieve a system which is fair to investors and provides as much flexibility for management groups as is consistent with this.

It was suggested to us that conflicts of interest between the manager's role as market-maker in dealing in units and his role as investment manager for the fund could be resolved only by confining managers to acting as agent in unit dealings. Although I do not intend to require this in the regulations, it is clearly a matter which deserves further study, and I welcome the intention of the Securities and Investments Board to look at it fully, in the light of experience of the new regulations.

I will shortly be laying regulations before the House, the main provisions of which will be as follows:

(i) In their dealings with trustees, managers will have to inform the trustee within 2 hours of the valuation point of the number and/or value of units they wish to create or cancel at that valuation. They may not give creation or cancellation orders at any other time. They must request at least sufficient units to enable them to fulfil all purchase orders taken. They must tell the trustee straight away if they revalue the fund.

(ii) In their dealings with unitholders, managers will be able to choose to deal with unit-holders on a forward basis only, at the price calculated following receipt of their order. If they wish to offer deals on the last valuation (backward basis) they must:
- decide their spread at the beginning of the dealing period and inform the trustee (this spread must be the one used for forward deals in the previous period)
- deal at this spread for all transactions except large ones unless they move to a forward basis for all deals
- cease to deal on a backward basis if they know, or have reason to believe, that the fund value has moved by 2 per cent. or more
- deal at a forward price if the unitholder requests it or if no price is agreed.

(iii) For large deals managers will be able to deal outside the spread notified to the Trustee provided that the price used is still within permitted units or deal on a forward pricing basis (within permitted limits). (Large deals will be defined as £15,000 or such larger amount as is stated in the scheme particulars.)

(iv) If the manager knows or has reason to believe that the fund value has moved by 2 per cent. or more he can as an alternative to complete revaluation, use a revaluation be reference to movements in an Index if the Trustee agrees and the composition of the Index reflects the composition of the fund.

(v) The manager will be able to choose the regular time of valuation but this must be stated in the scheme particulars and must not be two hours or less before the opening of the main market in which the fund is invested.

(vi) Unit prices will be calculated so as to reflect the net asset value of the fund on a buying or selling basis, and including any initial charge. Unit prices will have to be accurate to 4 significant figures both for transactions and publication in newspapers. For transactions rounding to the lowest unit of currency will also be permitted.

(vii) On contract notes and in newspapers, the cancellation price will need to be shown in addition to the ruling bid/offer price as appropriate. In addition on contract notes and at least weekly in the newspaper the initial charge as a percentage will need to be shown. The prices shown in the newspapers will have to be the most recent valuation available with the actual spreads used for deals (other than large deals).

(viii) Settlement within five days will be required for all trustee/manager dealings for all funds other than money market and gilts funds in which case the requirement will be to settle by the close of business on the next working day. In the case of manager — unitholder dealings the requirement will be to pay out on redemptions within five days of receipt of the relevant documents of title.

As the pricing regulations are likely to require changes in systems and working procedures, I intend to allow current lawful arrangements to continue until 1 July.

I have also received representation about the position of offshore funds. Such funds cannot be certain, at this stage, whether their home territory will be able to obtain designation under section 87 of the Act by "A" day, or that applications for their individual recognition under section 88 will have been determined by then. I therefore intend to permit offshore funds which have a listing on the stock exchange to continue, until 1 July, to promote by means of a prospectus.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Economic Strategy

10. Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what discussions he has had with the trade unions in Northern Ireland on the Government's economic strategy.

Mr. Viggers: Since January 1986, Ministers have met trade union delegations on 12 occasions. A range of industrial and economic issues have been discussed.

Teachers

11. Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he has any proposals for changing the way teachers are trained in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: I do not intend to change the requirement that all courses of initial teacher training in Northern Ireland should meet the criteria of the Council for the Accreditation of Teacher Education which also apply in England and Wales. In line with my strategy for the promotion of education for mutual understanding in all sectors of education, I have however make it clear that I wish student teachers in the segregated colleges of education to have increased opportunities to meet each other, to undertake joint project work and to spend part of their professional training in cross-community school experience.

Lignite

12. Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he has completed his evaluation of proposals to develop a minemouth power station to utilise lignite resources in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Viggers: The evaluation of the proposals for provision of new generating capacity in Northern Ireland, including a possible minemouth lignite power station, has not yet been completed. We are currently awaiting revised bids from NIE and APCL which they have undertaken to submit by 31 January.

International Fund for Ireland

14. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what projects in Northern Ireland are currently in receipt of financial support from the International Fund for Ireland.

Mr. Stanley: The International Fund for Ireland is administered by an independent board appointed by her Majesty's Government and the Government of the Irish Republic. Details of applications for assistance and awards made are a matter for the board. A copy of the fund's press notices of 27 August and 10 December 1987 detailing programme allocations of £47·9 million and particular projects it is supporting, together with a copy of the fund's annual report, are available in the Library.

34. Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what financial contributions have been made by Her Majesty's Government to the International Fund for Ireland since its inception.

Mr. Stanley: None, because Her Majesty's Government already contribute very large sums through public expenditure programmes to the economic and social development of Northern Ireland.

The International Fund for Ireland is a vehicle for providing supportive Governments in other countries with the means of expressing their support in a practical way for a programme of economic and social development which was envisaged in article 10*(a)* of the Anglo-Irish Agreement.

However, the cost of the accommodation and secretarial services necessary for the proper functioning of the fund, together with its general administrative and organisational expenses, are met jointly by the Governments of the United Kingdom and Ireland. Her Majesty's Government's contribution to these costs in the current financial year is estimated as £45,000.

Anglo-Irish Agreement

15. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he next plans to meet the Tanaiste, Mr. Lenihan, to discuss the Anglo-Irish Agreement.

Mr. Tom King: I hope to do so very shortly.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the progress of the Anglo-Irish Agreement.

Mr. Tom King: Worthwhile progress continues under the agreement. In particular, priority is being given to enhancing security co-operation with the Republic of Ireland. This has obvious potential to benefit all sections of the community in Northern Ireland.

Political Parties (Co-operation)

16. Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he has received in the current year regarding co-operation between the constitutional parties in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Tom King: I have received a number of such representations from leading members of the community who share my concern that ways should be found to bring about constructive dialogue and co-operation. It was in that spirit that I held a further meeting with the right hon. Member for the Lagan Valley (Mr. Molyneaux) and the hon. Member for Antrim (Rev. I. Paisley) on 26 January.

42. Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he has received from the constitutional parties in Northern Ireland regarding political progress.

Mr. Tom King: I have received a number of such representations, expressing a range of views. If political progress is to be achieved, there will need to be a constructive exchange of views both between the constitutional parties themselves and with the Government.

Animal Welfare

17. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he is taking to implement in Northern Ireland the recommendations of the Farm Animal Welfare Council on conditions at horse markets and sales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Viggers: I have no plans to implement the recommendations of the Farm Animal Welfare Council on conditions at horse markets and sales in Great Britain. This is because the welfare of horses at any sale in Northern Ireland is already adequately controlled under the Welfare of Animals Act (NI) 1972.

Unemployment

18. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about the trends in unemployment in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Viggers: In recent months, there has been a firm downward trend in unemployment in Northern Ireland. During the first half of 1987, seasonally adjusted unemployment dropped by an average of 300 per month whereas in the last six months the decrease was 1,000 per month. This indicates that the downward trend has quickened.

Air Travel (Belfast)

19. Mr. Clifford Forsythe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he last met the chairman of the British Airports Authority to discuss facilities for Belfast-bound air passengers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State met the chairman of BAA, on 18 November 1987. The Secretary of State expressed his concern at the facilities at Heathrow for Belfast passengers. Further discussions at official level are continuing to explore ways of improving facilities.

Education Department

20. Mr. Stevens: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the Education Department's capital budget for 1988-89.

Dr. Mawhinney: Almost £51 million.

Special Educational Needs

21. Mr. Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what expenditure is planned in 1988-89 for schools for children with special education needs; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: Estimated expenditure by the education and library boards in the 1988/89 financial year in respect of special education for pupils other than the mentally handicapped, is not yet available. The sum planned for teaching costs paid by my Department, in respect of these pupils is, however, £6·5 million.

In addition a sum of £8·9 million is planned for all recurrent services required for the education of mentally handicapped pupils, including teaching costs and a sum of about £2 million for capital expenditure.

Integrated Schools (Maintained Status)

22. Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if his Department has any plans to change the criteria for giving maintained status to integrated schools; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: I am currently considering the matter and after deliberations hope to be able to make a statement shortly.

Intergovernmental Conference

23. Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which members of the ministerial team, and which officials from his Department, regularly attend the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Conference meetings.

Mr. Tom King: I and my right hon. Friend the Minister of State usually attend meetings of the Intergovernmental Conference. The joint statement issued after each meeting sets out details of Ministerial attendance. Official attendance varies. It is not in any event the practice to give names of officials attending.

24. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what subjects were discussed at his last meeting with representatives of the Government of the Republic of Ireland.

Mr. Tom King: I refer the hon. Member to a reply I gave earlier to a question by the hon. Member for Nottingham, North (Mr. Allen).

30. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he last met the Foreign Minister of the Republic of Ireland; and what was discussed.

Mr. Tom King: I refer the hon. Member to a reply I gave earlier to a question by the hon. Member for Nottingham, North (Mr. Allen).

Stalker-Sampson Inquiry

25. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will make a further statement on his implementation of the Sampson report on matters connected with the administration of the Royal Ulster Constabulary.

33. Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what discussions he has had recently concerning those aspects of the reports by Mr. Colin Sampson and others on alleged misconduct by officers of the Royal Ulster Constabulary which fall within his responsibility; and if he will make a statement.

35. Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will make a further statement on his implementation of those parts of the Stalker-Sampson report on the Royal Ulster Constabulary which fall within his responsibility.

Mr. Tom King: I refer the hon. Members to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Stretford (Mr. Lloyd).

Wages Act

26. Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the likely effect on employment levels of his plans to extend the Wages Act to Northern Ireland.

Mr. Viggers: The Draft Wages (Northern Ireland) Order 1988 which was laid on 10 December 1987 will introduce reforms similar to those already in place in Great Britain under the Wages Act 1986. Attempts to estimate the effect on employment levels in Northern Ireland of these reforms are unlikely to be productive. However, in my opinion the adverse effects of over-regulation on business enterprise, which the order addresses, are such that the provisions of the proposed legislation can only assist employment.

Education Expenditure

27. Mr. Knowles: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much he intends to spend on education in Northern Ireland in 1988-89; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: Almost £800 million. This represents an increase of £48 million or nearly 6·5 per cent. over the estimated expenditure for the current year. The major increase is yet further evidence of the Government's commitment to education services in the Province.

Security

28. Mr. Molyneaux: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the security situation.

41. Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will make a statement on the security situation.

Mr. Tom King: I refer the right hon. Gentleman and my hon. Friend to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Londonderry, East (Mr. Ross).

Education Reform

29. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he intends to issue his consultation paper on educational reform in Northern Ireland.

Dr. Mawhinney: I plan to issue the paper next month.

Health Services

31. Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he is satisfied with liaison between the health authorities in Northern Ireland and the Republic of Ireland, where patients are transferred between hospitals in the two territories.

Mr. Needham: Yes.

32. Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what sums have been paid to the health services of the Republic of Ireland as reimbursements for the treatment of patients from (a) Northern Ireland and (b) Great Britain; what are the numbers of people treated; and if he will give any corresponding information for Republic of Ireland citizens treated in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: Payments under EC regulation 1408/71 as reimbursement for the treatment of patients from Northern Ireland in the Republic of Ireland were IR£2,191,170 in the financial year 1986-87.

Payments from the Republic of Ireland were £478,429 in 1986-87. The costs are estimated annually on an agreed formula and the numbers of people treated are not known. Information relating to Great Britain is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services.

Equal Opportunities (Report)

36. Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he intends to publish a response to the report of the Standing Advisory Commission on Human Rights on equality of opportunity in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Viggers: The Government has welcomed the report of the Standing Advisory Committee on Human Rights. The report is being taken fully into account in the formulation of our detailed legislative proposals, and I hope to give a further indication of our views shortly.

Terrorism

37. Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if there has been forthcoming any information which has led to the arrest and charging of the terrorists responsible for the massacre at Enniskillen or for any of the other 156 unsolved murders by terrorists in the constituency of the hon. Member for Fermanagh and South Tyrone.

Mr. Stanley: The police have received a substantial amount of information from the public following the bombing at Enniskillen on 8 November 1987. A number of people have been interviewed but, as yet, no charges have been brought. RUC inquiries into this incident and other terrorist murders for which no-one has been charged, will continue.

Administration of Justice

38. Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what initiatives have been taken under the Anglo-Irish Agreement to increase confidence in the administration of justice in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Tom King: A number of measures have been introduced in the period since the signing of the Anglo-Irish Agreement as part of the Government's continuing commitment to enhancing public confidence in the administration of justice in Northern Ireland.

These measures include a reduction since 1985 of nearly 50 per cent. on average in the time between committal and trial; allowing more cases to be heard before a jury by extending the list of offences which the Attorney-General can certify out of the scheduled mode of trial; changes to the statutory guidelines on the admissibility of confession evidence; putting the onus on the prosecution in bail applications; and placing on a statutory basis the rights of a person detained under the emergency legislation to have someone informed of their arrest and to have access to a solicitor within 48 hours.

In addition, the maximum period that police can hold suspected terrorists under the emergency legislation without further ministerial authority has been reduced from 72 to 48 hours; arrest powers under the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1978 are exerciseable only on the basis of reasonable suspicion and the Act itself must now be re-enacted from scratch every five years. There are now also annual reviews of the operation of the Act and the Government are committed to the publication of a code of practice in relation to the exercise of emergency powers.

We continue to seek any ways in which we can increase still further public confidence in the administration of justice.

Northern Ireland Police Authority

39. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what discussions he has had with the chairman of the Northern Ireland Police Authority in the last month on operational police activities.

Mr. Stanley: None. Police operations are a matter for the Chief Constable of the RUC.

Milk and Beef Production

40. Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many meetings he has had during 1987-88 with the leaders of the two main farmers unions in Northern Ireland to discuss the problems of milk and beef production.

Mr. Viggers: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and my noble Friend, Lord Lyell, have frequent meetings with farmers and representatives of the farming community at which all aspects of the industry are discussed, including milk and beef production.

Victoria Primary School, Newtownards

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on how many occasions since 1 August 1987 teachers at Victoria primary school, Newtownards, have had to accept additional pupils into their classes due to the new guidelines for the provision of substitute teachers.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information sought is not held centrally.

New Power Station

Sir John Biggs-Davison: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what further discussions have been held with Northern Ireland Electricity and the Antrim Power Company Ltd. on the next power station for the Province; whether bids to build, own and operate it have been received from elsewhere; and when he expects to announce the result of the competition between the bidders.

Mr. Viggers: I met representatives of Northern Ireland Electricity and the Antrim Power Company Limited on 22 December 1987, when I invited them to review their proposals and submit revised bids by 31 January 1988. Decisions will be taken and announced as soon as possible after the revised bids have been received and evaluated. In addition to APCL, five other private sector submissions were received at the outset of the competition, but these are no longer in contention.

Water Availability (Fermanagh Lakes)

Sir John Biggs-Davison: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the general findings of the latest studies available to the Department of the Environment, Northern Ireland, of the quality of the water in the Fermanagh lakes; to what extent those studies have been carried out in co-operation with authorities and organisations across the border; and what are the present factors adverse to the health and quantity of fish and therefore to tourism.

Mr. Needham: The report "The Erne System: A Water Quality Study" which was published on 18 January 1988 was prepared by a working group drawn from the Departments of the Environment for Northern Ireland and the Republic of Ireland, the Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland, An Foras Forbartha and Cavan, Monaghan, Leitrim and Donegal county councils. The study found that most of the lakes in the catchment are moderately to highly eutrophic, it drew particular attention to the over-enrichment due to phosphorus from sewage, industrial and agricultural sources; and has recommended remedial action. The health and quantity of fish did not fall within the terms of reference of this study. A copy of the report is now available in the Library.

Downe Hospital, Downpatrick

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proposals he has received from the Eastern Health and Social Services Board, with regard to provision for the replacement of the Downe hospital, Downpatrick; and if he will give top priority to approving and funding such a proposal.

Mr. Needham: None as yet, but the Eastern health and social services board has indicated that it foresees a need for the hospital's replacement at some stage after the end of the current planning period in 1992.

It would be inappropriate for me to speculate at this stage what degree of priority any such proposal might attract.

Roads (Skid Resistance)

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will introduce a similar programme to the Department of Transport's SCRIM project, to monitor the skid resistance of motorways and arterial routes; and what amount of extra cash he intends to make available for (a) the programme and (b) resultant remedial works during the next four years.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 27 January 1988]: The Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland already makes substantial use of the SCRIM process to monitor the condition of road surfaces. £25·55 million is available in the current financial year for the structural maintenance programme, which includes use of SCRIM. A similar sum is expected to be allocated in future years.

Republic of Ireland (Car Exports)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information he has as to the number of new cars which have been imported into the United Kingdom from the Republic of Ireland in each of the last 12 months to the end of 1987; where the sales of these vehicles are concentrated in Northern Ireland; and what proportion of the market for new cars these imports represent in these areas.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 27 January 1988]: The information is not available in the form requested. The number of new cars registered in Northern Ireland during each month of 1987, the number of such vehicles which originated in the Republic of Ireland and the percentage of the total which this latter figure represents are set out in the following table. No information is kept on the areas where vehicles are sold in Northern Ireland.

1987	New Vehicles Registered	RoI Vehicles	Per cent.
January	5,881	9	0·15
February	5,484	11	0·20

November	2,689	27	1·00
December	1,438	10	0·69
Total	53,142	221	0·46

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what inspection of new cars and other new vehicles imported from the Republic of Ireland are carried out to ensure that each such vehicle meets the standards laid down.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 27 January 1988]: None.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he intends to take to ensure fair competition in the sale of new cars in Northern Ireland as between new cars imported into Northern Ireland from the Irish Republic and those which come into Northern Ireland via the manufacturers dealership.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 27 January 1988]: I am satisfied with existing arrangements where all new cars on first registration in Northern Ireland with the exception of personal imports, must demonstrate that they meet prescribed standards. Pricing policy is a matter for the vehicle manufacturers, importers and dealers. I shall reply to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

Rating Reform

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table in the Official Report to show for 1987 (i) the number of (a) electors, (b) domestic ratepayers and (c) other ratepayers in each council district of Northern Ireland, (ii) the regional rate for Northern Ireland, (iii) the district rate for each council district in Northern Ireland, (iv) the sum needed per elector in each council district to raise a sum equal to the sums raised by the district rate from domestic hereditaments if such a district rate were replaced by a community charge, (v) the sums raised from domestic rates in each council district in Northern Ireland, in respect of the local rate, and (vi) the sums raised from non-domestic rates in each council district in Northern Ireland in respect of the regional rate.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 27 January 1988]: The regional rate for Northern Ireland for 1987-88 is 113·53p in the pound. The other information requested is as follows.

District	LG electors	Domestic ratepayers	Other ratepayers	District rate P in the £	Equivalent amount per elector £	Product of domestic district rate £	Product of non-domestic regional rate £

Salmon and Grilse

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what number of salmon and grilse have been taken by (a) rod anglers, (b) draft nets (c) drift nets and (d) other nets in Northern Ireland in each of the last 20 years to the end of 1987.

Mr. Viggers [holding answer 27 January 1988]: No information is available for catches by rod anglers. The information requested for catches by commercial nets is shown below. This information relates to Northern Ireland other than the Foyle area:

Cars (Pricing Policy)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information he has as to the pricing policy by the manufacturers of cars in respect of comparable models between Northern Ireland and the Irish Republic.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 27 January 1988]: None.

Vehicle Imports

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what regulatory restrictions apply to the importation of (a) new cars and (b) new vans and other commercial type vehicles from the Irish Republic into Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 27 January 1988]: I shall reply to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Unit Labour Costs

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give United Kingdom relative unit labour costs in normalised currencies, based on the International Monetary Fund spending for 1984, 1985, 1986 and 1987.

Mr. Lilley: International Monetary Fund measures of actual and normalised relative unit labour costs are published in Economic Trends, page 46.

Data Transfer

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what will be the purpose and nature of data to be transferred to Customs and Excise from the Department of Health and Social Security, the Inland Revenue, and the Home Department; and how many data records it is envisaged will be annually transferred from each of these three Departments to Her Majesty's Customs and Excise, broken down by Department;

(2) what will be the purpose and nature of data to be transferred to the Home Department from the Department of Health and Social Security, the Inland Revenue, and Her Majesty's Customs and Excise; and how many data records it is envisaged will be annually transferred from each of these three Departments to the Home Department, broken down by Department.

(3) what will be the purpose and nature of data to be transferred to the Inland Revenue from the Department of Health and Social Security, the Home Department and Her Majesty's Customs and Excise; and how many data records it is envisaged will be annually transferred from each of these three Departments to the Inland Revenue, broken down by Department;

(4) what will be the purpose and nature of data to be transferred to the Department of Health and Social Security from the Inland Revenue, the Home Department and Her Majesty's Customs and Excise; and how many data records it is envisaged will be annually transferred from each of these three Departments to the Department of Health and Social Security, broken down by Department;

Mr. Brooke: The information is not held centrally. The proposed Government data network is intended primarily for intra-departmental data traffic. Where interdepartmental exchanges or accesses are intended, use of GDN would not alter the requirement for the Department owning the data to authorise transfer.

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what will constitute the transfer of data in an authorised manner on the Government data network; and how many individual civil servants in the Department of Health and Social Security, the Inland Revenue, the Home Department and Her Majesty's Customs and Excise are likely to be able to carry out an authorised transfer of data.

Mr. Brooke: The majority of data transfers over the Government data network will occur within a Department, but whether a transfer is internal or interdepartmental, the data owner will still have to authorise it.

The number of staff involved will vary according to the system or application concerned. Information will not be held centrally.

Data Banks

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide a list of all existing or planned computer data banks holding personal information in the Department of Health and Social Security, the Inland Revenue, the Home Department and Her Majesty's Customs and Excise, including the number of records, number of terminals and the nature of the information stored.

Mr. Brooke: The nature of the information stored is set out in the appropriate departmental entries in the Data Protection Register, a copy of which is in the Library. I regret that the other information requested is not available centrally.

Privatisation (Accountancy Fees)

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the aggregate of the fees paid to the largest eight accountancy firms in respect of all privatisation issues undertaken since 1979.

Mr. Norman Lamont: For commercial reasons, it is not the practice to reveal the fees paid to particular advisers.

Accountancy Firms (Tax Planning)

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide an estimate of the tax lost to the Revenue in 1987 as a direct consequence of tax planning by accountancy firms.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Channel Islands

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the estimated annual loss to the Exchequer in tax revenue resulting from the use of the Channel Islands as a tax haven for individuals and companies.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I regret that it is not possible to provide such an estimate.

BP Shares

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the BP underwriting agreements with overseas institutions allows the BP shares taken up by such entities to be held by United Kingdom affiliates or branches such that any losses on these shares would be deductible in computing United Kingdom corporation tax or capital gains tax.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Overseas underwriters acquiring shares in BP in their own name were not constrained by the underwriting agreement in the holding of those shares.

Underwriting Commissions

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide an estimate of the revenue lost to the Exchequer in 1986-87 and 1987-88 through the exemption of pension funds from tax on underwriting commissions.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The taxation affairs of pension funds are dealt with by local tax offices. The information requested is not centrally available and to obtain it would involve disproportionate cost.

Third World Debt

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has about the total holdings of Third world debt by United Kingdom clearing banks.

Mr. Lilley: The clearing banks identify their exposure to a number of developed and developing countries in their published reports and accounts. The latest such information was published last July by the main United Kingdom clearing bank groups in their 1987 interim results.

Income Tax Exemptions

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the change in Treasury income during the 1988-89 financial year resulting from confining all income tax exemptions to an upper limit of 20 per cent.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 19 January 1988]: The yield in a full year, at 1988-89 levels of income, from restricting all income tax reliefs to 20 per cent. of income after deduction of personal allowances would be about £2¼ billion. This estimate assumes that the 1987-88 income tax regime is indexed to 1988-89 according to the statutory formula and that there is no change in taxpayers' behaviour.

Income Tax

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make an estimate of the change in Treasury income during the 1988-89 financial year resulting from setting income tax rates as follows: nil to £5,200 at 20 per cent., £5,201 to £9,500 at 25 per cent., £9,501 to £13,000 at 30 per cent., £13,001 to £18,000 at 35 per cent., £18,001 to £24,000 at 40 per cent., £24,001 to £30,000 at 50 per cent., £30,001 to £39,000 at 55 per cent., and £39,001 or more at 60 per cent.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 19 January 1988]: The direct revenue cost in a full year at 1988-89 levels of income of the proposed regime would be about £5·5 billion more than the cost of indexation of the current income tax regime, in accordance with the statutory formula. This estimate assumes that the regime would retain the indexed levels of personal allowances and that the wife's earnings election is made where it is beneficial. No other allowance is made for possible changes in taxpayers' behaviour.

Personal Allowances

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make an estimate of the change in Treasury income during the 1988-89 financial year resulting from setting income tax allowances at the following rates: single person £2,600, married male nil, partners income £2,600, children £1,560, blind £600, widower £1,560, single person aged 60 to 74 years £3,130, married person aged 60 to 74 years £4,950, maximum allowance for people aged 60 to 74 years £10,500, single person aged 75 years £3,350, married person aged 75 plus years £5,230, and maximum allowance for people aged 75 plus years £10,500.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 19 January 1988]: The direct revenue cost in a full year at 1988-89 levels of income of the proposed regime would be just over £1 billion more than the cost of indexation of the current tax regime in accordance with the statutory formula. The estimates assume that the wife's earninings election is made where it is beneficial, but no other allowance is made for posssible changes in taxpayers' behaviour.

Taxpayers (Statistics)

Mr. Jack: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide a table showing the number of (a) taxpayers and (b) taxpayers with children, in each of the following taxable income brackets: nil to £5,000, £5,001 to £7,500, £7,501 to £10,000, £10,001 to £12,500, £12,501 to £15.000, £15,001 to £17,500, £17,501 to £20,000, £20,001 to £22,500, £22,501 to £25,000, £25,001 to £30,000 and £30,000 and over; and if he will further break down the information for each taxable income bracket into the categories: married, single and self-employed.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 20 January 1988]:]: The table gives estimates of tax units (ie single people or married couples) who have some income tax liability in 1987-88. Figures are given (a) for all tax units and (b) for tax units with children for each specified range of gross income assessed for income tax purposes.

Mortgage Interest Tax Relief

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will (a) publish a table on restructuring mortgage interest tax relief to different rates of taxation for 1987-88, (b) report how many mortgagors receive relief at rates in excess of the basic rates of income tax and (c) report how many persons currently paying tax only at standard rate would pay tax at a higher rate if mortgage tax relief were removed from higher rates of tax; and what would be the additional income to the Exchequer, in the manner of his answer of 8 April 1986, Official Report, column 100.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 26 January 1988]: The direct revenue yields in a full year, at 1987-88 levels, from restricting mortgage interest relief are as follows. The estimates make no allowance for the effect of any consequential changes to the distribution of outstanding mortgages.

Rate of mortgage interest relief per cent.	Direct revenue yield £ million
15	2,240
20	1,440
25	650
27	330

It is estimated that, in 1987-88, about 930,000 mortgagors will have received relief at rates in excess of the basic rate of income tax. Of these, about 190,000 who are currently liable only at basic rate are kept out of higher rates by virtue of their mortgage interest relief.

Taxes

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing total taxes as a proportion of gross domestic product in each year since 1978-79.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 26 January 1988]: Following is the information:

Total Taxes and National Insurance Contributions as a Percentage of Money GDP

	Percentage
1978-79	33·8
1979-80	35·1
1980-81	36·3
1981-82	39·4
1982-83	38·9
1983-84	38·5
1984-85	39·1
1985-86	38·5
1986-87	37·9

Northern Ireland (Vehicle Imports)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the time lapse between the importation of a new vehicle into Northern Ireland from the Republic of Ireland and the payment of value added tax on such a vehicle; and whether he has any plans to reduce that period.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 27 January 1988]: Value added tax is payable at the time of importation or may be deferred, under guarantee arrangements, until the 15th day of the month following importation.

There are no plans to reduce the period of payment by deferment.

Undeclared Taxes

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what was the total value of undeclared taxes other than value added tax and income tax discovered and recouped by his Department in each year since 1979;

(2) what was the total value of undeclared income tax discovered and recouped by his Department in each year since 1979.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answers 20 January 1988]: Records are not kept of the amounts of individual taxes recouped as a result of investigations. However, the total amounts — including, where appropriate, interest and penalties — of income tax, corporation tax and capital gains tax are as follows:

	£ million
Year to 31 October
1979	111·6
1980	137·9
1981	165·1
1982	265·6
Year to 31 March
1983	304·8
1984	399·2
1985	594·4
1986	694·5
1987	741·3

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what has been the percentage change in the value of under-declarations of taxes other than value added tax and income tax discovered per tax control officer since (a) 1979 and (b) 1984;

(2) what has been the percentage change in the value of under-declarations of income tax discovered per income tax control officer since (a) 1979 and (b) 1984.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answers 20 January 1988]: For the reasons given in my earlier replies to the hon. Member, it is not possible to give this information. However the percentage increases in the average amounts of income tax, corporation tax and capital gains tax — including interest and penalties — recovered by each Inland Revenue investigator were as follows:

	Per cent.
1980 to 1987	172
1984 to 1987	61

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what has been the average increase in the value of the under-declarations of taxes other than income tax and value added tax discovered per tax control officer in each year since 1979;

(2) what has been the average increase in the value of under-declarations of income tax discovered per income tax control officer in each year since 1979.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answers 20 January 1988]: For the reasons given in my earlier replies to the hon. Member, it is not possible to give this information. However, the estimated average increase in the amount of income tax, corporation tax and capital gains tax — including interest and penalties — recovered by each Inland Revenue investigator over each preceding year since 1979 is £20,451.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what is his estimate of the ratio of current employment costs of the tax control officers to undeclared taxes, other than income tax and value added tax, discovered and recouped; and what are the figures for each year since 1979;

(2) what is his estimate of the ratio of current employment costs of the income tax control officers to undeclared income tax discovered and recouped; and what are the figures for each year since 1979.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answers 20 January 1988]: For the reasons given in my earlier replies to the hon. Member, it is not possible to give figures for individual taxes. Moreover cost-yield ratios for Inland Revenue investigators have only been produced for the years 1983-84 onwards, and figures for earlier years could not be produced except at disproportionate cost. Figures are kept separately for the Inland Revenue's main investigation sections and are as follows:

	1983-84	1984-85	1985-86	1986-87
Tax offices	1:6	1:6·8	[1]1:17	[1]1:13
Inquiry branch	1:12·5	1:17·6	1:17	1:16
Special offices	1:17	1:27	1:25	1:31
PAYE audit	1:4	1:5·5	1:5·7	1:6

[1] An improved way of estimating the yield in Tax Districts from technical adjustments means that these figures are not wholly comparable with those for earlier years. There were also some exceptionally large settlements in 1985-86.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the increase in the value of under-declarations of income tax discovered per income tax control officer in each year since 1979.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 20 January 1988]: For reasons given in my earlier replies to the hon. Member, it is not possible to give this information. However the increases in the estimated average amounts of income tax, corporation tax and capital gains tax—including interest and penalties — recovered by each Inland Revenue investigator over each preceding year are as follows:

	Average estimated yield per Investigator £	Estimated increase over previous year £
1980	83,122	—
1981	83,978	856
1982	122,622	38,644
1983	122,164	(458)
1984	140,415	18,251
1985	185,692	45,277
1986	212,256	26,564
1987	226,282	14,026

Tax Control Officers

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many tax control officers, other than those dealing with value added tax and income tax, are at present employed in the United Kingdom; and what are the corresponding figures for each year since 1979;

(2) how many income tax control officers are at present employed in the United Kingdom and in Wales and England; and what are the corresponding figures for each year since 1979.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answers 20 January 1988]: Inland Revenue investigation officers do not, in general, deal exclusively in particular taxes and it is not possible to give separate figures for those engaged on imcome tax compliance and those engaged on other taxes. Moreover, for many staff, work on avoidance and evasion is only a part of their duties. However, the total number of staff units employed throughout the UK in dealing with avoidance and evasion of income tax, corporation tax and capital gains tax for each of the years 1980-87 (the figure for 1979 is not available) were as follows:

	Number
1980	1,659
1981	1,966
1982	2,166
1983	2,495
1984	2,843
1985	3,201
1986	3,272
1987	3,276

ENVIRONMENT

Community Alarm Systems

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to how many local authorities maintain community alarm services for residents in their own homes.

Mrs. Roe: The Department does not hold this information.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what specific provision is made in (1) grant related expenditure assessments and (2) Government spending plans for local authority housing or personal services for the maintenance of community alarm services.

Mrs. Roe: It is for local authorities to decide what resources to devote to alarm systems. Grant related expenditure assessments and capital allocations take account of authorities' needs to spend on the elderly and disabled.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he intends to make any assessment of the number of residents covered by community alarm schemes, or to offer any guidance to local authorities on their provision.

Mrs. Roe: We have no plans to seek information on the numbers covered by alarm systems. Guidance on their provision has been give to local authorities.

Fuller Peiser (Fees)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to his answers of 14 January, Official Report, column 358, and 19 January Official Report, column 603, he will give the fees earned by Fuller Peiser for (a) its commission for the Property Services Agency at Rosyth and Devonport dockyards and (b) its management of the sale of the assets of Aycliffe and Peterlee new town corporation; whether either of these commissions were gained as a result of competitive tendering; and what guidance has been given to the Property Services Agency on competitive tendering for property management, disposal, and consultancy.

Mrs. Roe: The commission at the Rosyth and Devonport Dockyards was let to Fuller Peiser in competition with several other firms of agents. The appointment of Fuller Peiser to market the industrial assets of Aycliffe and Peterlee was also subject to competition and my Department was involved in the development corporation's selection of agents. It is not the Department's practice to publish information about the fees paid. It is PSA's normal policy for all forms of agency and consultancy except for minor sales to invite competitive tenders from firms with the appropriate expertise for the task.

Control of Pollution Act 1974

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to review the operation of section 27 of the Control of Pollution Act 1974.

Mr. Moynihan: I see no reason to do so.

Rating Reform

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate, on the basis of the 1987-88 budgets and consistent with figures published by his Department during 1987, the total fully-introduced community charge bills of households with one, two, three, four, five and six adults for each authority in Great Britain.

Mr. Ridley: Yes. The answers are respectively one, two, three, four, five and six times the figures for illustrative community charges published on 29 June in respect of England, 3 July in respect of Wales and 10 July in respect of Scotland. For those on low incomes, assistance will be available through income support and community charge rebates.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate, on the basis of 1987-88 budgets, and consistent with figures published by his Department during 1987, the total fully-introduced community charge bills of households with one, two, three, four, five and six adults, where each of those adults is on maximum benefit, for each authority in Great Britain.

Mr. Ridley: Yes. The answers are respectively 0·2, 0·4, 0·6, 0·8, one and 1·2 times the illustrated community charge figures published on 29 June in respect of England and 3 July in respect of Wales. For Scotland the answers are respectively one, two, three, four, five and six times the illustrative rebated community charge figures given to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, South (Mr. Griffiths) on 1 December at column 520, by my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Scottish Office.

Local Authorities (Payment of Bills)

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidance he has given, or will give, to local authorities on the payment of bills from suppliers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The payment of bills from suppliers is a matter for local authorities and on which they have received advice from the Audit Commission.

My right hon. Friend has not given guidance; nor has he plans to do so.

County Halls

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give details of the current use of each of the county halls following the abolition of the metropolitan county councils.

Mr. Chope: All the county halls of the former metropolitan county councils are currently used for administrative purposes.

Local Government Reform

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he is yet in a position to give an analysis of the financial and staff savings in respect of each of the abolished metropolitan councils.

Mr. Chope: The functions which successor authorities have inherited from the former metropolitan county councils have, in large measure, been amalgamated with their pre-abolition functions. The data which the Secretary of State receives from those authorities does not therefore separately identify expenditure incurred on their inherited functions.

The residuary bodies established to wind up the affairs of the abolished county councils estimate that some £114·85 million of MCC closing revenue balances and some £47·3 million capital receipts arising from their own disposals of surplus capital assets will be available for distribution to all rating authorities in the MCC areas by 31 March 1989.

We announced in February last year that some 6,300 posts had been saved immediately on abolition. These savings are not available by individual MCCs. However, we estimate that long term savings to ratepayers of some £100 million per annum will result from staff savings following abolition. About half these savings will be as a direct result of the abolition of the MCCs.

Wildlife Division

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the responsibilities of the wildlife division in his Department.

Mr. Moynihan: The functions and duties of the wildlife division are listed in the Department's management information system for Ministers. A copy of MINIS 8 is available in the Library of the House.

Vicuna

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from the Peruvian embassy in London in respect of vicuna stocks in the United Kingdom and Hong Kong; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: In 1987, the Peruvian embassy sought details of the amounts and destinations of trade in vicuna, and stock levels of vicuna available in the United Kingdom market. It was not possible to provide a full answer because there is a discrepancy between United Kingdom and Japanese statistics. This is being fully investigated and the Foreign and Commonwealth Office advised the embassy accordingly. No representations have been received from the embassy about vicuna stocks in Hong Kong.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give details of all vicuna products exported to Japan in each of the past five years.

Mr. Moynihan: Full details are not yet available. I will write to the hon. Member.

Rhinoceros Products

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps have been taken by Her Majesty's Government to implement the resolution agreed at the CITES conference in Ottawa in July 1987 on the trade in rhinoceros products; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: The United Kingdom is pursuing a detailed response to this resolution with our European Community partners.

In the meantime, however, EC regulation 3626/82 which has implemented the convention on international trade in endangered species of wild fauna and flora within the European Community since 1 January 1984, already bans international trade in rhinoceros products for commercial purposes and their sale within the United Kingdom. Only limited exceptions may be made to this ban under the provisions of the regulations and, in deciding whether to permit an exception, the United Kingdom now takes the rhinoceros resolution into account.

Cumbria (RSG)

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the value in money terms of the domestic resource equalisation component in the rate support grant settlement to the county of Cumbria for each financial year since 1978-79.

Mr. Chope: The information is as follows:

	£ million
1981-82	11·2
1982-83	12·3
1983-84	14·0
1984-85	15·6
1985-86	17·6
1986-87	20·1
1987-88	21·0
1988-89	23·8

Information is not available for years prior to the introduction of the present rate support grant arrangements in 1981-82.

Rates (Summonses)

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what figures he has on the numbers of the issue of summonses for the alleged non-payment of rates to households which have already paid their rates in London boroughs over the most recent period for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: Rate collection statistics produced by the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy show that in 1986-87, 962 summonses for non-payment of rates were issued by Greater London boroughs. Information is not collected on how many of these summonses were issued to ratepayers who had already paid their rates, but I have no reason to believe the numbers involved are significant.

Derelict Land

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what resources are being made available under the derelict land programme in 1988-89; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: The resources available for derelict land reclamation under the derelict land grant programme will be about £76·2 million in 1988-89. In real terms, these resources are over 80 per cent. greater than those available in 1979-80 and will maintain the momentum of this programme which, since 1979, has funded the reclamation of nearly 11,000 hectares of derelict land. Additional resources for derelict land reclamation are provided through urban development corporations. As in previous years, more than 90 per cent. of derelict land grant will be spent in the areas of greatest need in the north and midlands.

I am keen to encourage the growing participation of private firms in land reclamation and I have set aside an allocation of £7·66 million for this sector. But, outside UDC areas, local authorities will continue to play the major role in reclamation and the resources I have made available for these schemes total £68·27 million.

I have approved a new rolling programme for the reclamation of the extensive areas of dereliction in the Leeds-Liverpool canal corridor, while continuing existing rolling programmes outside UDC areas. Total expenditure on the 13 local authority rolling programmes approved for 1988-89 will be over £21 million.

I have allocated a further £8·75 million to continue support for the reclamation of the former Consett and Corby steelworks (£3·75 million), and to investigative and remedial works on limestone workings in the black country (£5 million). The non-local authority allocation will allow further work to be carried out on major schemes such as the north Tees power station in Cleveland (£0·495 million) and the former Dunlop site at Speke, Merseyside (£0·4 million).

My allocations include more than £8 million for the reclamation of coal-mining and related dereliction. This is larger even than year's record figure and shows the Government's continued support for good quality schemes in coalfield areas.

Priorities for derelict land reclamation remain as set out in my Department's circular 28/85—"Reclamation and Re-use of Derelict Land". This stressed the importance of schemes designed to reclaim urban especially inner-city land for housing, and industrial and commercial end uses. These priorities will be reflected in the schemes which will be supported in 1988-89.

County Hall, London

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to make an announcement on the future use of county hall.

Mr. Chope: I have nothing to add to my reply of 28 October 1987, at columns 275-76, to my hon. Friend for Ealing, North (Mr. Greenway).

SOCIAL SERVICES

Burnley, Pendle and Rossendale Health Authority

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the current planned levels of establishment for medical staff in the Burnley, Pendle and Rossendale health authority; and what are the current levels of staff in post.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that the information is not held centrally in the form requested. The hon. Member may wish to take his query up with the chairman of the Burnley, Pendle and Rossendale health authority.

Lancashire Ambulance Service

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the overall percentage change between 1979 and 1987 in (a) the number of patient miles for (i) emergency and (ii) non-emergency and (b) the number of patient journeys on the same basis, in the Lancashire ambulance area.

Mrs. Currie: The available information is given in the table.

Nurses

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many district nurses there were in (a) the Burnley constituency and (b) the Pendle constituency in each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mrs. Currie: Information for constituencies is not available centrally. Staff in post figures for the Burnley, Pendle and Rossendale district health authority are shown in the table and have been obtained from the annual census of non-medical manpower.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many nurses left the employment of each of the district health authorities in each year from 1979 to 1987.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 26 January 1988]: I regret that the information requested is not collected centrally. Some information will, however, become available later this year as a result of the introduction of improvements in National Health Service information systems.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what percentage of nurses up to and including senior nurse 7, in each of the health regions had (a) at least one overtime payment and (b) more than 12 overtime payments, during the year 1986-87, and at what estimated cost in each case.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 26 January 1988]: I regret that information in the form requested is not held centrally.

Mentally Handicapped Persons

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his estimate of the number of mentally handicapped people who have had their transfer facilitated from National Health Service hospitals to the community since 1978.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that I am unable to give my hon. Friend the exact information requested. Information on numbers of mentally handicapped people settled in the community is not centrally collected.

The table shows the number of people who have been discharged each year into the community after a stay of five years or more in hospital.

NHS (Special Duties Payments)

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) whether he will make a statement on the decision by the National Health Service management to withdraw the proposal for flat rate payments for special duties;

(2) what are the implications of the decision to withdraw the proposal for flat rate payment for special duties for the future of the current percentage payments to nursing staff;

(3) what are his proposals for the future of special duty payments for nursing staff.

Mr. Newton: The management side of the Nursing and Midwifery Staffs Negotiating Council indicated that, since there was no realistic prospect of agreeing joint evidence on a new structure for special duty payments to put to the Nurses Pay Review Body for its current review, it felt the appropriate course was for the review body itself to be invited to consider the level of such payments as part of its work on nurses' pay issues as a whole. It will be for the review body to decide whether it wishes to make any recommendations.

Benefits

Miss Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how he intends to publicise the major benefit changes due to take place in April, including the replacement of supplementary benefit and family income supplement with income support and family credit; and whether such publicity will be made available in the major ethnic minority languages.

Mr. Portillo: The Department is taking several measures to ensure that this April's social security reforms receive adequate publicity.

A series of factsheets on the social security reforms have been produced and are available free of charge to members of the public from social security offices.

Next month there will be an advertising campaign in the regional press on the new housing benefit scheme. Similar campaigns will follow in March to publicise the introduction of income support (national press), the new arrangements for widows (regional press), and the introduction of family credit (national press). The family credit campaign will also feature a TV commercial.

Posters will publicise the changes in main post offices and social security offices, and copies of these will be sent to other agencies for display. Leaflets are being redesigned and rewritten in line with the Department's communications strategy of improving the quality of information on social security benefits. The leaflets will be available from the usual outlets.

There are no plans at present to issue additional publicity in minority languages specifically on the reforms. However, there will be a new translation of the English-language leaflet FB 2 "Which benefit?", which will be published later this year in seven languages. This will provide a general overview of all social security benefits including the reformed ones.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services which categories of recipients of benefits will gain a special payment following the discovery of the error in the retail prices index; and how many claimants of each benefit will so qualify.

Mr. Scott: The benefits which qualify a recipient for a special payment in the first week of February and the numbers of recipients of each are shown in the table. A recipient may qualify under more than one benefit.

Qualifying benefits for February special payment and number of recipients of each (thousands)

	Number
Attendance Allowance	635

Industrial Disablement Benefit	200
Invalid Care Allowance	105
Invalidity Benefit	995
Mobility Allowance	495
Retirement Pension	9,725
Severe Disablement Allowance	265
Supplementary Pension	1,875
War Pensions	265
Widows' Benefits	380

In addition, the few thousand people who receive child's special allowance, guardian's allowance, or benefit under the pneumoconiosis and byssinosis and workmen's compensation schemes will receive special payments.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services which categories of recipients of benefits will not gain a special payment following the discovery of the error in the calculation of the retail prices index; and how many claimants are currently drawing these benefits.

Mr. Scott: Affected benefits for which no special payment will be made and the estimated number of recipients of each are shown in the table. Beneficiaries may be receiving more than one of these benefits or they may be receiving them in addition to a benefit which qualifies for the special payment.

Benefits affected by the error in the retail price index for which no special payment will be made and the estimated number of recipients of each (thousands).

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the annual per capita expenditure in terms of persons resident within the region for each of the four Thames health regions in each of the last three years for which figures are available.

Mrs. Currie: Following is the information requested:

(b) Mid-year estimates of population 1984, 1985 and 1986 (Office of Population Censuses and Surveys).

Notes:

1. Expenditure on family practitioner services is excluded: such expenditure is accounted for by family practitioner committees (FPCs) and cannot strictly be attributed to particular regions. However, prior to 1 April 1985 many of the health districts within each region had an associated FPC and those districts' total expenditure for 1984-85 included small, not separately identifiable elements relating to FPC administrative expenses.
2. The population figures used make no allowance for people resident in one region who receive treatment in another or for differences in morbidity and age/sex structure of particular populations.

Rental Purchase Schemes

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his Department's policy on meeting the full cost of weekly payments for the purchase of housing under rental purchase schemes, including capital, assuming all other factors within the housing benefit scheme justify that level of payment.

Mr. Portillo: Payments under rental purchase schemes, including payments of capital, have been eligible for help through housing benefit since the introduction of the scheme in 1982. It is for local authorities to decide on the level of weekly rent (including payments under a rental purchase agreement) which should be taken into account in calculating entitlement to housing benefit but we expect local authorities to use their powers under the housing benefit regulations to restrict benefit if the level of the payment is unreasonable in a particular case. We understand that some local authorities have exercised these powers to restrict benefit to rental purchasers.

The arrangements for helping rental purchasers with their housing costs differ from the arrangements for other people buying their home. Housing benefit is not available for owner-occupiers' mortgage payments. For people who are buying their home with a mortgage and who are not in full-time employment help with mortgage interest payments is available through supplementary benefit but capital repayments are not eligible for assistance. These arrangements will be carried forward in the income support scheme to be introduced in April 1988. In the light of concern about the level of some rental purchase payments and the need to ensure that help given to rental purchasers is fair in comparison with the assistance given to other people buying their homes we are currently reviewing the arrangements for providing help with rental purchase payments.

Mersey RHA

Mr. Butler: to ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the percentage change in the number of day cases in the Mersey regional health authority between 1978 and the latest available year.

Mrs. Currie: Between 1978 and 1986 the number of day cases treated in Mersey region increased by 89·3 per cent., from 41,787 to 79,098.

Hospital Beds

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the recommended level of medical beds in the North Staffordshire district hospital authority hospital complex; and what the actual number was on 8 January.

Mrs. Currie: Decisions on the level of provision of medical beds, as for all specialties, are a matter for regional and district health authorities. For further information the hon. Member may therefore care to write to the chairman of North Staffordshire district health authority. The latest information held centrally on the average daily available beds in North Staffordshire health authority is given in the table.

Social Security Appeals

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average time being taken for the hearing of appeals by social security appeal tribunals (a) nationally and (b) in Preston.

Mr. Portillo: The national administrative statistics for social security appeal tribunals, which are the source for average durations between the lodging of appeals and hearing, are not disaggregated for areas smaller than a social security region.

In Great Britain for the quarter ending 31 March 1987 (the latest available figures), the average time taken between lodgement and hearing of an appeal was 18·2 weeks. In north western region for the same period, the average time taken between lodgement and hearing was 16·5 weeks.

Hospital Travel Costs (Cornwall)

Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give details of increased claims for his Department's assistance on travel to hospital in Cornwall since the Cornwall hospital car service was abolished at the end of November 1987.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that this information is not held centrally.

Schoolchildren (Diet)

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has concerning the school campaign for reaction against meat; if the advice given to schoolchildren not to eat meat has been considered by his Department in relation to any advice he may give concerning the diet of schoolchildren; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: I understand that this is a Vegetarian Society campaign aimed at schoolchildren, but I am awaiting details from the society. The Department's medical advisers make no specific recommendation that schoolchildren should or should not eat meat. However, they advise that meat is an important source of many nutrients and that people who choose not to eat meat should take particular care that their diet compensates for any resultant imbalance.

Infant Mortality

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the underlying causes of cot deaths in England and Wales in 1985 and 1986 where sudden infant death is not the underlying cause of death.

Mrs. Currie: The table shows the underlying cause of death (excluding sudden infant death syndrome) for deaths under one year of age where cot death or a similar term was mentioned on the death certificate for England and Wales for 1985 and 1986.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many housing benefit claimants have had their benefit reduced by non-dependant deductions over the past year; and what this represents as a percentage of the total of housing benefit claimants;

(2) if he will estimate the total number of non-dependants in respect of whom reductions of housing benefit are currently being made.

Mr. Portillo: Figures are not available either for the total number of housing benefit claimants or for the number affected by the non-dependant deduction provisions. The available information shows that, as at autumn 1986, 710,000 housing benefit recipients had a non-dependant deduction made in respect of one or more non-dependants. This represents 10 per cent. of the total number of housing benefit recipients.

Information on the number of non-dependants in respect of whom reductions of housing benefit are being made is not available in full. In 1986 the total number of non-dependants for whom reductions were made in certificated housing benefit cases was 370,000, but I regret that no information is available in this form for standard housing benefit.

Income Support Scheme

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many claimants, and what percentage of total claimants, will be eligible for transitional payments under the income support scheme at the Huyton and St. Helens offices of his Department.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that this information is not available.

Operations (Costs)

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the latest estimate available to him of the cost of the following operations in (a) National Health Service hospitals and (b) private hospitals in England for (i) hysterectomy, (ii) tonsillectomy, (iii) hernia, (iv) hip replacement, (v) heart by-pass and (vi) varicose veins.

Mrs. Currie: A study carried out by the Department in 1982 found that the average costs of a hysterectomy and herniotomy in a sample of NHS and private hospitals were approximately as follows (in current prices):

	NHS hospitals £	Private hospitals £
Hysterectomy	1,200	1,800
Herniotomy	650	890

The estimates we have for the other operations listed apply to NHS hospitals only and are as follows (in current prices):

	Cost per case £
Hip replacement	3,300	based on estimate made in 1984
Heart by pass	3,300	study by Trent Region 1987

All these figures should be treated as broad approximations only. Clinical practices may have changed since the estimates were made. In particular, cost per case treated has been falling over recent years due to a steady fall in the average length of in-patients stay.

National Health Service Management Board

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services on what dates during the last 12 months the National Health Service Management Board met; and on each occasion what were the principal items discussed.

Mr. Newton: Over the last 12 months the NHS Management Board has met on 16 occasions. Details of the board's agenda and deliberations are not made public.

Dental and Ophthalmic Services

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what percentage of the total cost of general dental service treatment was derived from patient charges in each of the years 1978 to 1986 inclusive;

(2) what percentage of the total cost of National Health Service ophthalmic services was derived from patient charges in each of the years 1978 to 1986 inclusive.

Mrs. Currie: The information requested is available only in relation to financial years and is set out in the table.

Percentage of total cost of services met by patients charges, England[1]

Year	General Dental services	General Optical services
1978-79	20	34
1979-80	21	31
1980-81	22	28

1985-86	30	[3]8
1986-87	30	—

Notes

[1] Figures rounded to nearest whole number.

[2] Charges fell as percentage of cost on account of arrears payments of fees to opticians.

[3] The supply of NHS spectacles was discontinued from this year for those who paid charges.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will increase the payment scale of National Health Service dentures to ensure that elderly people can be provided with well-fitting, good quality dentures.

Mrs. Currie: Under their NHS terms of service general dental practitioners must supply dentures which fit properly and which are made of first-class quality materials, fit for their purpose. The fees payable are reviewed regularly to ensure that dentists are remunerated sufficiently to meet these requirements for patients of any age.

Meningitis

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many cases of meningitis were declared in each region during the years 1984 to 1987 inclusive.

Mrs. Currie: Meningitis may be caused by a number of different organisms. The hon. Member may be particularly interested in meningococcal meningitis: the table shows notifications of cases for this and for all forms of acute meningitis.

A = Acute meningitis (all forms).
M = Meningococcal Meningitis.

NHS (Patient Charges)

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the percentage of the total cost of the National Health Service derived from patient charges in each of the years 1978 to 1986 inclusive.

Mrs. Currie: I refer the hon. Member to table 11.1 (National Health Service Sources of Finance) in "Public Expenditure on the Social Services", Social Services Committee 1986-87 (HC 413).

Laxoberal

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the cost to the National Health Service of Laxoberal and its generic substitute separately in a full year.

Mr. Newton: The generic name for Laxoberal is sodium picosulphate elixir. Under the selected list scheme general practitioners are required to use this generic name on National Health Service prescriptions. In England in 1986, the latest year for which information is available, the net ingredient cost of prescriptions for sodium picosulphate elixir dispensed by retail pharmacists was some £55,000.

Information about hospital prescribing of this drug is not available.

Junior Hospital Doctors

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what regulations govern the maximum permitted working hours for junior hospital doctors; and if he has any plans to change these.

Mr. Newton: The terms and conditions of service of hospital medical and dental staff have been approved by the Secretary of State under the National Health Service (Remuneration and Conditions of Service) Regulations 1974. These prohibit regular rota commitments which require a junior doctor to be on duty on average for more than one night and one weekend in two. Health authorities have been asked to avoid, wherever possible, regular rota commitments more onerous than one in three. Officials are currently discussing with the profession's representatives the scope for further progress towards this objective.

Artificial Limbs

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if, pursuant to his answer of 21 January, Official Report, columns 847-8, he will describe how the Disablement Services Authority is strengthening controls on the quality of artificial limbs and their fitting; and if he will ensure that people attending at all limb fitting centres are told that complaints are welcome and that they will be pursued; and if he will give the number of complaints so far received by the authority.

Mr. Scott: These are matters for the Disablement Services Authority, to whom the right hon. Member should address his questions.

Waiting Lists (Yorkshire)

Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will provide a table of waiting lists in the Yorkshire regional health authority area for each year since 1979.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 19 January 1988]: The requested information is given in the table.

Patients on in-patient waiting in Yorkshire region

Month and year	Total cases
March 1979	53,540
September 1979	47,223

NHS Funding

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what increase in National Health Service funding would be necessary in the coming year to cover agreed pay rises and to allow over costs to rise by the national rate of inflation; and what additional amount would be needed to cover pay rises from the current year which were not fully funded.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 26 January 1988]: Health authorities plan on the assumption that pay and price increases must be met from within the total resources available to them. It is too early to predict the level of pay inflation in 1988-89. The Government will, however, continue to assess carefully the cost of NHS pay awards and their implications for health authorities.

Pay awards in 1987-88 will add an estimated £620 million to health authority expenditure. Authorities have met these costs from allocations which have increased nationally by almost £980 million and from cash releasing cost improvements which this year are expected to yield £150 million.

AIDS

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will seek powers to give directions to holiday tour operations to include within tour brochures advice in relation to protection against AIDS, including that relating to obtaining medical treatment involving the use of blood, blood products and hypodermic syringes.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 26 January 1988]: The Department's health advice to those travelling overseas is at present being revised and will be issued in two new leaflets: "The Traveller's Guide to Health—Before You Go" (SA40) and "The Traveller's Guide to Health—While You Are Away" (SA41). These leaflets include advice on taking precautions against AIDS and refer to the risk associated with medical treatment requiring surgery, injections or blood transfusions. We are receiving excellent co-operation from travel agents' representatives in the distribution of these leaflets to their member agencies and we see no need for further powers.

NHS (Pay and Conditions)

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list all the agreements relating to pay and conditions in force in the National Health Service in (a) 1979 and (b) 1988, and if he will place copies, as well as a summary of each agreement's main terms and conditions, in the Library.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 26 January 1988]: I am arranging to place in the Library as much information as possible about current agreements on pay and terms and conditions of service of National Health Service staff. I regret that comparable information in respect of 1979 cannot be provided without incurring disproportionate cost.

Accident and Emergency Services (Greenwich)

Mrs. Rosie Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will take steps to ensure that there are sufficient beds and medical staff to enable accident and emergency cover at both Greenwich district hospital and the Brook hospital to be open 24 hours a day, 365 days a year.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 27 January 1988]: The services in question are the responsibility of Greenwich health authority. The authority has taken positive steps to ensure that accident and emergency cover at both the Brook and Greenwich district hospitals is provided round the clock. To that end it has, for example, stepped up specialist nurse recruitment. The health authority is confident that the two departments will be able to cope with all but major emergencies. In the event of a major emergency, contingency plans have been made for other local hospitals, for example, Lewisham and Bexley to provide the necessary cover.

Written Answers to Questions

Friday 29 January 1988

HOME DEPARTMENT

Police Computers

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will publish the number of police officers for each year since 1979, who have been disciplined following complaints of misuse of information held on police computers.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information is not readily available, and could be obtained only with difficulty and at disproportionate cost.

Member's Question (Cost)

Mr. Knowles: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will estimate the cost in time and money of the preparation for an answer to the oral question put down by the hon. Member for Nottingham, North (Mr. Allen) for answer on 21 January, which was subsequently withdrawn by the hon. Member on 20 January.

Mr. Douglas Hurd: About two and a half hours, at a total cost of about £50.

Crime (Wolverhampton)

Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many crimes, in their various categories, took place in Wolverhampton during (a) 1979 and (b) 1987.

Mr. John Patten: I refer the hon. Member to the annual report of the chief constable of the West Midlands. The figures that are regularly collected centrally relate to entire police force areas; they are published each year in the Command Paper "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales" (tables 2.4. to 2.6 in the issue for 1986, Cm. 233). Copies of both publications are available in the Library. Figures for 1987 are not yet available.

Custodial Remand

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what restrictions are placed on the letters which can be received by people who have been remanded in custody to await sentence.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The receipt of letters is regulated by prison rule 34 and standing order 5B copies of which are available in the Library. The following is a summary of the main provisions concerning convicted prisoners awaiting sentence. One letter may be received on the prisoner's reception into prison and thereafter two a week, though governors have discretion to allow more. If a correspondent makes a practice of sending an excessive number of letters, the governor may return them. Correspondents who make a practice of sending overlong letters may be asked to confine future letters to four sides of paper and, if they ignore the request, the governor may return subsequent overlong letters. There is no restriction on the frequency or length of letters from a legal adviser in connection with legal proceedings to which a prisoner is a party. Letters may be stopped if they contain material which is prohibited for example, for security reasons.

Radio

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, whether he will publish a digest of the responses to the Green Paper "Radio: Choices and Opportunities".

Mr. Renton: No, but I am placing in the Library a list of all those who responded.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for what period of time the franchises for (a) independent commercial, (b) independent local and (c) community radio stations will extend.

Mr. Renton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to a similar question from him on 27 January at column 253.

Radio Authority

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what powers the radio authority will have to prevent advertising or sponsorship influencing the editorial output of stations.

Mr. Renton: We envisage that the legislative proposals which my right hon. Friend will bring before Parliament will include provision for the radio authority to issue a code of practice covering these matters, adherence to which will be a licence condition.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the radio authority will have regional offices to supervise and monitor community radio stations.

Mr. Renton: This will be a matter for the radio authority.

Radio (Advertising)

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what estimates he has of radio's projected share of national advertising revenue over the next five years;

(2) if he will publish any estimates he has of radio's projected share of national advertising revenue over the next five years.

Mr. Renton: Our plans for independent radio will leave it well placed to increase its share—currently just over 2 per cent.—of total national advertising. Projections of this sort depend on a variety of assumptions, and I have not yet seen one which takes account of our announcement on 19 January. But it was forecast last year that radio advertising revenue could be over £270 million by 1995.

Visitors (Visas)

Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has on the effects of the imposition of visas on admissions and the refusals of those seeking entry as visitors from India, Pakistan, Bangladesh, Nigeria and Ghana; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: The available information, comparing the first nine months of 1987 with the same period in 1986, for nationals of India, Pakistan, Bangladesh and Ghana is given in the following table. Corresponding figures are not given for Nigeria because visas were not introduced there until February 1987. Although there was no delay in issuing visitor visas, the numbers of visitors seeking admission fell—if at different rates—from each of the four countries between the first nine months of 1986 and 1987. Because of these falls and because of the limitations of the port refusal figures described in the second footnote to the table, refusal rates before and after visas were introduced cannot usefully be compared, particularly when it is too early to judge how far travel patterns have changed permanently. The Government will continue to monitor the situation.

Visitors admissions and refusals 1986-87

	Bangladesh	India	Pakistan	Ghana
Visitor admissions
January to September 1986	9,280	141,090	69,590	21,120
January to September 1987[1]	7,200	118,200	52,200	14,000
Initial refusals (all categories) at the ports
January to September 1986	1,180	3,450	2,070	1,440
January to September 1987[2]	1,080	660	390	480

n/a—Not available.

[1] Estimates based on admissions in January to August grossed up using the pattern of admissions in 1986.

[2] Almost entirely persons who had arrived before mid-October 1986 but who, due to backlogs at the ports, were not 'initially refused' until 1987 (these refusals cannot be differentiated in the figures); and persons without a visa, for which there was no equivalent category of refusal in 1986.

Royal Prerogative

Mr. Robert B. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will make a statement on recent allegations concerning the use of the royal prerogative in connection with security operations.

Mr. Douglas Hurd: Yes. At no time have the Goverment asserted that any of the alleged actions which have featured in recent newspaper articles could lawfully be done under the prerogative when they would otherwise be criminal offences.

Birmingham Pub Bombings

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether, following the decision of the Court of Appeal to uphold the convictions of the men in the Birmingham pub bombings case, he has any plans to recommend the exercise of the royal prerogative of mercy in their cases.

Mr. Hurd: I have noted the decision of the Court of Appeal and I understand that an application is to be made for leave to appeal to the House of Lords. Where, following a reference by me, the Court of Appeal has considered the issues at length, I would not think it right to intervene in the absence of any indication from the courts that I should consider doing so.

ENVIRONMENT

Lambeth (Rate Capping)

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will modify the proposed rate limitations for Lambeth in the light of representations made to him.

Mr. Chope: My right hon. Friend is considering the representations made to him by Lambeth and other authorities on the maximum rates he has proposed for 1988-89, and will reach a view shortly.

Portable Antiquities

Mr. Cormack: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes to publish his consultative document on portable antiquities.

Mr. Moynihan: Very soon.

Berkshire Structure Plan

Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to publish his decisions relating to the review of the Berkshire structure plan.

Mrs. Roe: My right hon. Friend published his modifications to the submitted replacement structure plan for Berkshire yesterday.

PSA and Crown Suppliers

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met the controller of the Crown Suppliers; and if he will make a statement on what was discussed.

Mr. Chope: Ministers meet the controller of the Crown Suppliers whenever they need to do so in connection with the management of his business.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

AIDS

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the implications for medical aid to developing countries of the recent evidence showing that AIDS may be spread through a mother's milk.

Mr. Eggar: Breast feeding has important health benefits for mothers and children in developing countries. The role of breast milk in HIV transmission is not fully understood. The World Health Organisation has considered the issue with care and advises that for the present breast feeding should continue to be promoted and supported. I have placed a copy of the WHO statement on this subject in the Library of the House.

Population Projects

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list in the Official Report the organisations which requested assistance with the eight population projects or projects with a population component on which preparatory work was in hand on 31 December 1987; and if he will list the date on which each request was received.

Mr. Eggar: My hon. Friend the Minister for Overseas Development will write to the hon. Member shortly.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Blair Allison and Co.

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Attorney-General what action has been taken to recover legal aid monies paid from public funds to Messrs. Blair Allison and Co. when they were acting as uncertificated solicitors.

The Attorney-General: The legal aid area office in Birmingham is looking into the matter. I will write to the hon. Member when those inquiries are complete.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Schools (Discipline)

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he has taken to monitor the growth of violence in schools and the number of attacks on teachers; and what have been the results.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Battersea (Mr. Bowis) on 11 January at column 53.

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received seeking the establishment of an inquiry into the issues of discipline in schools and violence against teachers; and what response he has made.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Professional Association of Teachers has written to my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister asking her to establish a commission of inquiry into discipline in schools throughout the United Kingdom. The Government are still considering the association's proposal.

Schoolchildren (Benefits)

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many means-tested schemes are run by his Department; if he will give in tabular form details of the number of children claiming such benefits; and if he will give comparable data for 1979.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Department is responsible for the assisted places scheme and for the music and ballet scheme, both of which came into operation in September 1981. The number of pupils claiming fee remission in the academic year 1986-87 was as follows:

	Number of pupils
Assisted places scheme	22,853
Music and ballet scheme	496

Local education authorities operate their own schemes of assistance to pupils, for example, for school clothing, and are required to offer free school meals to certain pupils. The numbers receiving free school meals were:

	Number of pupils
October 1979	899,000
October 1986	1,144,000

Details of the take-up of other schemes run by local education authorities are not available.

Research Councils

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many directions under section 2 of the Science and Technology Act 1965 have been made to research councils in each of the last 10 years; and for each of the last four years what directions were given.

Mr. Jackson: I am not aware of any direction to a research council under section 2 of the Science and Technology Act 1965 in any of the last 10 years.

Teachers

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are the latest figures he has for the recruitment of teachers in Northumberland in the shortage subjects.

Mrs. Rumbold: There are no unfilled vacancies in Northumberland in the shortage subjects at present.

WALES

Health Authorities (Voluntary Aid)

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the total amount given by way of voluntary aid to each health authority in Wales during the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Peter Walker: The only information held centrally is that relating to donations and legacies in health authorities' income and expenditure trust funds accounts. Details for 1986-87 are given in the following table:

District Health Authority	Subscriptions donations and grants £000	Legacies £000	Total £000
Clwyd	217	89	306
East Dyfed	236	38	274
Gwent	181	21	202
Gwynedd	205	28	233
Mid Glamorgan	294	42	336
Pembrokeshire	132	2	134
Powys	58	3	61
South Glamorgan	345	12	358
West Glamorgan	298	19	317
Wales	1,966	254	2,220

Figures may not add up due to rounding.

Cash Limits

Sir Raymond Gower: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he proposes to make any change to the cash limit on class XVII, vote 5.

Mr. Peter Walker: Yes. The cash limit on class XVII, vote 5 is being reduced by £900,000 to £213,669,000. This reduction will offset a corresponding increase to class XIII, vote 10 which will enable the Welsh Arts Council to complete the purchase of the Sherman theatre from University college, Cardiff.

DEFENCE

Defence Contracts (Prosecutions)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will name the individuals and their companies who were involved in the eight prosecutions since 1979 over defence contracts.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 18 January 1988]: Of the eight prosecutions since 1979 over defence contracts, successful cases were brought against the following employees or directors:

Norman Edward Gough
Margaret Storrar
Charles Richardson
William Galloway MacLeod
John Leslie Nixon
William John Cackett
Peter Riley Roberts
Neil Leslie Sayer
Duncan Graham McLachlan
John Keith Tooley
Malcolm Allen

No prosecutions were brought against the companies associated with the individuals mentioned above; therefore it would be inappropriate to give details of the companies.

Foxhunter

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what problems there have been over the procurement of software for Foxhunter.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 22 January 1988]: While some of the problems encountered during the development of the Foxhunter radar have been software-related, radars which operate to an agreed interim standard are now in service with the Royal Air Force. A programme of modifications which will achieve the required performance has been agreed, and negotiations with Marconi defence systems on a firm price contract to complete this work are nearing completion.

Blue Vixen Radar Programme

Dr. Hampson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what cost over-runs have been incurred with the Blue Vixen radar programme.

Mr. Sainsbury: None.

Nuclear Weapons (Targeting)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with his French counterpart about co-ordinated nuclear weapons targeting; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Details of the discussions between the British and French Governments on nuclear matters are confidential.

Royal Marines

Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for the future of R company, Royal Marines; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: All aspects of future Royal Navy and Royal Marines manpower are kept under consideration. No decisions have been taken in the case of R company Royal Marines.

Cruise Missiles

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the modernisation and deployment of cruise air-launched missiles will be discussed at the next summit meeting of Nato alliance leaders.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I expect a wide range of issues relating to the security of the NATO Alliance to be discussed, including the need to maintain modern and effective nuclear and conventional forces.

Property Services Agency

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what studies and reports have been and are being undertaken by his Department into the operation of the Property Services Agency from 1979 up to the latest date available.

Mr. Freeman: It is not the practice of the Ministry of Defence to conduct studies into the working of another Department. The Property Services Agency is required to examine its own operational efficiency. However, a number of initiatives have been taken jointly by MOD, PSA and central Departments to improve the effectiveness of the PSA's defence works and estate management. For example, in 1980 a review under Sir Derek Rayner studied the economy with which new building works were carried out and more recently the National Audit Office studied the control and management of the defence estate. These reports recommended further work which is being carried out jointly by MOD and PSA.

Royal Navy Task Group

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he plans next to deploy a Royal Navy task group beyond the NATO area.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I am glad to say that we plan to deploy a Royal Navy task group to the far east, Australia and Indian ocean area, leaving the United Kingdom in June. The group, which will be led by HMS Ark Royal, will represent the Royal Navy at the fleet review in Sydney to celebrate the Australian bicentenary. It will spend some six months on deployment, before returning to the United Kingdom in December. Detailed planning of the deployment is still in progress. Further details, including visits to particular countries by ships of the group, will be announced in due course.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Private Bills

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many private Bills have been laid before Parliament in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Wakeham: The numbers of private Bills (including personal Bills and substituted Bills) first deposited in each of the last 10 Sessions are as follows:

Session	Number of Bills
1987-88	29
1986-87	25
1985-86	36
1984-85	36
1983-84	32
1982-83	18
1981-82	32
1980-81	26
1979-80	28
1978-79	21

TRANSPORT

Severn Bridge

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what his estimate is in current cost terms of the aggregate revenue specified as recoverable under the Severn Bridge Tolls Act 1965 between 1988 and 2005;

(2) if, pursuant to his answer of 14 December 1987, Official Report, columns 421-2, he will show the calculations by which he derives the need for tolls on the Severn bridge to rise by about 70 per cent. and be maintained in real terms to achieve the objective set out in the Severn Bridge Tolls Act 1965.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: At current toll levels, updated in line with a low rate of inflation, revenue in the period 1988-2005 is estimated to be about £230 million to £260 million depending on assumptions about the rate of traffic growth. The debt of £77 million at the end of the 1986-87 financial year is estimated to rise by the end of that period, because of continuing annual deficits, to between £270 million and £310 million.

A 70 per cent. tolls increase introduced immediately and maintained in real terms should, assuming high traffic growth and low inflation, enable debt to be eliminated by about the end of the period of 40 years specified in the Severn Bridge Tolls Act 1965.

Carlton PSV Limited

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will make a statement on the safety record of Carlton PSV Limited, following its acquisition of the Yelloway and SVT fleets;

(2) if he will set up an inquiry into the safety record at Carlton PSV Limited.

Mr. David Mitchell: The safety record of PSV operators is a matter for the traffic commissioners. I understand that Carlton PSV Limited does not hold an operator's licence in its own right. In June 1987 the North-Westerm traffic commissioner took action against Yelloways' licence, reducing the number of vehicles it could operate from 50 to 35.

Mersey Tunnels

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what is the current level of capital debt on the Mersey tunnels;

(2) what was the cost of operating the Mersey tunnels in the latest available year.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The passenger transport authority's published account for 1986-87 show that at the end of the financial year debt was £108·9 million and operating expenses £6·15 million.

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the toll income from the Mersey tunnels over the last five available yars.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The published accounts show that the annual toll income has been as follows:

	£ million
1982-83	8·19
1983-84	8·15
1984-85	8·03
1985-86	8·13
1986-87	10·04

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what were the debt charges payable on the Mersey tunnels over the last five available years.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The published accounts show that the debt charges in each year were as follows:

	£ million
1982-83	9·56
1983-84	9·62
1984-85	8·69
1985-86	10·36
1986-87	13·64

Pensioners (Travel Passes)

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will seek powers to enable him to compel London boroughs to issue new travel passes to pensioners from 1 April; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: No. Adequate safeguards exist in the London Regional Transport Act 1984, which provides a reserve free travel scheme to come into effect in any year that the London local authorities fail to reach agreement on a satisfactory uniform concessionary travel scheme for pensioners and disabled people. I am pleased to see that for the next two years the London local authorities have reached agreement on the continuance of the present voluntary arrangements. The associated reissue of passes to pensioners is an administrative matter for LRT.

A358 (Speed Limit)

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to respond to the application from Somerset county council for a 40 mph speed limit on the A358 Cross Keys to Pen Elm section.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: An application has not yet been received.

Morningside (Railway Line)

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the original source of the information given by officials of his Department that the railway line through Morningside was maintained only to freight standard; when and how the error was discovered; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: When providing the draft of a reply to a letter in November 1987 an official misread the description of the status of the railway line through Morningside and thought that it was only maintained to freight standards. This does not imply a lower standard of maintenance but that certain signalling requirements, which are applicable to passenger railways, are not necessarily provided. The error was discovered last week when a newspaper reporter, who had been in touch with British Railways, challenged the statement in the letter. The Morningside line, although not at present regularly used by passenger trains, is nevertheless signalled and maintained to passenger standards.

Nuclear Material (Transportation)

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he takes to monitor the quality of railway track supporting trains carrying nuclear material; and if he will make it his policy to request British Rail to upgrade such track.

Mr. David Mitchell: Once a railway is opened the railway operator has the responsibility of maintaining the track to a standard fit for the traffic it has to bear; there are no statutory powers available to require the operator to make any improvements. The measure of his performance in meeting this responsibility forms part of the analysis in the "Annual Report on the Safety of Railways in Great Britain", copies of which are in the Library. It is not intended to take special steps to monitor the quality of track for any particular traffic.

Motor Cyclists

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many motor cyclists are killed or injured on Britain's roads; and what is the casualty rate for motor cycles and for cars.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The casualty rate for motor cycle users is 14 times that for car users.

Motor cyclists are 40 times more likely to be killed or seriously injured than car drivers.

Some 43 per cent. of motor cycle rider casualties are aged 16 to 19.

In 1986, the latest year for which figures are available, 52,280 people were killed or injured on two-wheeled motor vehicles in Great Britain. This is a reduction of 26·2 per cent. on 1980.

The overall casualty rate for two-wheeled motor vehicles is down by 18·4 per cent. to 977 per 100 million vehicle kilometres. A total of 10,311 of the casualties in 1986 were on mopeds and 41,969 were on motor cycles (including scooters). The casualty rate for car users is 65·66 casualties per 100 million vehicle kilometres, a reduction of 9·7 per cent. on 1980.

In order to obtain a clearer picture of the nature and distribution of accidents involving two-wheeled motor vehicles the Transport and Road Research Laboratory is undertaking a study of the accident experience of a random sample of 10,000 riders. This work forms part of a wider TRRL research programme aimed at developing methodology for identifying those groups of the riding population most at risk and subsequent driving techniques to reduce their risk.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the effect of the Transport Act 1981 on the numbers of motorcyclists taking training and the on-road test; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Transport Act 1981 sought to encourage learner riders to take proper training by introducing a two-part test for motor cyclists, part 1 being a new off-road test of machine handling skills. The Act also imposed a two-year limit on provisional motorcycle licences with a two year's ban if both parts of the test had not been passed in the two years.

The proportion of new riders taking training has risen from about 10 per cent. in 1980 to about 30 per cent. in 1986. It is estimated that up to 80,000 new riders each year take to the road without any formal instruction, supervision or training. The two-year provisional licence restriction has failed to increase the proportion of provisional licence holders who take and pass the test. The total passing the test each year has fallen by about 50 per cent. Of those who take the test 75 per cent. now pass compared with 55 per cent. before the 1981 Act.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

South Africa

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his progress in securing the South African Government's grant of clemency in relation to the Sharpeville Six.

Mrs. Chalker: In February 1986, Her Majesty's ambassador expressed to the South African Government our concern at the death sentences and at allegations that some of the accused had been tortured. After their appeals had been dismissed last December, the members of the European Community made a collective appeal for clemency. We also supported a statement issued on behalf of the United Nations Security Council. We have since reiterated our concern direct to the South African Government.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he, or any of the Ministers in his Department, have any plans to seek to visit refugee camps or townships of the Republic of South Africa so as to ascertain the conditions prevailing there; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: No ministerial visits to South Africa are at present planned.

Central America Peace Summit

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether Her Majesty's Government support the final agreement reached at the Central America peace summit held over the weekend of 16 and 17 January in San Jose, Costa Rica, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Yes. We and our European Community partners issued a statement on 26 January supporting the declaration signed by the Central American Presidents and urging them to fulfil all their outstanding obligations under the Guatemala peace agreement unconditionally and without delay.

Japan (Nuclear Power Discussions)

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, on his recent trip to Japan, he discussed with members of the Government or nuclear industry (a) the transport of plutonium from the United Kingdom to Japan, (b) the Japanese contract for the use of the British Nuclear Fuels Limited thermal oxide reprocessing plant for reprocessing light water reactor fuel at Sellafield, (c) the current operational and safety status of the Tokai Mura British-designed Magnox nuclear plant, (d) the safeguarding of Japanese plutonium returned to Japan from Sellafield or (e) other nuclear energy.

Mr. Eggar: No.

Nuclear Test Ban

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs in regard to the current United States-Soviet discussions in Geneva on nuclear testing and verification of a nuclear test ban, what information he has on which specific verification problems are understood to exist; and when he expects the United Kingdom to join the negotiations.

Mr. Eggar: The current round of United States/Soviet negotiations is aimed at agreeing verification methods to allow ratification of the threshold test ban and peaceful nuclear explosions treaties. The difficulty is that of verifying that a nuclear test has not exceeded the 150 kilotons threshold. The verification problems associated with a comprehensive test ban are even more intractable since their solution demands the detection and identification of nuclear tests of very low yield. The United Kingdom does not participate in the current negotiations which are concerned with two bilateral treaties to which the United Kingdom is not a party; nor will we take a decision on future participation until the prospects for a successful outcome are clearer.

Sellafield

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has concerning the attempts by the Energy Research and Technology Committee of the European Parliament to obtain from the European Commission documentation of safeguards facility attachments for Sellafield's reprocessing line, for EURATOM safeguards inspectors.

Mr. Eggar: We are aware of the Committee's interest in obtaining from the Commission details of safeguards arrangements at Sellafield. I understand that the Committee is consulting the European Parliament's Committee on Legal Affairs following the Commission's refusal to disclose details of these arrangements.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Work Force (Religious Denominations)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what percentage of workers in Harland and Wolff, Shorts, the fire service, the health and social services and the ambulance service, and Mackies and Ford automobile, respectively, are (a) Catholic and (b) Protestant.

Mr. Viggers: We do not have all the information requested. The religious composition of work forces is available only in respect of the organisations listed, and at the dates specified.

Organisation	Percentage Catholic	Percentage Protestant	Date	Source
Shorts	10	87	November 1987	Fair Employment Agency
Fire Authority (full-time firemen only)	16	82	1980	Fair Employment Agency (1984)
Southern Area Health Board	47	49	1984	Fair Employment Agency Report (1986)
Ambulance Service	24	74	1983	Fair Employment Agency Report (1985)
Ford Motor Company	38	57	May 1987	Company Report (1987)

Cars and Vans (Imports)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what regulatory restrictions apply to the importation of (a) new cars and (b) new vans and other commercial type vehicles from the Irish Republic into Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 27 January 1988]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland makes regulations for the registration of imported vehicles and construction and use requirements for vehicles intended to be used on the roads in Northern Ireland.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

COCOM

Mr. Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what consultations he has had with the European Commission regarding COCOM; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: I have not had any consultations with the European Commission regarding COCOM.

Self-Regulating Organisations

Mr. Warren: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on progress in the establishment of the self-regulating organisations to be established under the Financial Services Act.

Mr. Maude: The Securities and Investments Board has now recognised three self-regulating organisations under the Financial Services Act 1986. These are the Financial Intermediaries, Managers and Brokers Regulatory Association (recognised on 14 December 1987), the Association of Futures Brokers and Dealers (recognised on 13 January 1988) and the Investment Management Regulatory Association (recognised on 27 January 1988). Two other self-regulating organisations, the Securities Association and the Life Assurance and Unit Trust Regulatory Organisation, have applied to the board for recognition. These applications are still being considered.

THE ARTS

Glasgow

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he plans to visit any cultural establishments in Glasgow in the near future.

Mr. Luce: I have no plans to visit Glasgow in the near future but hope to have the opportunity to do so, in view of the city's preparations for its year as European City of Culture in 1990.

SCOTLAND

Renal Units

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the recommended ratio of nursing staff to patients in renal units; and what the ratio is at Glasgow royal infirmary.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: There is no nationally recommended ratio of nursing staff to patients in renal units in Scotland. The ratio of nursing staff to patients receiving dialysis within the renal unit at Glasgow royal infirmary is 8·6:38. In addition, two nurses are employed to assist the 67 patients receiving continuous ambulatory peritoneal dialysis, who attend the unit as out-patients.

Health Board General Managers (Correspondence)

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer in the Official Report, 19 January, column 665, if the Scottish Home and Health Department's letter, dated 11 December 1987 and issued over the signature of Hugh Morison to health board general managers, was intended to be a legally binding directive to health boards under the terms of the National Health Service (Scotland) Act (1978) section 2.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Under section 2 of the National Health Service (Scotland) Act 1978 health boards are appointed by the Secretary of State to act on his behalf in administering the Health Service. They are therefore under an obligation to act in accordance with Government policy and to give effect to instructions issued by the Secretary of State. The letter of 11 December from the Scottish Home and Health Department sets out firm instructions by the Secretary of State on action boards are to take, and they are obliged to implement them.

Gualin National Nature Reserve

Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether the Nature Conservancy Council has now negotiated a management agreement with the owners of Gualin national nature reserve in Sutherland to protect it from damage caused by sporting activities; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 21 January 1988]: I understand that the Nature Conservancy Council concluded a nature reserve agreement in 1971 with the then owner of Gualin estate. The council has obtained a legal opinion on the terms of that agreement which states that there is a right of vehicular access for estate purposes including the exercise of fishing rights by the present owners. The council has been unable to negotiate any change to that agreement. I understand that the owners of the estate have applied for planning permission to construct an access route within the Gualin national nature reserve, and that the council has indicated that it is willing, subject to planning permission being granted, to consider financial assistance towards the cost of constructing the route as a means of reducing the prospect of damage to the special interest of the reserve.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Thames Health Regions

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will list the total expenditure on capital projects in each of the four Thames health regions in each of the last three years for which figures are available; (2) if he will list the total annual expenditure of each of the four Thames health regions in each of the last three years for which figures are available.

Mrs. Currie: Following is the information requested:

Hospital and Community Health Services[1] Total Expenditure

1986-87	650;071	54,172	704,243

[1] Includes ambulance, blood transfusion and other services.
Source: Annual accounts of regional and district health authorities comprising the four Thames regions.
Note: Expenditure on family practitioner services is excluded: such expenditure is accounted for by family practitioner committees (FPCs) and cannot strictly be attributed to particular regions. However, prior to 1 April 1985 many of the district health authorities within each region had an associated FPC and those authorities' expenditure totals for 1984-85 include small elements relating to FPC administrative expenses which are not separately identifiable.

Income Support Scheme

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many claimants will be eligible for transitional payments under the income support scheme throughout the United Kingdom.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is not available for Northern Ireland. The estimated number of claimants in Great Britain who will receive a transitional addition is 1.4 million.

Infant Mortality

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the total numbers of sudden infant deaths in 1985 and 1986 and the numbers which occurred at ages (a) under one month, (b) one month, (c) two months, (d) three months, (e) four months, (f) five months and (g) six to 11 months.

Mrs. Currie: The information is given in the table.

Numbers of deaths under one year of age with any mention of cot death, sudden infant death syndrome or similar term on the death certificate, by age at death
England and Wales
1985 and 1986 (provisional)

Age at death	1985	1986
Total under one year	1,301	1,506
Under one month	64	85
One month but under two months	233	279
Two months but under three months	317	332
Three months but under four months	242	269
Four months but under five months	149	180
Five months but under six months	104	117
Six months but under one year	192	244

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the number of neonatal, post neonatal and infant deaths among male, female and all babies in England and Wales and the rate per 1,000 live births in 1985 and 1986.

Mrs. Currie: The information is given in the table.

Neonatal, post neonatal and infant mortality by sex (numbers and rates)
England and Wales
1985 and 1986

	Neonatal deaths		Post neonatal deaths		Infant deaths
	Number	[1]Rate	Number	[1]Rate	Number	[1]Rate
1985
Male	2,005	6·0	1,505	4·5	3,510	10·4
Female	1,526	4·8	1,105	3·5	2,631	8·2
Total	3,531	5·4	2,610	4·0	6,141	9·4
1986
Male	2,031	6·0	1,693	5·0	3,724	11·0

Total	3,489	5·3	2,824	4·3	6,313	9·6

[1] Rate per 1,000 live births.
Neonatal deaths: deaths in the first 28 days of life (27 completed days).
Postneonatal deaths: deaths at ages 28 days and over, but under one year.
Infant deaths: deaths at ages under one year.

Abortions

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what was the most commonly mentioned ground upon which abortion was performed after 18 weeks gestation in England and Wales in the latest year for which figures are available; and what percentage of all abortions after 18 weeks falls into this category;

(2) what was the most frequently noted number of previous children had by women upon whom abortions were performed after 18 weeks in England and Wales in the latest year for which figures are available; and what percentage of all abortions after 18 weeks falls into this category;

(3) what was the most commonly noted age group of women upon whom abortions were performed after 18 weeks in England and Wales in the latest year for which figures are available; and what percentage of all abortions after 18 weeks falls into this category;

(4) what was the most commonly noted marital status of women upon whom abortions after 18 weeks were performed in England and Wales in the latest year for which figures are available; and what percentage of all abortions after 18 weeks falls into this category;

(5) what was the most commonly noted category of premises in which abortions were performed after 18 weeks in England and Wales in the latest year for which figures are available; and what percentage of all abortions after 18 weeks was performed in such premises.

Mr. Newton: The information is given in the table.

Notifications of abortions carried out under the Abortion Act 1967 at gestation 18 completed weeks and over most common age group, marital status, number of previous children, category of premises and statutory grounds. Numbers and percentages. England and Wales, residents and non-residents. 1986

	Number	Percentage of total
Total at 18 completed weeks and over	8,276	100·0
Age group 20-24 years	2·742	33·1
Marital status: single	6,123	74·0
Number of previous live or stillborn children: 0	5,770	69·7
Category of premises: non-NHS	7,097	85·8
Statutory grounds: 2 (alone)[1]	7,270	87·8

[1] Grounds 2: the continuance of the pregnancy would involve risk of injury to the physical or mental health of the pregnant woman greater than if the pregnancy were terminated.

Residential Care

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when Lady Wagner's review of residential care for the elderly was begun; and what factors are preventing its publication before January 1989.

Mrs. Currie: When the appointment of Lady Wagner as chairman of the review of residential care was announced by the National Institute for Social Work in December 1985 it was stated that the review would cover residential care for people of all ages and was expected to be completed in two years. The timing of the publication of the report is a matter for the institute and Lady Wagner but we understand it is planned for the near future.

Registered Homes Act 1984

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to publish the national report of his Department's Social Services Inspectorate on the application of the Registered Homes Act 1984.

Mrs. Currie: We expect the report to be published shortly.

Private Residential and Nursing Homes

Mr. Thornton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on progress on the establishment of national standards governing private residential and nursing homes and on the provision of a national inspectorate for such homes.

Mrs. Currie: The Residential Care Homes Regulations 1984 and the Nursing Homes and Mental Nursing Homes Regulations 1984 set out the facilities and services to be provided in these homes. An independent working party convened by the Centre for Policy on Ageing produced in the same year a code of practice for residential care, "Home Life", which was endorsed by my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Social Services and for Wales. The following year the National Association of Health Authorities published a handbook for health authorities, "Registration and Inspection of Nursing Homes". Any changes in the existing arrangements for registration and inspection would need to take account of what is said about homes in the reports expected shortly of Lady Wagner's review of residential care, Sir Roy Griffiths' overview of community care and the Social Services Inspectorate's report on the implementation of the Registered Homes Act 1984.

Medical Laboratory Scientific Officers

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to respond to the letter dated 25 September 1987 from the assistant general secretary of the Association of Scientific, Technical and Managerial Staffs asking him to meet a delegation of hon. Members to discuss the situation of medical laboratory scientific officers employed in the National Health Service.

Mrs. Currie: It would have been inappropriate for Ministers to meet ASTMS during the recent pay negotiations. I understand that pay increases for 1987-88 were settled on 16 November 1987 and the management side agreed to put forward proposals for a comprehensive grade restructuring for medical laboratory scientific officers as soon as possible. As these points were the major agenda items it was unclear, in the absence of further correspondence whether the union wished to pursue their request for a meeting.

Eastbourne Conference

Mr. Gow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) whether he will list those who were present at the meeting attended by the Minister for Health at the Grand hotel, Eastbourne, on 20 January; and those who stayed at the Grand hotel at public expense for the night of either 19 or 20 January;

(2) which Ministers in his Department attended a meeting at the Grand hotel, Eastbourne, on 20 January; on what date was the date and place of that meeting decided and by whom; and what was the total cost to public funds of that meeting.

Mr. Moore: The conference held in Eastbourne on 20 January was arranged last year by my officials and the Inter-Regional Secretariat so that Health Ministers could discuss a wide range of official business with the fourteen RHA chairmen and other NHS representatives. My right hon. Friend the Minister for Health, my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health and Social Security and I attended the meeting along with Sir Roy Griffiths in his capacity as deputy chairman of the NHS Management Board. Thirty-two of the 35 people attending the conference stayed overnight in Eastbourne on 19 January. The total cost of the conference is estimated to be about £4,000.

Medicines (Licence Exemption Applications)

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average length of time taken in each of the last three years by his Department to process applications made under article 3 of the Medicines (Exemption from Licences) (Special and Transitional Cases) Order 1971 as extended by article 3 of the Medicines (Exemptions from Licences) (Manufacture and Assembly Temporary Provisions) Order 1972.

Mr. Newton: The average length of time taken to process applications under this order for the last three years is as follows:

	Weeks
1985	6
1986	7
1987	10

Food Imports (Radioactivity)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what food imports have been refused entry to the United Kingdom since 26 April 1986 due to levels of radioactivity above the permitted limit; what was their country of origin; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: Central records on the monitoring of food imports by port health authorities for radiation contamination following the Chernobyl nuclear accident show that consignments of dried prunes from Romania, and hazelnuts, laurel bay leaves, oregano and sage from Turkey have exceeded maximum permitted levels. All consignments concerned have been refused entry into the United Kingdom.

Port health authorities are continuing to monitor food imports from countries outside the European Community in accordance with the latest European Council regulation (EEC No. 3955/87 of 22 December 1987).

Trichloro Ethylene

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many cases of deaths and injuries have been reported in each of the last 10 years from the effects of the use of trichloro ethylene in industry.

Mr. Nicholls: I have been ask to reply.

The information available is shown in the table. The figures given up to and including 1985-86 are for incidents of gassings caused by trichloro ethylene in factory premises which have been notified to the Health and Safety Executive's Factory Inspectorate and medically confirmed by the Employment Medical Advisory Service. For 1986-87 the numbers are for all persons affected by accidental exposure to trichloro ethylene reported under the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1985 (RIDDOR).

Persons affected by exposure to trichloroethylene

Year	Number of cases	Of which fatal
1977	14	0
1978	10	0
1980	7	1
1981	4	0
1982 and first quarter of 1983[1]	4	0
1983-84	4	0
1984-85	1	0
1985-86	4	0
1986-87	[2]8	0

[1] From 1 April 1983 the statistics were kept by financial year rather than calendar year.
[2] Provisional.

Girocheques (North Tyneside)

Mr. Ted Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will take steps to eliminate the failure of Girocheques to reach claimants on a Saturday morning in North Tyneside, by moving the Thursday signing on to a Wednesday; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: I have been asked to reply.

I am naturally concerned about unemployed people not getting their benefit cheques in time for the weekend.

However, there have been no reported incidents of widespread delay in the North Tyneside area over recent months. In the case of delays being reported, we would approach the Post Office for improvement in its service where necessary. It is not practical for operational reasons to move Thursday signers to the earlier day of Wednesday.

District Health Authorities

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services by how much each district health authority in Nottinghamshire overspent in the last financial year; and what estimate he has of projected overspend in the current year.

Mrs. Currie: [holding answer 18 December 1987]: The following information is derived from the 1986-87 annual accounts of the district health authorities concerned. This shows the extent to which these districts relied on their accumulated balances to fund their total expenditure:

Health authority	Total available funds (excluding balances)	Total expenditure	Net addition to/(use of) balances
Bassetlaw	15,662	15,582	80
Central Nottinghamshire	50,699	51,508	(809)
Nottingham	145,631	146,129	(498)

The Trent regional health authority is responsible for monitoring its districts' income and expenditure under/overspending positions and the hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman of that authority who may be able to assist with the information required for the last financial year and the current year.

The Department does not routinely collect over/underspending information for individual district health authorities. Regular formal monitoring of the income and expenditure position of authorities is, however, to be introduced.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Income Tax

Mr. Higgins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table in the Official Report showing, as a percentage, the top marginal rates of tax on personal income, including as appropriate income tax, special contributions, supertax, surtax, surtax surcharge and investment income surcharge, levied since 1957-58 on individuals in the United Kingdom, showing the level of gross income, at both current and 1987 constant prices, assuming the income to be that of a married man with two children, at which the top marginal rate of tax is first applied and also showing the dates of changes in the top marginal rates.

Mr. Lawson: The information is given in the table:

Married man with two children (under 11)

	Top marginal rate of tax[1] on earned income		Gross earned income at which top marginal rate of tax first applied
			Current prices	1987-88 prices[2]

[1] 1957-58 to 1970-71: standard rate plus highest rate of surtax.
1971-72 to 1972-73: standard rate plus highest rate of surtax. The figures in brackets represent the top marginal rate of tax on investment income.
1973-74 to 1983-84: Highest rate of income tax. The figures in brackets represent the top marginal rate on investment income assuming a minimum at current prices of £2,000 of investment income 1973-74 to 1977-78; £2,250, 1978-79; £5,000, 1979-80; £5,500, 1980-81 to 1981-82; £6,250, 1982-83; £7,100, 1983-84.

Changes in tax rates apply from 6 April.

Dover Eastern Docks

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received since 1 October 1987 regarding queues of lorries at Dover eastern docks; whether such representations referred to manpower shortages in Her Majesty's Customs and Excise; what proposals he has to remedy the queuing; and if he would make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: No such representations have been received since 1 October 1987. Queues can build up from time to time due to peaking of traffic. The peaking can become acute in the late evening and early hours of the morning as many vehicles load during the day and use the night hours for the Channel crossing.

Significant changes in import and export documentation were introduced throughout the European Community on 1 January 1988. Problems experienced at Dover in early January due to errors or incorrect documentation are steadily being overcome.

Government Data Network

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if, pursuant to his answer of 18 December 1987, Official Report, column 847, he will publish estimates available to him on the value for money to be achieved from the Government data network.

Mr. Brooke: No. Value for money information will be available only after tenders are received and compared to the costs of alternatives. Tender details will be commercially confidential and will not be disclosed publicly.

Premium Bonds

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what have been the administrative costs of running the premium bond system in each of the last five years.

Mr. Lilley: The administrative costs of running the premium bond system were as follows:

Year to 31 March	£ million
1983	26·0
1984	23·7
1985	21·9
1986	21·0
1987	20·2

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many valid premium bonds there have been in the United Kingdom in each of the last five years.

Mr. Lilley: The number of valid premium bonds—including those held by people abroad, which are not recorded separately—was as follows:

At 31 March	Million
1983	1,586
1984	1,674
1985	1,768
1986	1,833
1987	1,916

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much prize money for premium bonds was not claimed in each of the last five years.

Mr. Lilley: The prize money not claimed as at November 1987 for prize draws was as follows:

Prize draws in year to 31 March	£
1983	511,000
1984	618,000
1985	808,000
1986	1,124,000
1987	1,637,000

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much money was paid out in prize money for premium bonds in each of the last five years.

Mr. Lilley: Premium bond prizes — including unclaimed prizes not yet paid out—were as follows:

Year to 31 March	£ million
1983	104·2
1984	110·2
1985	121·7
1986	135·0
1987	141·0

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much money the Treasury received from premium bonds, excluding prize money paid out and administrative costs, in the last five financial years.

Mr. Lilley: The total money received by the Treasury from premium bonds was as follows:

Year to 31 March	Total net investment £ million
1983	80
1984	88
1985	94
1986	65
1987	83

These figures take no account of prize money paid out or administrative costs.

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people in the United Kingdom owned premium bonds in each of the last five years.

Mr. Lilley: The number of premium bond holdings—including holdings by people abroad, which are not recorded separately—was as follows:

At 31 March	Million
1983	26·0
1984	24·8
1985	24·7
1986	24·6
1987	24·4

Inland Revenue (Reply-Paid Envelopes)

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the Inland Revenue's practice on the issue of business reply-paid envelopes with tax returns and other correspondence.

Mr. Norman Lamont: It has in the past been the practice to issue a business reply-paid envelope with all tax returns and with correspondence needing a reply. It has been decided to limit this practice with general effect from April 1988 to cases where payment of tax due is being requested (where the present first-class reply service will remain unchanged) and to a few other special circumstances. The resulting savings in 1988-89 are estimated at about £2 million.

Turtle (Rayleigh)

Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will indicate the whereabouts and state of health of the turtle, seized on 18 December 1987 under endangered species legislation by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise from Swallow nurseries, Rayleigh; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 18 January 1988]: I am writing to my hon. Friend, and will place a copy of the letter in the Library of the House.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Food Quality

Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if, in the light of the recent public analyst's report of a steady improvement in compliance with standards set for the quality of food, he will indicate what steps he is taking to ensure that a proper balance is being followed as between prosecution and written warnings for offences under current regulations.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I am not aware of the public analyst's report to which my hon. Friend has referred nor, therefore, of the conclusions which it makes. Enforcement of the current regulations on food quality standards is a matter for the local enforcement authorities and the courts; there is no statutory provision in them for the issue of written warnings.

Radiation

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he plans with farmers in areas affected by fall-out from Chernobyl concerning prospects for the current year.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I have no plans at present for any general discussions with farmers in these areas, but my Department is carrying out a number of research programmes including the assessment of the likely uptake of caesium 137 in upland vegetation this season and will be keeping farmers informed of the results of their work.

Rainfall Levels

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information concerning rainfall levels in the United Kingdom on 2 and 3 May 1986 was passed between the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the Meteorological Office; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: My Department was in close contact with the Meteorological Office in the initial stages following the Chernobyl accident when information on rainfall for the period including 2-3 May 1986 was used by us to help identify those areas most likely to be affected by significant radioactive deposition. Subsequently MAFF obtained information on actual deposition patterns from ground surveys of radioactive material deposited on vegetation commissioned from the Institute of Terrestrial Ecology and from its own monitoring. However, the Meteorological Office continued to provide information in relation to this period following further work up of data, at various times during 1986 and 1987.

Pigmeat

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much Danish pork and Danish bacon has been imported into Britain in the last 12 months.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Provisional figures for 1987 indicate that about 38,000 tonnes of pork and 128,000 tonnes of bacon were imported into Britain from Denmark.

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the subsidy per tonne on Danish port and Danish bacon.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The monetary compensatory amounts which are payable on imports into the United Kingdom from Denmark are currently £53·85 per tonne for pig carcases and £68·93 per tonne for bacon sides.

Radioactivity (Farm Restrictions)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the number of farms, the number of sheep and the area of land, in acres, under restriction in England as a result of radioactivity from the Chernobyl accident; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: About 116,000 acres with some 80,000 sheep on about 150 holdings are currently under restriction in England as a result of radioactivity from the Chernobyl accident.

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about current proposals to reform the common agricultural policy.

Mr. MacGregor: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer that I gave on 25 January, at columns 52-3, to my hon. Friend the Member for Wansdyke (Mr. Aspinwall).

Animal Welfare

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to give the proposed code of practice on horse markets and other sales legal status; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The Government are proposing to make an order on horse sales, which will lay down the basic requirements and will have the status of a statutory instrument made under the Animal Health Act 1981. In addition, we are proposing to issue a code of practice, which will be for guidance only, and which will not have any legal status.

Knackerries

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will place in the Library, copies of all correspondence to appropriate knackerries dealing with natural death in the restricted area of Cumbria from 20 June 1986 to date.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I refer the hon. Gentleman to my replies of 1 December and 10 December 1987 at columns 541-2 and 259 respectively. One knacker in Cumbria was given a consent to receive meat from one sheep from the restricted area on condition that it was not used for human or animal food.

Letters to slaughterhouses, livestock markets and showgrounds, advising them of the restrictions on movement and slaughter of sheep, were copied to all knackers in Cumbria.

I am placing copies of the consent and the letters in the Library of the House.

Bentonite

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research his ministry is undertaking on the use of bentonite to alleviate the problems of radioactive caesium in upland farms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Research initiated by my Department has identified the use of bentonite, applied to upland pasture or added to sheep and cattle feed, as one means of reducing radiocaesium levels in the animals concerned, but a practicable method of general application is not presently available.

Set-aside Scheme

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on how the EEC proposals for land set-aside will affect less-favoured areas.

Mr. MacGregor: The Council of Ministers is still considering the Commission's latest suggestions on the terms of a Community set-aside scheme. In discussions of those I am having careful regard to the interests of producers in less-favoured areas as well as those in other parts of the country.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Stevens: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether it is intended to change the cash limit on any departmental Vote for which he has responsibility.

Mr. MacGregor: Yes. Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, the cash limit for class IV, vote 5 (Departmental Research Advisory Services and Administration) will be increased by £900,000 from £206,219,000 to £207,119,000 to make provision for reduced appropriations in aid due to a delay in recovery of costs in the operation of the pesticides approvals scheme. The increase will be offset by a reduction of £900,000 to the cash limit on class IV, Vote 4 (Other Agricultural and Food Services, and Support for the Fishing Industry) from £142,676,000 to £141,776,000, reflecting a reduced requirement for grants for the encouragement of co-operation in agriculture and horticulture and will not therefore add to the planning total of public expenditure.

ENERGY

Gas Pipes

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how he ensures acceptable levels of public safety with regard to cast iron gas pipes susceptible to corrosion and fractures used by British Gas; what standards exist for systems of inspection, maintenance and repair of such pipes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: I have been asked to reply.

The responsibility for ensuring acceptable levels of public safety from cast-iron gas pipes lies with British Gas plc under the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974. The Health and Safety Executive is the enforcing authority.

EMPLOYMENT

NUM (President)

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to meet the president of the National Union of Mineworkers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: I have no such plans.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the percentage increase in (a) employment and (b) unemployment in each parliamentary constituency, grouped by region and county (i) each year since 1979, (ii) over the period since 1979 as a whole, (iii) from mid 1979 to mid 1986 and (iv) since mid 1986.

Mr. Cope: Figures of employment by constituency are available only from the censuses of employment in September 1981 and September 1984. Figures for unemployment by constituency are available only from June 1983 and are in the Library. I am sending the hon. Member the available information.

Special Employment Measures

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the currently estimated gross and net costs for each financial year since 1982-83 for the following special employments measures: (i) the community programme, (ii) the enterprise allowance scheme, (iii) the young workers scheme, (iv) community industry, (v) the job release scheme and (vi) the job splitting scheme.

Mr. Cope [pursuant to his reply 4 December 1987, c. 773-74]: I regret that there was an error in the table providing estimated gross costs for the employment measures. The gross costs of the enterprise allowance scheme (EAS) for 1983-84 and 1984-85 should be £23·2 million and £76·7 million and not £25 million and £79·6 million as given in the table.

Written Answers to Questions

Monday 1 February 1988

HOME DEPARTMENT

Police Computers

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) whether there are plans to upgrade the current police national computer link into a fully integrated network which would allow connections between any police computer on the network;

(2) if he will state the extent to which the new packet switched network for the police national computer will involve the linking of police computers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: Work is in hand to replace the current police national computer network by an X25 packet switched network which will be compliant with the Government Open Systems Interconnection Protocol (Wide Area Networks) standard. This network would provide a means of linking police computers.

Immigration (Inquiries)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if interpreters are available at all international airports in the United Kingdom to deal with immigration inquiries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: The immigration service employs eight full-time interpreters, all of whom are stationed at Heathrow. Between them they are able to offer interpretative facilities in seven languages. At the last count over 1,500 immigration officers and chief immigration officers were drawing qualifying allowances in 33 different languages. In addition, officers in charge at all ports are authorised to use hourly-paid interpreters when necessary, drawn from lists of suitable persons kept locally.

Mr. Hui Yat-Chi

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he decided to allow Mr. Hui Yat-Chi to remain in the United Kingdom; why he did not notify the hon. Member for Bradford, West of his decision; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: On 23 June 1987, I wrote to the hon. Member to advise him that Mr. Hui's immigration status was under investigation and said I would write to him again if it was decided to remove Mr. Hui from this country. In the event, inquiries by the immigration service established that Mr. Hui entered this country lawfully and was deemed to have indefinite leave to remain here. Mr. Hui's representatives were notified of this on 28 November 1987.

Crown Prerogative

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the issue to chief constables of a circular inviting them to apply to his Department for equipment denied to them by their respective police authorities was in exercise of power under prerogative of the Crown.

Mr. Hurd: The arrangements for the supply of equipment to chief officers of police set out in the circular were made in exercise of my powers which exist both under the Police Act 1964 and the royal prerogative. The Court of Appeal, in a unanimous judgment, has recently upheld the grounds on which I acted.

Firearm Certificates

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many holders of (a) shotgun licences and (b) firearms certificates there are in each Birmingham parliamentary constituency, by name, at the latest convenient date and in each of the preceding two years.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information available centrally on shotgun and firearm certificates on issue relates to police force areas and for 31 December 1986 is published in tables 2 and 4 of Home Office statistical bulletin issue 2/88, a copy of which is in the Library.

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the current arrangements for maintaining and regularly updating a register of shotgun licences and firearms certificates reported to the police as lost or stolen; how often such a list is circulated to police forces in England and Wales; and what arrangements are made in relation to ammunition reported stolen.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There is no register of shotgun and firearm certificates reported to the police as lost or stolen. Ammunition reported as stolen would, as is the case with firearms and shotguns, be placed on the police stolen property index.

Drink-Driving Offenders

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give details of the number of drink-driving offenders found guilty who are repeat offenders for the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The available information on findings of guilt for offences of driving, etc. with alcohol above the prescribed limit is published annually in "Offences Relating to Motor Vehicles, England and Wales, Supplementary Tables", Table 5 of the issue for 1986, copies of which are in the Library. Information on repeated convictions for these offences is not available.

Radio

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the licences for independent trust radio and community radio stations will be assigned by competitive tender.

Mr. Renton: No.

Police Constable (Abscondment)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis on the incident on 23 January involving the abscondment with firearms and ammunition of a police constable in Chingford.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand an inquiry is in hand.

Dr. Frank Skuse

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has anything to add to previous statements made concerning the circumstances, and reasons for the retirement of Dr. Frank Skuse, in the light of evidence presented at the hearing by the court of appeal of the case against the six men convicted of the Birmingham bomb offences.

Mr. John Patten: No.

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what day the order was given to Dr. Frank Skuse to leave the Chorley laboratory by 31 October 1985.

Mr. John Patten: On 23 July 1985 Dr. Skuse was notified that his last day of service would be regarded as 31 October 1985. This arrangement ws confirmed in a letter dated 3 October 1985.

TLC Tests

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether his Department treats the TLC tests as a unique test for the presence of nitroglycerine.

Mr. John Patten: No. It is our normal practice to carry out confirmatory tests for the presence of nitroglycerine when the TLC test is used.

Drink-driving Accidents

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions for drink and driving accidents causing (a) death, (b) injuries and (c) damage to property for each year since 1974, have resulted in (i) acquittals, (ii) guilty verdicts, (iii) imprisonment, (iv) fines and (v) compensation to the victims.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Information on court proceedings and sentencing at all courts in England and Wales for driving, etc. after consuming alcohol or taking drugs is published annually in "Offences Relating to Motor Vehicles, England and Wales, Supplementary Tables" (tables 1, 2, 5 and 8 of the issue for 1986). Information on compensation orders could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Information on deaths, injuries and property damage resulting from these offences is not collected centrally; however, information is published in "Road Accidents, Great Britain, 1986" on the number of persons killed or injured in accidents where the driver failed a roadside screening breath test. Copies of both publications are in the Library.

ENVIRONMENT

Rights of Way

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will designate in 1988 a public right of way day in order to promote public awareness of their ancient rights.

Mr. Moynihan: Improved public awareness of the opportunities for countryside access is already a key objective in the Countryside Commission's revised policies for enjoying the countryside announced last September. We do not intend to designate a public right of way day in 1988.

Housing Defects (Correspondence)

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to reply to Easington district council on matters raised in correspondence dated 16 August 1985 regarding new town transferred housing defects.

Mrs. Roe: We have been in touch with Easington about the issues it raised with us, and I hope a substantive reply can be sent shortly.

Smoke Detectors

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what talks he has had with district councils to discuss the installation of smoke detectors in every home; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Roe: My Department is currently undertaking a study of the potential of automatic smoke detection as a means of improving life safety in residential buildings and a review of other research. The results of the review will be published. We will certainly inform the local authority associations of the outcome and give them the opportunity to discuss the implications.

Estate Action

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the bids made by the London borough of Greenwich for assistance under the Estate Action programme during 1988-89, indicating when he expects to make a decision on each.

Mrs. Roe: The London borough of Greenwich has submitted nine bids for Estate Action resources in 1988-89:

Continuation schemes	£
Barnfield estate	1,102,000
Hughesfield estate	130,000
Valley Grove estate	796,000
	Bid for additional resources
Schemes to start in 1988-89
Cardwell estate	655,000
Cherry Orchard/Mascalls	640,000
Connaught estate	738,000
Ferrier estate	1,100,000
Hughesfield phase II	551,000
Meridian house, Azof street	110,000

Local authorities have been requested to submit outline bids by the end of January and we will tell them as soon as possible which bids we should like them to work up more fully. Approvals and additional allocations will follow as soon as councils can give us firm information on costs, phasing and other elements of their schemes.

Charity Commissioners Building (Redevelopment)

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will use his powers to call in the plans for redevelopment of the site of the former Charity Commissioners building in Ryder street, SW1; and whether he will inquire into the reasons why certain residents and business ratepayers were not informed of these projected developments.

Mr. Waldegrave: Planning permission for this development was granted on 26 November 1987 by Westminster city council, as local planning authority. It is therefore no longer open to my right hon. Friend to call in the planning application.

Shared Ownership

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the Government's future plans for the extension of shared ownership schemes.

Mrs. Roe: The Government have promoted shared ownership since they came into office, as an important means of helping those who could not otherwise afford to buy their own homes.

Until now, shared ownership has been developed largely by housing associations and local authorities. We believe that it could be made much more widely available if it were financed privately. That is why we legislated in the Housing and Planning Act 1986 to exempt certain shared ownership leases from the Rent Act.

The regulations which bring those provisions into force have now been made. I hope that housing associations, financial institutions and others will take full advantage of the opportunities which this opens up.

Homeless Persons

Mr. Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list, for all local authorities in the south-west region, the amount they applied for and received of the £1·3 million allocated to the south-west region as part of the additional £44·7 million made available for housing projects for the homeless.

Mr. Waldegrave: The information is as follows:

Local authority	Bid £'000	Allocation £'000
Avon
Bath	450	150
Bristol	250	200
Woodspring	450	—

Of the additional £44·7 million announced by my right hon. Friend on 3 November, £25·7 million was allocated for schemes to combat homelessness.

Aycliffe and Peterlee Development Corporation

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will give details of the bid made by Helicon Bar for the assets of the Aycliffe and Peterlee development corporation; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will give details of the management team's bid for the assets of the Aycliffe and Peterlee development corporation; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Roe: No. It would breach commercial confidentiality to give details of the bids received.

Planning Appeals

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in descending order those 100 local authorities with the highest number of planning applications sent on appeal to the Secretary of State, and the number of appeals for each local authority in the last three available years.

Mr. Waldegrave: The following table lists, in descending order, the 100 local authorities against whose decisions the highest number of planning appeals were lodged in 1986. In addition, the table includes for each authority the number of planning appeals lodged in 1984 and 1985.

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report the number of planning application appeals he has received from applicants in the Chelmsford local authority area in the last three available years; and how many appeals were successful.

Mr. Waldegrave: The table shows the number of planning appeals received against decisions of Chelmsford borough council in each year from 1 January 1984 to 31 December 1986, and the number allowed:

Year	Appeals received	Appeals allowed
1984	130	32
1985	203	64
1986	195	85

New Towns (Insurance)

Sir Anthony Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what requirements are laid down by his Department for the insurance of property and persons in new towns; what are the risks covered; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Roe: Subject to the general statutory requirements, new town development corporations are free to decide to what extent they should insure.

Land Disposal

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each year since 1974 (a) nature reserve lands, (b) public right of way paths, (c) common lands, (d) conservation areas which have ceased to be available to the public and have been given for the use of (i) Army training and exercise, (ii) shopping centres and (iii) other property development purposes.

Mr. Moynihan: This information is not available in the form requested. In general, the public have no legal right to access to nature reserves, commons or in conservation areas except where a right of way exists. Rights of way cannot be extinguished for any purpose other than by order made by the highway authority, or an application to the magistrates court. Such orders require confirmation by my right hon. Friend only when an objection is received.

Safety Glass

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he has taken to accelerate the introduction of safety glass and glazing into domestic premises.

Mr. Trippier: A consultation letter on stage 2 of the review of the building regulations, which was issued on 15 December 1986, included a proposal that a requirement for safety glazing of doors and low level glazing should be included in the regulations. There has been a generally favourable response. We intend to consult on detailed proposals and advice as soon as the British Standards Institution has completed its current work on the revision of the relevant standard.

Rating Reform

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what the effects of the poll tax will be on youngsters' sports and football clubs, which lease recreation and sports grounds from local authorities and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: Sports clubs are not directly affected by the introduction of the community charge. Where they remain in sole occupation of property they will normally pay rates at a uniform rate in the pound on up-to-date rateable values following revaluation in 1990. Non-profit-making sports clubs will continue to be eligible for rate relief of up to 100 per cent. at the discretion of local authorities.

Rating Revaluations

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment for how long owners or occupiers will have a right of appeal against the revaluation of their property under regulations governing the revaluation of business and commercial property in conjunction with the reform of local government finance.

Mr. Howard: We have published a proposal to limit the time for lodging appeals against the new valuation list to six months. We are still considering the responses to that, and to a number of other proposals, and hope to make a statement shortly.

Game Licences

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many game licences were issued in each category during each of the last five years; what revenue was in in each category, respectively; and what were the administrative costs involved.

Mr. Moynihan [pursuant to his reply 25 January 1988, c. 46]: The figures for game licences issued in England and Wales for 1986-87 were incorrect.

The correct figures are as follows:

1986-87

	Number issued	Revenue (£)
Game (Red)	23,425	140,550
Game (Green)	630	2,520
Game (Blue)	9,818	39,272

Game (Dealer)	1,324	5,296
Game (Keeper)	785	3,140

WALES

Motorway Network

73. Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has to improve the motorway network in Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The Government's motorway and trunk road programme in Wales is set out in "Roads in Wales 1985".

Religious Education

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many local education authority high schools in Wales have already phased out religious education as an option in the fourth and fifth General Certificate of Secondary Education years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Information is not available in the form requested. According to figures supplied by the Welsh Joint Education Committee, 198 out of 230 maintained secondary schools in Wales entered candidates for GCE or CSE examinations in religious studies or scripture in 1987.

A lack of examination candidates in a school in a particular academic year does not necessarily indicate that the subject is not offered as an option in that school.

The Education Act 1944 requires schools to provide religious instruction for all children of compulsory school age. The proposals in the Education Reform Bill, now before the House, reaffirm this requirement.

Radiation

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the number of farms, the number of sheep and the area of land, in acres, under restriction in Wales as a result of radioactivity from the Chernobyl accident; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: There are, under restriction in Wales, some 416 holdings, covering about 210,000 acres and containing about 300,000 sheep.

Public Appointments

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list all the appointments made by him since May 1979 to public office.

Mr. Peter Walker: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Private Patients

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give for 1985, 1986 and 1987 (a) the number of paybeds, (b) the number of discharges and deaths of private patients, (c) the average number of paybeds occupied by private patients daily and (d) the percentage occupancy, for each district health authority.

Mr. Peter Walker: The information, which is available only for 1985 and 1986, is given in the table:

	[1]Beds Authorised	Discharges and Deaths	Average Daily Occupied Beds	[2]Percentage

Inward Investment

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what progress has been made with the Chinese Textile Mill inward investment project.

Mr. Peter Walker: I understand that Nantong has withdrawn from the potential joint venture project with Tootal plc. The levels of assistance potentially available to the project have been confirmed to both partners and the Chinese have indicated their intention to continue to seek industrial and trade opportunities in Swansea.

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when WINvest started negotiations with each of the Japanese companies which he recently announced as coming to Wales.

Mr. Peter Walker: Initial contacts with these companies were made in August 1986, June 1987 and July 1987.

NHS Expenditure

Mr. Alan Williams To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the average annual percentage increase at 1987-88 prices in National Health Service expenditure in Wales (a) since 1978-79 and (b) 1973-74 to 1978-79.

Mr. Peter Walker: Between 1978-79 and 1987-88 expenditure in real terms has increased by 36·3 per cent. giving an average annual percentage increase of 4 per cent. and between 1974-75 and 1978-79 by 9·5 per cent., giving an average annual percentage increase of 2·4 per cent. The information requested is not available prior to 1974-75 because in 1974 there was a National Health Service reorganisation which included the transfer of a whole range of services including school health and ambulance and community health services from local authorities to the National Health Service.

The right hon. Gentleman was perhaps wanting to compare the performance of the two Governments. I have only been able to give him the figures from the first to the last year of the Labour Government which, as he sees, shows an annual increase of 2·4 per cent. per annum. The equivalent figures for the Conservative Government are from 1979-80 to 1987-88. During this period there has been an increase in real terms of 36·1 per cent., giving an annual average percentage increase of 4·5 per cent.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Religious Education

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the prospects for religious education as an examination subject after the implementation of the Education Reform Bill.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Government have made it clear that they do not intend to prescribe the amount of time to be devoted to any subject in the school curriculum. It will be up to schools to determine how much time they spend on each subject and the range of subjects in which pupils are entered for public examinations. We believe that study of the foundation subjects of the national curriculum might take around 70 per cent. of curriculum time or more if schools and pupils so choose. This leaves ample time for study of religious education as an examination subject and there is no reason to think that schools will not continue to put in as many examination entries as hitherto.

Local Education Authorities (Employees)

Sir Peter Hordern: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, how many were employed in local education authorities who were neither lecturers nor teachers in 1961, 1971, 1981 and at the latest convenient date.

Mrs. Rumbold: Figures for 1961 and 1971 are not available centrally; the numbers of full-time equivalent staff employed in local authorities in education in England and Wales who were neither lecturers nor teachers were 398,000 at March 1981 and 402,000 (provisional) at June 1987, the latest available date.

Assisted Places

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what plans he has to expand the assisted places scheme among (a) public schools and (b) state schools;

(2) how many public schools have applied to join the assisted places scheme;

(3) if he will publish the numbers of pupils on the assisted places scheme and their schools for each year since the scheme began;

(4) if he will publish the names of (a) state schools, (b) public schools and (c) other schools participating in the assisted places scheme.

Mr. Dunn: The assisted places scheme exists to give help with tuition fees at certain independent secondary schools to the parents of able children who might not otherwise attend those schools. A complete list of the participating schools in England and numbers of assisted pupils attending each school from 1985 onwards is given below. To provide a detailed breakdown of places before this date would incur disproportionate cost, and total figures only are given for the years 1981-84. As originally planned the scheme would have reached just over 33,000 places in England and Wales when fully developed. The Government now intend to raise that target to an eventual 35,000.

Independent secondary schools in England were invited in October 1987 to apply to join the scheme or to take up additional places if they were already participants. The responses received are now under consideration. One hundred and twenty six new schools have applied to join the scheme and are being considered against the same criteria as apply to existing participants.

Total numbers of assisted place holders 1981 to 1984

	Number
1981	4,185
1982	8,616
1983	13,102
1984	17,386

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many applications have been received for places under the assisted places scheme in Cheshire; and if he will give comparable figures for previous years.

Mr. Dunn: The recruitment of assisted pupils is a matter for the schools participating in the scheme. Information regarding applications for assisted places is not collected centrally.

Student Grants

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what would be the cost, at 1986-87 prices, of restoring student grants to the 1979 level.

Mr. Jackson: Approximately £97 million.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what would be the cost at 1986-87 prices of restoring the level of student transport costs to their 1979 level.

Mr. Jackson: To restore the arrangements for reimbursement which existed in 1979 would cost about £10 million at 1986-87 prices.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his estimate of the cost, at 1986-87 prices, of ending parental contribution in respect of student grants.

Mr. Jackson: Over £300 million.

School Meals

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many children are receiving free school meals in Blyth Valley, Northumberland.

Mr. Dunn: In October 1986, the latest date for which data are available, 5,841 pupils in Northumberland received free school meals. Information for Blyth Valley is not separately available.

Pupil-Teacher Ratios

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give the total number of pupils on school rolls and the pupil-to-teacher ratio in primary schools in Northumberland for each year since 1979.

Mr. Dunn: The number of pupils on roll and the pupil-teacher ratio in maintained primary schools in Northumberland each year since 1979 were as follows:

January each year	Pupils[1]	Pupil-teacher ratio
1979	21,652	23·4
1980	21,167	23·1
1981	20,147	23·5
1982	18,649	23·4
1983	18,249	23·0
1984	18,528	23·3
1985	18,720	23·3
1986	18,938	23·3
1987	19,244	23·1

[1] Full-time equivalent pupils. Part-time pupils counted as 0·5.

Medicine Courses (Overseas Students)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the current minimum sum recommended for fees for postgraduate medicine courses undertaken by overseas students; how many such students were on courses of postgraduate medical training in 1979 and how many are now; and if he will reconsider Her Majesty's Government's decision to charge overseas students full fees for medical postgraduate courses.

Mr. Jackson: Universities are themselves responsible for setting tuition fees charged to their overseas students. The University Grants Committee recommend minima. For science and clinical courses in 1988-89 the annual recommended minima are: science, £5,180; clinical, £9,590.

In 1979 there were 1,204 full-time non-United Kingdom-domiciled students on postgraduate medicine and dentistry courses at universities in Great Britain. In 1986 the comparable figure was 1,179.

The overall number of postgraduate students from abroad in universities in Great Britain in 1986 was higher than in the late 1970s before the introduction of full-cost fees. My right hon. Friend sees no reason for considering a return to the previous system of subsidised fees.

Teachers

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) whether he intends to publish his reply to inquiries from the International Labour Office relating to the withdrawal of teachers' negotiating rights in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether he will place in the Library a copy of his supplementary response of 29 October 1987 in relation to the Green Paper "Teachers' Pay and Conditions"; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Evidence submitted by the Government is confidential to the International Labour Organisation and its Committee on Freedom of Association. When the Committee on Freedom of Association has considered the evidence it will be for the governing body of the International Labour Organisation to decide what to publish.

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he is taking to persuade firms to increase the experience of industry of teachers, especially in scarcity subjects.

Mrs. Rumbold: We are keen to build bridges between education and industry and to provide all teachers with experience of industry, not just those in shortage subjects. A series of regional conferences to promote collaboration between firms and local education authorities has been held to provide a number of opportunities for teachers in the shortage subjects to obtain industrial experience. The partnership schemes developed by British Petroleum with Hertfordshire and Humberside, and between British Telecom and Bradford local education authorities, should also assist teachers awareness of industry. We are taking every opportunity to persuade employers of the importance of links with education and the value of giving teachers industrial experience is one part of this strategy.

City Technology Colleges

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will make a statement on recent further developments towards establishing city technology colleges.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, Central (Mr. Fisher) and 1 December, at column 751. Since then the Mercers' Company and Thamesmead Town have announced their intention to sponsor the establishment of a city technology college in Thamesmead.

Modern Languages

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will publish the latest available figures for the cost of training a teacher of modern languages.

Mrs. Rumbold: This information is not available.

Mathematics and Physics (Teacher Retraining)

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, whether he will make a statement on progress with the programme designed to retrain teachers for mathematics and physics; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: We believe that earmarked moneys available from April 1988, under the Government's local education authority training grants scheme, will allow the funding of a substantial proportion of the one-year retraining places for mathematics, physics and CDT teachers available at higher education institutions. Grant supporting £4 million of expenditure is ring-fenced for the secondment of teachers on to long courses in recognition of the serious difficulties experienced by some institutions last year. In addition, the scheme will support a further £10 million of expenditure by LEAs on in-service training, which can be used for funding one-year retraining courses, in mathematics and physics. The programme of funding in this area will be reviewed for 1989-90.

Education Reform Bill

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will list the additional staff required by his Department in 1988-89 to deal with the Education Reform Bill; and if he will state the additional cost.

Mrs. Rumbold: The recently published public expenditure White Paper, Cm 288, shows for 1988-89 planned staff numbers of 2,560 and running costs provision of £66·161 million compared with a target of 2,480 staff at 1 April 1988 and running costs provision of £58·3 million for 1987-88. Final dispositions have still to be made, but it is expected that most of the extra posts will be concerned directly or indirectly with the Education Reform Bill.

DEFENCE

Chevaline

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the cost of the mid-life refurbishing programme for Chevaline flight hardware; what improvements are being incorporated in the system; and whether the cost of the refurbishment programme was included in the latest published programme cost estimates for the Chevaline system.

Mr. Sainsbury: As for any equipment, refurbishment is part of the planned cycle of in-service support for Chevaline. As is the practice for such costs, they were not included in the project cost estimate last announced on 5 February 1985 at column 512. I am not prepared to reveal further information in line with the policy of successive Governments, for reasons of security.

Trident

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the responsibility of the controller establishments, research and nuclear, in relation to the Trident programme extends to procurement of the re-entry vehicle.

Mr. Sainsbury: Yes.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the latest figure for the real cost reduction in Trident warhead procurement over the 1981 estimate as last given in the Comproller and Auditor General's report on "Control and Management of the Trident Programme" (HC 27), paragraph 3.27; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: The latest estimate for Trident warhead procurement shows a real cost reduction of about 5 per cent. on the 1981 estimate and is included in the overall Trident estimated cost of £9,043 million announced by my right hon. Friend on 21 January 1988.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how missiles from the United Kingdom Trident force will be transported to and from the United States/United Kingdom missile pool in the United States of America.

Mr. Sainsbury: The United Kingdom's Trident D5 missiles will be transported to and from the United States facility at Kings bay, Georgia by the United Kingdom's Vanguard class SSBNs.

Departmental Insurance

Sir Anthony Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give full details of the insurance cover effected by his Department for property and persons, including the risks covered.

Mr. Freeman: It is the general rule that the Government do not insure against the risk of any loss which, if it arose, would fall directly or indirectly on the Consolidated Fund. However, it was decided in 1982 that there would be distinct financial and administrative advantages in transferring to commercial insurers my Department's work on third party motor accident and employers liability claims in the United Kingdom. These risks remain with the commercial market, together with those in respect of the participation of Ministry of Defence aircraft and parachute teams in civil organised air shows, the Department's legal liabilities to certain fare-paying air passengers, and the Department's liabilities arising from the civilian use of Ministry air fields. In consultation with our brokers and insurance consultants, we continue to review those other areas of the Department's activities and risks which might lend themselves to commercial insurance, provided that a clear benefit to the Department would result.

Departmental Staff (Merit Pay)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many of his Department's civilian staff have received merit pay awards in 1985 and 1987.

Mr. Sainsbury: The term "merit pay" is taken to refer to the three-year performance bonus experiment which was introduced throughout the Civil Service on 1 April 1985.

During the first year of the experiment, which ran from April 1985 to March 1986, 684 awards were made to MOD staff. During the second year, from April 1986 to March 1987, 698 awards were made. Details for the third year, from April 1987 to March 1988, are not yet available.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were the grades of the recipients of merit pay in 1985, 1986 and 1987.

Mr. Sainsbury: The term "merit pay" is taken to refer to the three-year performance bonus experiment which was introduced throughout the Civil Service on 1 April 1985. Staff in the grades 3 to 7 and their equivalents were eligible to receive these bonuses.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total expenditure on merit pay within his Department during each of the years 1985, 1986 and 1987.

Mr. Sainsbury: The term "merit pay" is taken to refer to the three-year performance bonus experiment which was introduced throughout the Civil Service on 1 April 1985.

During the first year of the experiment, which ran from April 1985 to March 1986, expenditure on awards within the MOD was £691,500. Expenditure in the second year, from April 1986 to March 1987 was again £691,500. Details are not yet available for the third and final year of the experiment covering the period April 1987 to March 1988.

Special Pay

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which United Kingdom establishments operate special pay additions.

Mr. Sainsbury: Special pay additions operate in the following establishments:

RAF HQ Strike Command, High Wycombe.
RAF Signals Engineering Establishment, Henlow and Wyton.
Atomic Weapons Establishments, Aldermaston and Burghfield.
Institute of Naval Medicine, Alverstoke.
HM Naval Base, Rosyth.
HM Naval Base, Devonport.
Directorate General Ship Refitting, Bath.
Directorate General Submarines, Bath.
Fleet Maintenance Repair Organisation, Portsmouth and in the Inner London area.

Merchant Ships (Armilla Patrol)

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of British or British dependency ownership of the parent company is required for a merchant ship to qualify for accompaniment by the Armilla patrol.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Ships eligible for RN protection are those registered in the United Kingdom or dependent territories, or those where there is a clear majority United Kingdom or dependent territory interest in the ownership.

Research Projects

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps will be taken to ensure that research projects previously funded directly by his Department, whose funding is now to be channelled through the research councils, will not suffer a loss of income as a result; what steps will be taken to ensure that the total sums available for research will not decline in real terms as a result of this change; what representations Her Majesty's Government have received from universities and other academic institutions about this matter and what reply has been sent; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: When joint grants are made by the Ministry of Defence and the research councils for academic research of relevance to defence, research council funding arrangements apply. The grants are separate from and additional to contracts and agreements made by the Ministry for defence-related research. Defence spending on R and D in the academic sector has shown a sustained increase in recent years.

AWRE Aldermaston

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what estimates were given of the required number of staff to be employed at AWRE Aldermaston for each year since 1979; and how far they have differed from the complement in each of these years;

(2) how many electronics engineers have been recruited to work at AWRE Aldermaston in each year since 1979;

(3) how many staff at AWRE Aldermaston have been transferred from research to production duties in each year since 1979.

Mr. Sainsbury: It is not our policy to disclose details of the number or deployment of staff employed on the nuclear warhead programme.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the AS90 warhead production complex will be in operation at AWRE Aldermaston.

Mr. Sainsbury: The A90 complex will be operational in the early nineties on a time scale consistent with planned deliveries for deployment of Trident in the mid-nineties.

SSBN Submarines

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence by what date he estimates SSBNs 05, 06, 07 and 08 will have their full complement of missiles and warheads.

Mr. Sainsbury: Vanguard class submarines will be fully effective from the start of their operational service. These precise dates are classified.

Uranium

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence where secondary enrichment of uranium for weapons grade takes place.

Mr. Sainsbury: The arrangements for the final enrichment of uranium to the level required for defence purposes remain as announced by my right hon. Friend, the then Secretary of State for Defence on 23 June 1982 at columns 128-29.

Polaris

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the phasing out of Polaris, in the light of the delays in the operational production line for warhead components.

Mr. Sainsbury: As my right hon. Friend reaffirmed to the House on 21 January at column 775, Trident remains on programme to enter service in the mid-1990s. In the meantime, the United Kingdom Polaris force will remain fully operational and effective. The Polaris force will be progressively phased out after the entry into service of Trident.

Royal Navy Armaments Depot

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the warhead convoys which travel by road between Royal Navy armaments depot Coulport and Burghfield will cease.

Mr. Ian Stewart: It has been the practice of successive Governments not to discuss the movement of nuclear weapons.

Aircraft Noise (Report)

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will place in the Library a copy of the interim report of the NATO pilot study into "Aircraft Noise in a Modern Society".

Mr. Freeman: Copies of this report are already available in the Library.

European Fighter Project

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if, at his meeting with the Defence Minister of the Federal Republic of Germany on 20 January, he sought to discover when the West German Government intend to come to a final decision on their participation in the European fighter aircraft project.

Mr. Sainsbury: At his meeting with the Defence Minister of the Federal Republic of Germany on 20 January, my right hon. Friend discussed a number of topics, including progress towards national decisions on the development phase of the European fighter aircraft.

RAF Binbrook (Near Miss)

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if, pursuant to his answer of 25 January, Official Report, column 32, he will make a statement on the near miss which took place over RAF Binbrook in Lincolnshire between and Air United Kingdom civil airliner Short 360 and a Phantom fighter bomber in April 1987.

Mr. Freeman: The joint airmiss section of the National Air Traffic Services has investigated fully the circumstances surrounding the incident to which the hon. Member refers. Its findings have been examined by the joint airmiss working group, and its conclusions have been made known to the aviation community.

Graphics (Supply)

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will ensure that when contract number CB/SL24B/0059 for the supply of graphics to the armed services is considered the needs of the end users will be fully taken into account.

Mr. Sainsbury: For all contract tasks whether for equipments or services, including graphics, the end users define the work to be performed and monitor performance by the contractor.

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy that, following the Department of Trade and Industry's initiative to help small businesses, he will ensure that when contract number CB/SL24B/0059 for the supply of graphics to the armed services is awarded, small companies will be given the opportunity of prime contractor status.

Mr. Sainsbury: The phrase "prime contractor status" can be misunderstood. Depending on circumstances, award of contract can be direct between contractor and the Department, or some of the work can be sub-contracted by a main contractor. It would be wrong to try to forecast the result because tenders are not yet evaluated and will be considered on their merits. Tenders submitted, whether by larger or smaller firms will, of course, be given equal consideration.

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy that, when contract number CB/SL24B/0059 for the supply of graphics to the armed services is awarded, consideration will be given to splitting this contract up between a number of prime contractors so that it is possible to measure the relative performance of the winners during the contract period.

Mr. Sainsbury: Because tenders cover requirements in seven regions of England and Wales it is probable that there shall be a number of contracts issued as a result of the evaluation of tenders.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Security

77. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Attorney-General if he will seek a variation of the injunction granted on 2 January against Times Newspapers Ltd. in relation to Anthony Cavendish so as to permit publications of a fair and accurate account of proceedings in Parliament.

The Attorney-General: At the Government's suggestion, such an amendment was made to the injunction of 15 January.

Deputy Judges

78. Mr. Adley: To ask the Attorney-General if the Lord Chancellor proposes to make any changes to the system of appointing deputy judges; and if he will make a statement.

The Solicitor-General: Under the present system, the Lord Chancellor appoints, after due consultation, those whom he judges to have the calibre, experience and standing necessary for this judical work. He has no plans to change that system.

Court Proceedings (Sketches)

Mr. McCusker: To ask the Attorney-General what is his policy towards the prosecution of those who publicise sketches of court proceedings in contravention of section 41 of the Criminal Justice Act 1925; and if he has any proposals to allow them in circumstances most likely to ensure their accuracy.

The Attorney-General: Sketches of court proceeding made with a view to publication are prohibited by section 41 of the Criminal Justice Act 1925 only if made in court. Where such an offence is alleged, the Crown Prosecution Service will prosecute if there is sufficient evidence and if it would be in the public interest to do so. The criteria it will apply are those made public by the Director of Public Prosecutions in his code for Crown prosecutors.

Uncertificated Solicitors

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Attorney-General what steps he will take to prevent uncertificated solicitors from acting improperly.

The Attorney-General: The rules of professional conduct and, in certain circumstances, the criminal law seek to prevent improper behaviour on the part of solicitors with or without practising certificates.

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Attorney-General if he will seek a meeting with Mr. Stringer of the Solicitors Complaints Bureau to discuss complaints against the bureau; and whether he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: No.

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Attorney-General if he will set up an inquiry into the manner in which the Solicitors Complaints Bureau conducts investigations, with respect to its standards of impartiality.

The Attorney-General: No.

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Attorney-General how many uncertificated solicitors are practising in (a) the west midlands and (b) England and Wales.

The Attorney-General: No such statistics are kept. A practising certificate under the Solicitors Act 1974 is not required for all work that a solicitor may do, and information on the matters raised in the question would be difficult to obtain.

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Attorney-General if he will take steps to establish a method of complaints against uncertificated solicitors which is more open to scrutiny than that of the Solicitors Complaints Bureau.

The Attorney-General: No.

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Attorney-General what action will he take against solicitors who acted uncertificated between November 1986 and 28 January 1987 in north Staffordshire.

The Attorney-General: If the hon. Member would supply details, her allegations will be investigated.

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Attorney-General what steps he will take to prevent the payment of legal aid moneys to uncertificated solicitors; and whether he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: When the legal aid administration of the Law Society receives information that a solicitor has undertaken legal aid work whilst uncertificated, no payment is made for the work concerned. Action is taken to recoup any moneys already paid in respect of the appropriate period.

Legal Aid

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Attorney-General what was the amount of legal aid moneys recovered in 1983, 1984, 1985, 1986 and 1987 and paid in respect of a solicitor who at the relevant time did not hold a current practising certificate; and whether he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The information requested is not available, but the practice of the legal aid head office is to recover all legal aid moneys paid in respect of a solicitor who at the relevant time did not hold a current practising certificate.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Attorney-General if he will take steps to arrange for those who satisfy the income eligibility requirements to apply for legal aid to be able to apply for legal aid to be represented at an inquest where such representation is considered important to pursuing claims of negligence against public bodies; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: No. In present circumstances extension of legal aid to inquests cannot be justified.

Solicitors

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Attorney-General what steps he takes to prevent the destruction of any evidence relating to solicitors practising uncertificated.

The Attorney-General: I am not aware of any such impropriety.

Royal Ulster Constabulary (Allegations)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Attorney-General what direction in respect of prosecution the Director of Public Prosecutions (Northern Ireland) has issued in respect of an officer in the Royal Ulster Constabulary and other persons in Belfast against whom allegations were made by Mr. Chan Hok-Chun and Mr. Hui Yat-Chi; and if he will make a statement .

The Attorney-General: An investigation has been carried out by the Royal Ulster Constabulary with regard to complaints made by Mr. Hok-Chun and Mr. Hui Yat-Chi.

The results of these investigations were reported to the Director of Public Prosecutions for Northern Ireland who, having considered all the facts and circumstances reported to him, issued a direction of no prosecution. This direction was issued on 6 January 1988.

British Rail Property (Offences)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Attorney-General whether his guidelines regarding offences on British Rail property made any reference to trespass by fox hunts.

The Attorney-General: I have interpreted the hon. Member's question as referring to the Attorney-General's guidelines on the criteria for prosecution. The guidelines have been reproduced in the code for Crown prosecutors, which is issued pursuant to section 10 of the Prosecution of Offences Act 1985, a copy of which is to be found in the Library of this House. The code makes no reference to fox hunts.

SCOTLAND

Neighbourhood Heating

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will fund an expansion in the number of neighbourhood heating schemes, along the lines of the Heathwise in Glasgow; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: As my right hon. Friend the then Secretary of State for Energy announced on 9 April 1987, at columns 223-25, total Government support for community insulation projects in the United Kingdom in 1988-89 will be worth an estimated £55 million to £60 million. This represents an increase of up to 30 per cent. on 1987-88. The proportion of these resources coming to Scotland will not be known until the current consideration of bids for funding in 1988-89 is completed.

Industrial Projects

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of industrial projects which are to receive public support in the current year in Angus, Scotland.

Mr. Lang: Information on individual projects which are to receive public support in the Angus local authority district in the current year cannot be disclosed for reasons of confidentiality. However, in the current financial year, payments to firms in the Angus district under the original and revised regional development grant schemes have to date totalled some £500,000. There have been no payments of regional selective assistance (RSA). Approvals under the revised regional development grant scheme in the period April 1987 to January 1988 have amounted to £400,000, associated with project costs of £800,000 and the creation of 130 jobs. Details of the offers of RSA cannot be disclosed for reasons of confidentiality.

Staff

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will indicate how many of his Department's administrative staff have transferred to other Government Departments, by grade, for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Rifkind: The information is set out in the following table:

	1978	1979	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984	1985	1986	1987

TOTALS	49	48	58	32	31	31	19	27	18	25

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table indicating the number of administrative staff in his Department who have left before retirement for an occupation outside the Civil Service for each year over the last decade.

Mr. Rifkind: My Department does not maintain statistics on the reasons which staff may give for resigning, nor on the occupations which they subsequently take up.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will indicate the educational background of administrative class civil servants entering his Department for each of the last 10 years by (a) state, assisted or independent school and (b) university.

Mr. Rifkind: My Department does not maintain central statistics on the schools attended by staff, and the collation of information from individual records would be disproportionately costly.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will indicate, by grade and the department within his Department they joined, the backgrounds of administrative grade civil servants who have entered his Department from other Government Departments for each year over the last decade.

Mr. Rifkind: This information is available only at disproportionate cost.

"Scottish Homes"

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the number of responses to the Scottish Development Department's consultative document "Scottish Homes".

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Clydesdale (Mr. Hood) on 10 December 1987 at column 192.

School Management

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the number of responses to the Scottish Education Department's consultative document, "School Management and the Role of Parents".

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Government received some 8,000 responses to the consultation paper on school management.

Drink-Driving Offences

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many prosecutions in Scotland for drink and driving offences causing (a) death, (b) injuries and (c) damages, for each year since 1979, have resulted in (i) acquittals, (ii) guilty verdicts, (iii) imprisonment, (iv) fines and (v) compensation to the victim.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The available information is given in the table. Details on whether injury or damage resulted from a drunk-driving offence are not collected centrally.

Drunk-driving offences, Scotland

	1979	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984	1985	1986

Bridge of Earn Hospital

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the estimated underspend on the Bridge of Earn hospital development in 1987-88.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: There is no hospital development at Bridge of Earn hospital.

Health Spending

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his latest figure for the expected level of spending on (a) the hospital service and (b) the National Health Service as a whole in 1987-88.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The latest estimate of outturn for the year 1987-88 are gross expenditure of £1,697 million on hospital and community health services and £2,334 million on the National Health Service as a whole.

Strathclyde (Education Expenditure)

Mr. Allen Adams: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the education element of the allocation to Strathclyde regional council for 1987-88; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: As regards revenue expenditure, rate support grant is paid in support of an authority's income generally. It is not attributed to particular services. For capital expenditure the allocation to the council for educational purposes is £20,378,000. This figure may be enhanced by capital receipts raised by the region or by virement from its other capital programmes.

Rating Reform

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if the community charge rebate scheme will be based on the full personal community charge levied in each local authority area or based on a national average community charge.

Mr. Lang: Under the proposed community charge rebate scheme, rebates will be calculated on the basis of the actual personal community charge payable in each local authority.

Salmon Netting Stations (River Tweed)

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people have been employed at salmon netting stations on the River Tweed in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement on the intention of the Atlantic Salmon Conservation Trust to close netting stations on the Tweed.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The number of persons reported to the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland as employed at the nets by proprietors and occupiers of salmon net fishings on the River Tweed varies according to the time of the fishing season. The maximum numbers, including those employed on a seasonal basis, are:

	Number
1982	107
1983	103
1984	116
1985	99
1986	96

The Government have noted with interest the proposals of the Atlantic Salmon Conservation Trust (Scotland) in relation to the River Tweed. This is, however, a matter for the trust and the owners of the netting stations. Government approval to any closure of netting stations is not required.

Blood Donors

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any proposals to counteract the fall in blood donations in Scotland, and especially the west of Scotland region, between 1986 and 1987.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Yes. I have asked the Scottish national blood transfusion service to mount a national campaign to encourage people to give blood, and this will be launched later this month. In addition, regional efforts are being increased throughout Scotland. New donor sessions are being introduced; there are increased efforts to improve communications with potential donors; and donors may now be invited to give blood more frequently than hitherto.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Pirate Radio

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he has any plans to increase the resources of the radio investigation service to take effective action against pirate radio stations.

Mr. Butcher: We have recently reviewed the resource need of the radio investigation service. We are currently strengthening manning levels in the London area and are investing some £400,000 in new equipment which should assist in the tracing of unlicensed radio operators. At the same time we are implementing new strategies to deal with the enormous tasks facing the service.

The radio investigation service will act vigorously to clear the frequencies of unlicensed users. Particularly in view of the Home Secretary's announcement of 20 January on broadcast radio policy, I very much hope that unlicensed broadcasters will voluntarily stop broadcasting since they, with other interested parties, may soon have an opportunity to make applications to establish legal stations. At present they are squatting on frequencies assigned for legal stations and, because of the poor equipment they use, they are causing constant serious problems to the radio communications of users in other frequency bands including those who depend on radio for safety of life, such as Heathrow airport, fire brigades, the police, London Transport, British Gas, British Rail and the Ministry of Defence.

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what representations he has received concerning the alleged financing by record companies of pirate radio stations.

Mr. Maude: One representation has been received from the Association of Independent Radio Contractors Limited and one from Capital Radio plc.

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many prosecutions were brought against those (i) operating, (ii) controlling and (iii) financing pirate radio stations in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Maude: In 1987, 77 prosecutions were brought as a result of investigations by the Department's radio investigation service into the operations of unlicensed broadcasting stations. As a result, 75 offenders were convicted. I am sorry that the breakdown of statistics into the categories requested is not available.

Butane Gas

Mr. Janner: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he will introduce legislation to forbid the sale of butane gas cylinders to young people below the age of 16 years.

Mr. Maude: I would refer the hon. Member to the answers given to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) on 8 April last, at columns 270-71.

Equal Opportunities

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he plans to upgrade his Department's equal opportunity officer post and bring it into line with Civil Service guidance, regarding grades 5/6 for the larger Departments.

Mr. Butcher: I see no need to upgrade the equal opportunity officer post. I am fully satisfied that the grade 7 incumbent has the full support of the grade 5 head of branch and the grade 3 head of personnel and has direct access to, and the confidence of, the principal establishment officer as suggested in the central guidance.

Exports and Imports

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) what are the latest figures for the annual value of exports, excluding oil, on (a) a per capita basis, and (b) as a percentage of gross national product; and what information he has as to comparable figures for other Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries;

(2) what are the latest figures for the annual value of exports, including oil, on (a) a per capita basis, and (b) as a percentage of gross national product; and what information he has as to comparable figures for other Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries;

(3) what are the latest figures for the annual value of imports, excluding oil, on (a) a per capita basis, and (b) as a percentage of gross national product; and what information he has as to comparable figures for other Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries;

(4) what are the latest figures for the annual value of imports, including oil, on (a) a per capita basis, and (b) as a percentage of gross national product; and what information he has as to comparable figures for other Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries.

Mr. Alan Clark: The available information is in the following table:

Balance of Trade

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what are the latest figures for the balance of trade between the United Kingdom and the United States of America; and what information he has as to the balance of trade between the United States of America and Canada, Sweden, Japan, West Germany and Brazil.

Mr. Alan Clark: The information is in the following table.

Illegal Broadcasting

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps he will take to prevent the spread of illegal broadcasting; and if he will take steps to curb pirate stations in the London area.

Mr. Maude: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend for Erith and Crayford (Mr. Evennett) today.

Driverplan Insurance Policy

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what representations he has received concerning the Driverplan insurance policy offered by the St. Christopher's Motorists' Security Association Ltd.; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport and I have received a number of representations about the undesirability of schemes like the Driverplan insurance policy which indemnify policyholders who are prevented from driving. We shall be looking again at such schemes in the light of the report of the review of road traffic law which is expected shortly.

Property Services Agency and Crown Suppliers

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what studies and reports have been and are being undertaken by his Department into the operation of the Property Services Agency and the Crown Suppliers from 1979 up to the latest date available.

Mr. Butcher [holding answer 29 January 1988]: None. My Department does not undertake studies or reports into the operations of other Government Departments.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

International Debt

79. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the World Bank concerning the alleviation of the international debt crisis.

Mr. Chris Patten: I maintain regular contact with the World Bank. International debt is often high on the agenda.

Sudan

85. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals he has for aid to the Sudan.

Mr. Chris Patten: In December 1987 we pledged £10 million as quick-disbursing balance of payments support for spending this year. During my recent visit to Sudan I announced a new £15 million grant for rehabilitation projects for spending up to 1991. This will be used principally for projects in the agricultural and transport sectors. In addition, we continue to provide assistance to the power, education and fisheries sectors.

Kampuchea

86. Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has received any representations concerning the restoration of development aid to Kampuchea.

Mr. Chris Patten: I have received a number of representations. It remains the Government's view, however, that it would be wrong in principle to give develoment aid to the illegitimate and unrepresentative regime in Phnom Penh.

Mozambique

87. Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will increase the British contribution to health care and agricultural development projects in Mozambique.

Mr. Chris Patten: Over half the £15 million of programme aid which we pledged last year is being spent on agriculture, and £400,000 on medical supplies. We have also provided seeds and agricultural tools and paid for the transport of medical supplies under our emergency relief programme. The Commonwealth Development Corporation is considering investments in agricultural projects. I am ready to consider requests for further help in these fields.

Sri Lanka

88. Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with the Sri Lankan Government as to assistance for that country following the recent disturbances there.

Mr. Chris Patten: At a special meeting of the Sri Lankan Aid Group in Paris on 4 December, Britain pledged additional aid of up to £20 million in support of reconstruction efforts. An aid mission visited Sri Lanka in January for discussions on the use of these funds.

Southern Africa Development Co-ordination Conference

89. Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the Southern Africa development co-ordination conference.

Mr. Chris Patten: I attended the annual consultative meeting of the Southern African development co-ordination conference in Arusha on 28 and 29 January. During the conference I made a new pledge of £10 million. This brings to £45 million the total we have pledged for assistance through this organisation.

Ethiopia

90. Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he is satisfied with the level of international co-operation designed to avoid famine in Ethiopia.

Mr. Chris Patten: Donors have responded promptly and generously with famine relief for the people of Ethiopia. About three quarters of the food aid needed in 1988 has already been pledged and is being delivered to the Ethiopian ports. If there is a major catastrophe it will not be because donors have failed to play their part but because, tragically, the civil war has prevented food from being delivered to those in need.

Women

91. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further action his Department has taken to ensure that the needs of women are given due consideration in development projects sponsored by Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Chris Patten: All major projects are assessed for social impact and within this context particular attention is give to the impact on women.

Overseas Development Administration (Underspend)

92. Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his estimate of the underspend by the Overseas Development Administration for the current year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: The recent public expenditure White Paper shows that we expect to spend the planned aid programme in full, including the additional £13 million to which I referred on 27 January, at column 427, in reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Wyre Forest (Mr. Coombs).

UNICEF (Global Immunisation Programme)

93. Mr. Chapman: To ask the Minister for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made in UNICEF's global immunisation programme; and if he will make a statement on the United Kingdom's contribution to it.

Mr. Chris Patten: Some $211 million has so far been committed to immunisation projects. UNICEF estimates that 50 per cent. of the children of the developing world have already been reached and 1·3 million lives saved each year. On present trends, over 70 per cent. of the developing world's children will be vaccinated by 1990.

Her Majesty's Government have contributed £5·31 million bilaterally to the immunisation programme and we are also contributing through the European Community.

Aid Budget

94. Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has received concerning the size of Her Majesty's Government's aid budget; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: I have received representations from a number of sources. The Government White Paper on public expenditure published last month shows that the overseas aid programme is planned to grow by some 3 per cent. in real terms over the next three years.

Overseas Development Natural Resources Institute

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what measures he will be taking to publicise the work of the Overseas Development Natural Resources Institute with a view to securing substantial outside funding for its work.

Mr. Chris Patten: As the ODA's own scientific unit, the ODNRI's resources form part of the ODA's total running costs. Ninety per cent. of the institute's work is commissioned by the ODA itself. The remainder is carried out on full repayment terms under contract to outside clients, typically the multilateral aid agencies. The institute is well known to potential external clients by virtue of its reputation as a world centre of excellence. The results of its work are normally published. Its activities are always featured in the ODA's annual review and a separate annual report covering the institute's work is published each year. Copies of the latest edition of these two publications are in the Library of the House.

PRIME MINISTER

National Health Service

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Prime Minister what consideration she has given to the communication on the National Health Service presented to her on 27 January on behalf of the Manchester Evening News; if there is any action she is taking; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I have noted the contents of the newspaper. I also refer the right hon. Gentleman to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Walsall, North (Mr. Winnick) on 28 January, at column 313.

Mr. Nigel Wicks

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister why she has appointed Mr. Nigel Wicks as her personal representative at economic summits; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I have appointed Mr. Wicks as my personal representative for economic summits in succession to Sir Robert Armstrong, who retired on 31 December 1987.

Mr. Wicks is well equipped by his Treasury background and by his current position as my principal private secretary for this role.

Crown Prerogative

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Prime Minister if the alteration in the terms of service of civil servants working at Government communications headquarters since 1983 has been made in exercise of the power under prerogative of the Crown.

The Prime Minister: Alterations to the terms of service of civil servants working at GCHQ have been made under the authority of the Civil Service Order in Council 1982, which is an instrument made under the royal prerogative.

THE ARTS

Works of Art in Lieu of Tax

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Minister for the Arts (1) whether he will make a statement regarding the acceptance in lieu of tax of eight drawings by Henry Moore from the estate of Lord Clark; whether these drawings will be vested in the trustees of the British museum, in accordance with the wishes of Lord Clark; and what amount of tax has been satisfied by this acceptance;

(2) whether he has anything to add to his written answer to the hon. Member for Warley, East on 21 July 1987, Official Report, columns 114-5, regarding the acceptance in lieu of tax of Constable's painting Stratford Mill, in view of the fact that this painting is not listed in his written answer to the hon. Member for Warley, East on 18 January, Official Report, columns 477-8, among those works of art accepted during the half-year ended 31 December 1987, whether allocated or awaiting allocation; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: I am pleased to announce the formal acceptances in lieu of tax of the items to which the hon. Member for Warley, East refers: Constable's "Stratford Mill" and nine drawings by Henry Moore. These acceptances were finalised on 8 January and 21 January 1988 respectively. The acceptance of Constable's "Stratford Mill" satisfied tax of £5·5 million, and the painting was allocated to the trustees of the National Gallery in accordance with the wishes of the owners. The acceptance of the Henry Moore drawings satisfied tax of £153,456, and the offer was conditional upon their allocation to the trustees of the British Museum. Ownership of the items will be transferred to the respective institutions shortly.

National Museums

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister for the Arts what factors he takes into account when allocating central Government funds to the national museums.

Mr. Luce: I refer the hon. Member to the written answer I gave the hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, Central (Mr. Fisher) on 23 November 1987 at column 60.

Museums (Admission Charges)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he has since 1979 given any advice to any or all of the national museums about charging for admission; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: Whether or not the national museums and galleries charge for admission is up to them to decide in the light of their plans and priorities.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Mortgage Interest Tax Relief

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list all the changes in mortgage interest tax relief since 1979.

Mr. Norman Lamont: There have been few changes in mortgage interest relief over this period. In 1983 the MIRAS scheme, provided for basic tax relief to be given by deduction at source, started up. This was essentially an administrative change not affecting the basic relief conditions. Also in 1983 the main residence loan relief limit was increased from £25,000 to its current level of £30,000, and relief for people living in job-related accommodation was extended to the self-employed, also with effect from April 1983. In addition, there have been various minor amendments to the operation of the MIRAS arrangements.

If the hon. Gentleman has something else in mind, perhaps he would write to me.

Food (VAT)

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which food products are currently subject to the standard rate of value added tax.

Mr. Lilley: Food products which are currently subject to the standard rate of VAT are specified in group 1 of schedule 5 to the VAT Act 1983.

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his policy towards value added tax on foodstuffs.

Mr. Lilley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister to the hon. Member for Don Valley (Mr. Redmond) on 7 July 1987 at column 192.

Atlantic Salmon Conservation Trust

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the Atlantic Salmon Conservation Trust was recognised as a charitable body by the Inland Revenue office in Scotland; under which criteria for charitable status the trust was so recognised; and what is the value of tax relief granted in respect of payments to the trust for the last two years.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I regret that I cannot comment on the tax affairs of any particular body.

Accountancy Firms (Tax Planning)

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide an estimate of the tax lost to the Revenue in 1987 as a direct consequence of tax planning by accountancy firms.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 28 January 1988, c. 365]: If by "tax planning" the hon. Members means the legitimate use of relieving provisions in tax law, there is, by definition, no tax loss.

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment pursuant to his answer of 19 January, Official Report, at column 603, if he will provide his best estimate of the number of unemployed claimants in the London boroughs of Southwark, Tower Hamlets and Newham in July 1981.

Mr. Lee: The information requested is not available. Figures of unemployed claimants at local level are available only from August 1982. Figures for London boroughs are compiled using the ward-based system and are available only from June 1983.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what were the numbers of registered unemployed in the United Kingdom in March, June, September and December for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Lee: The following information is in the Library. The table shows the number of unemployed claimants in the United Kingdom (seasonally adjusted and excluding school leavers) for each of the months requested for the last 10 years. The data given are consistent over the time period requested.

Vehicles (Accidents)

Mr. Fry: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people at work have been (a) killed and (b) injured off the highway by vehicles reversing; figures for each of the last five years for which they are available.

Mr. Nicholls: The table gives the available information for deaths of employees at work struck by reversing vehicles. The deaths are those reported under the reporting regulations for accidents at work (see note [1]). Accidents reportable under the Road Traffic Act 1972 are excluded.

Information for non-fatal injuries could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Fry: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many (a) fatalities and (b) injuries have been caused to people at work whilst off the highway by motor vehicles in each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Nicholls: The table gives the available information for employees at work struck by vehicles. The injuries are those reported under the relevant accident reporting regulations (see notes 1, 3 and 4). They exclude any accidents reportable under the Road Traffic Act 1972.

Investments

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much money has been spent in each of the last 10 years by his Department on attracting investment from (a) inside the United Kingdom and (b) overseas for (i) Scotland, (ii) Wales, (iii) Northern Ireland and (iv) each of the English regions, by region.

Mr. Cope: It is not a principal function of my Department to encourage regional investment. There are, however, two areas of expenditure which do create investment and the regional analysis is as follows:

Region	Assistance to tourist projects in England[1]		City action team project fund
	1985-86 £000s	1986-87 £000s	1986-87 £000s	1987-88 £000s

South West	2,464	3,519	—	—
East Anglia	815	785	—	—
Southern	1,290	1,945	—	—

[1] Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland have equivalent schemes for assistance to tourist projects.
[2] £1·5 million of this sum was to attract investment from overseas.

All investment is from inside the United Kingdom except where specifically indicated. The Department assumed responsibility for tourism matters in September 1985. We ceased to have responsibility for city action teams from 1 October 1987.

Rural Areas

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what progress is being made by his Department in reducing unemployment in rural areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: Information on unemployment in rural areas is not readily available. However, an independent unemployment analysis carried out for the Development Commission for Rural England suggests that rural areas are sharing in the general drop in unemployment. The analysis estimated that the average unemployment rate in the Development Commission's rural development areas as a whole fell from 10·4 per cent. in the year to April 1987. During the same period, the unemployment rate nationally fell from 11·5 per cent. to 10·9 per cent. and since then has fallen further to 9·4 per cent.

My Department is playing its part with other interested Departments in fostering these improvements by helping rural economies to diversify and generate new jobs through support for local enterprise agencies, encouragement of rural enterprise, our enterprise, employment and training measures.

Food (Retail Price Index)

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment which food categories are included in the household food budget for the purposes of measuring the retail price index.

Mr. Lee: All categories of food are included in the household budget for the purposes of compiling the retail prices index.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

West Bank and Gaza

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further representations he has made to the Israeli Government on the security situation in the occupied territories of the West Bank and Gaza; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The Israeli Government are well aware of our continuing concern at the unrest in the occupied territories and their response to it.

Mr. Terry Waite

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has received any recent information on the whereabouts of Mr. Terry Waite; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We continue to receive many rumours about Terry Waite's whereabouts. Wherever practicable they are analysed and followed up, but to date none of them has yielded any firm or reliable information.

Beirut Hostages

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contacts have been made with the International Committee of the Red Cross regarding the locations, safety and fate of British hostages being held in Beirut.

Mr. Eggar: The International Committee of the Red Cross cannot be involved in negotiations with captors but would act as a channel if necessary as part of arrangements agreed by others. No claim has been made by those holding the British hostages. A formal ICRC role is not therefore feasible, although Her Majesty's embassy in Beirut has informal contact with the local ICRC representative.

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if any discussions have taken place with other Governments whose nationals are held hostage in Beirut, Lebanon, on establishing a common strategy for dealing with the kidnappers.

Mr. Eggar: We have worked hard with our partners and allies to formulate a common policy in dealing with terrorism. All our European partners gave a firm undertaking at the European Council in December 1986 not to make concessions under duress to terrorists or their sponsors. At the Venice economic summit in June 1987, Heads of State and Government confirmed their commitment to the same principle.

Hong Kong (Human Rights)

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the application after 30 June 1997 of each of those international human rights conventions and other agreements that (a) do and (b) do not currently apply in Hong Kong.

Mr. Eggar: The Joint Declaration on the queston of Hong Kong provides that "The provisions of the international covenant on civil and political rights and the international covenant on economic, social and cultural rights as applied to Hong Kong shall remain in force".

It is our understanding that the Chinese Government will make provision in the Basic Law for the future Hong Kong special administrative region, which they are currently drafting, to give effect to this undertaking in the joint declaration.

Should further relevant conventions be extended to Hong Kong before 1997, we, together with the Chinese Government, would need to consider their continued application to Hong Kong after 30 June 1997.

Hong Kong (ILO Conventions)

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the application after 30 June 1997 of each of those International Labour Organisation conventions that (a) do and (b) do not currently apply in Hong Kong.

Mr. Eggar: It has been agreed in the Sino-British joint liaison group that relevant international labour conventions which currently apply to Hong Kong shall continue to apply to the Hong Kong SAR. Should further international labour conventions need to be applied to Hong Kong before then, we, together with the Chinese Government, would need to discuss the matter.

Plutonium

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when, pursuant to the reply to the hon. Member for Newport, West, on plutonium, Official Report, 20 January, column 721, he expects to conclude consideration of the representations he has received from 20/20 Television.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend is proposing to offer 20/20 Television a meeting with appropriate officials.

Crown Prerogative

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what directions he has given to officials in United Kingdom dependent territories on the exercise of the right of Crown prerogative in the course of their duties.

Mr. Eggar: The constitutional arrangements for each territory vary. It is not possible to give a general account of the position in relation to the exercise of the royal prerogative in the various dependent territories.

Council of Ministers

Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on forthcoming business in the European Community Council of Ministers.

Mrs. Chalker: The usual forecast was deposited in the House earlier today. At present nine meetings of the Council of Ministers are planned for February.

The Internal Market Council meets on 2 February to discuss a number of measures relevant to the completion of the single European market.

On 2 February, European Community and European Free Trade Association Ministers will meet to discuss mutual co-operation in tackling trade barriers as the European Community makes progress on completion of the single market.

The Economic and Finance Council will meet on 9 February to discuss the Commission's proposals on the liberalisation of capital movements.

The Agriculture Council is expected to meet on 8-9 February to discuss hormones (article 7 derogation); beef balance sheets for 1988; an amendment to the rules for granting olive oil production aid and the setting of the percentage of aid which may be retained by producer organisations to cover expenses.

The European Council, which will be held in Brussels on 11-12 February, will concentrate on the Community's financial situation, including the reform of the common agricultural policy.

The Foreign Affairs Council meets on 22-23 February to discuss preparations for the forthcoming meeting with Foreign Ministers of the Central American and Contadora group countries; and the commitment made at Punta del Este concerning the rollback of existing restrictions that are inconsistent with the GATT.

The Budget Council will meet on 23-24 February to continue discussions on the establishment of a draft budget for 1988.

The Fisheries Council meets on 29 February to consider discussions between the European Community and Morocco on a fisheries agreement; European Community tariff quotas; amendments to the marketing regime; and technical conservation.

The fourth in a series of meetings between European Community, Central American and Contadora group Foreign Ministers will be held from 29 February to 1 March. Discussions will cover the whole range of the Community's relations with Central America and, in particular, progress on the peace process.

Hong Kong (Animal Welfare)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has about the level of export of black rhino horn from Hong Kong in each of the past five years.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 25 January 1988]: In the past five years only one export licence for rhino horn has been issued; this was in early 1984, for the export to Taiwan of 51 kg of black rhino horn which came from stock held since before the convention on international trade in endangered species came into effect. A total ban on export of all rhino products, including horn, has been in force since 1 April 1986.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs why Her Majesty's Government permit the sale of black rhino horn in Hong Kong.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 25 January 1988]: Only black rhino horn which comes from stock held since before the convention on international trade in endangered species (CITES) came into effect is permitted for sale in Hong Kong. Following the adoption by the Hong Kong Government of a CITES resolution in July 1987, the Hong Kong Government are to impose a total ban on the internal sale of rhino horn in July this year.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has about the importation into Hong Kong of black rhino horn in each of the past five years.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 25 January 1988]: Hong Kong has banned the import of all rhino products, including horn, since 1979.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on the importation of rare and endangered species into Hong Kong for gastronomic purposes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 25 January 1988]: The Hong Kong Government take their responsibilities under the convention on international trade in endangered species very seriously. The import, export, or possession of endangered species, whether alive, dead, parts or derivatives, are prohibited except when authorised by licence. Licences for rare and endangered species that could conceivably be used for gastronomic purposes are issued only to bona fide conservationist organisations to facilitate the exchange of specimens for breeding purposes. No licences have been issued to permit the consumption of such specimens and none will be.

To prevent the illegal importation of rare and endangered species, the Hong Kong Government conduct checks at points of entry and follow up these checks with inspections in markets and restaurants throughout the territory. The Hong Kong Government are at present conducting a review of these measures to see whether they can be made more effective.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many officials in Hong Kong are employed to inspect local restaurants to ensure that endangered species of animals are not served as food.

Mr. Eggar [pursuant to his reply, 18 January 1988, c. 498]: The Agricultural and Fisheries Department of the Hong Kong Government employ five full-time inspectors whose duties include making inspections and spot checks at markets and restaurants in Hong Kong to ensure that endangered species are not served as food.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, pursuant to the reply of 13 January, Official Report, column 285, he will give details of the 14 seizures made in 1987 by the authorities in Hong Kong following inspections at local restaurants.

Mr. Eggar [pursuant to his reply, 18 January 1988, c. 498]: Following inspection of local restaurants to check for contravention of the Animals and Plants (Protection of Endangered Species) Ordinance, Cap. 187, the 14 seizures made in 1987 comprised five pangolins, 18 birds of prey, 16 giant salamanders and 12 bear paws.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, pursuant to the reply of 13 January, Official Report, column 285, he will give details of the 136 seizures made in 1987 by the authorities in Hong Kong of illegally imported animals and plants.

Mr. Eggar [pursuant to his reply, 18 January 1988, c. 498]: The 136 seizures made in 1987 by Hong Kong officials of illegally imported endangered species comprised 16 pangolins, 117 birds of prey, 24 giant salamanders, 140 kilogrammes of pangolin meat and 2·5 kilogrammes of giant salamander meat.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, pursuant to the reply of 13 January, Official Report, column 285, he will explain why only 80 restaurants were visited in Hong Kong during 1987.

Mr. Eggar [pursuant to his reply, 18 January 1988, c. 498]: The Hong Kong Government give priority first to the prevention of the illegal importation of endangered species, their parts and products; second, to the control of their commercial shipment under licence where licensing policy allows trade in scheduled specimens; and, third, to carrying out regular random checks of restaurants and markets in order to detect the sale of any such specimens which may have evaded import controls. Eighty such checks were made during 1987. Reports of the illegal trade in scheduled specimens and of the prohibited use of endangered species for food are investigated as they occur. The Hong Kong Government are considering proposals to strengthen their inspection capacity.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

No. 1 Bridge Street

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Lord President of the Council what are the long-term plans for the use of No. 1 Bridge street.

Mr. Wakeham: The building forms part of what is known as the Bridge street, phase II site. The Property Services Agency, with the agreement of the New Building Sub-Committee, has commissioned a detailed design study for the staged development of the whole site. I understand that the results will be made available shortly.

Meanwhile, when the police recreation area on the ground floor of No. 1 Bridge street is moved to No. 1 Cannon row in 1989, the Parliamentary Works Office will undertake some limited work to enable ITN staff, at present working in Portakabins in Black Rod's Garden, to move into the vacant accommodation.

ENERGY

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what agreements exist for civil nuclear waste to be (a) taken into the United Kingdom from other countries and (b) taken to other countries from the United Kingdom; and how much waste has been moved under either of these two categories.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No radioactive waste separate from irradiated fuel is imported into the United Kingdom. Irradiated fuel is imported for reprocessing at British Nuclear Fuels (BNFL) plant at Sellafield under contracts between BNFL and its customers.

Since 1965, some 2,050 tonnes of uranium in the form of irradiated magnox fuel and 1,900 tonnes of uranium in the form of irradiated oxide fuel have been imported. The relatively small volume of radioactive waste derived has been stored at Sellafield prior to further treatment.

Since 1976, BNFL's contracts for the reprocessing of overseas spent fuel have contained options for the return of wastes. The Government intend that these options should be exercised and that the wastes should be returned. No wastes have yet been returned to overseas customers pending the completion of waste treatment facilities at Sellafield.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what plans exist for returning (a) the nuclear wastes, (b) depleted uranium, and (c) plutonium arising from the reprocessing of the 140 tonnes of spent nuclear fuel owned by O.K.G. Aktiebolag of Sweden, currently stored at Sellafield;

(2) if he will make a statement on current policy for the management of (a) low, (b) intermediate and (c) high level wastes arising from contracts signed pre-1976 with O.K.G. Aktiebolag.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The arrangements for the disposal of all wastes arising from such contracts are set out in the reply given by my hon. Friend the Member for Eddisbury (Mr. Goodlad) to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell) on 2 May 1986, at columns 502-3. Any plutonium to be returned would be subject to the conditions specified in the answer given by my hon. Friend the Member for Eddisbury (Mr. Goodlad) to the then hon. Member for Walthamstow, Mr. Deakins, on 16 April 1985, at column 123. Similar arrangements would apply to any depleted uranium arising.

"Brass Tacks" (Transcript)

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will seek to obtain and place in the Library a copy of the full transcript of the interview he gave to the BBC Television "Brass Tacks" production team for the series broadcast on BBC 2 in October 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Parkinson: No. I understand that the Library obtains transcripts from the broadcasters on behalf of hon. Members.

Latina Magnox Reactor

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has on the future of the Latina Magnox reactor exported to Italy and on what opportunities exist for the United Kingdom's decommissioning expertise to be made available to Italy as it closes down its older nuclear reactors.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I understand that this reactor has been closed. I hope that United Kingdom concerns would be given the opportunity to tender for any future decommissioning contracts.

Irradiated Spent Nuclear Fuel

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State of Energy what is the cost per tonne of irradiated spent nuclear fuel to be reprocessed for the Central Electricity Generating Board and South of Scotland Electricity Board in the thermal oxide reprocessing plant at Sellafield; and how these costs compare with those agreed with foreign utilities for imported thermal oxide nuclear fuel.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The terms under which business is conducted between BNFL and its customers are a commercial matter between the parties involved. I understand that the terms agreed with the Central Electricity Generating Board and the South of Scotland Electricity Board are no less advantageous than those agreed with overseas customers.

British Nuclear Fuels (Staff Retraining)

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the progress of the staff retraining programme for British Nuclear Fuels plc, Sellafield required in the Nuclear Installations Inspectorate report, "British Nuclear Fuels Limited, Sellafield, Post Audit progress", December 1987.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The HSE's post-audit report on BNFL Sellafield recognises that improvements have been made by the company in fulfilling the recommendations on training in the original audit report. Both reports are in the Library of the House.

Nuclear Power Plants (Ministerial Visits)

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the number of (a) nuclear power plants, (b) nuclear fuel cycle facilities, (c) fossil fuel plants, (d) fossil fuel processing facilities and (e) renewable energy production and conversion sites he or his predecessor has visited in the United Kingdom since 1979 in each case giving the date and location of the visit.

Mr. Parkinson: The information requested covers a period of three Parliaments and four Secretaries of State; it can be produced only at disproportionate costs.

Electricity Board Reactors (Reprocessed Fuel)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will give, as a proportion of spent Magnox fuel deriving from United Kingdom electricity board reactors reprocessed in the period 15 December 1986 to 15 December 1987, the amounts reprocessed in each year from 1980 to 1985.

Mr. Michael Spicer: For the tonnages of civil spent fuel reprocessed, I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Member for Eddisbury (Mr. Goodlad) to the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith) on 11 December 1985 at columns 638 and 639. 705 tonnes uranium (te u) were reprocessed in 1985-86.

For the spent Magnox fuel derived from United Kingdom electricity board reactors, I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to the hon. Member for Colne Valley (Mr. Riddick) on 16 December 1987, at column 516.

Oil-related Fabrication Work

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if he will assess the availability and potential during the calendar year 1988 of oil-related fabrication work in the United Kingdom; if he will express that total capacity of availability as a percentage of the total capacity of the United Kingdom fabrication sector; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if, following his recent meeting with a delegation from local authorities within the Highlands, he will assess the availability and potential for oil-related fabrication work in the area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: During the course of 1988 we expect that new contracts for oil-related fabrication work of around 100,000 tonnes will be awarded. This work will come from projects already approved and from others currently under consideration. I am very much aware of the difficulties which the United Kingdom fabrication industry faces and of the continuing overcapacity within it. Virtually all fabrication work for United Kingdom continental shelf development is won by United Kingdom-based companies and United Kingdom yards, including those in the Scottish Highlands. Securing new work will depend on being competitive and maintaining good labour relations.

Polonium 210 (Windscale Fire)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when the first official mention was made of the release of polonium 210 in the 1957 Windscale fire, giving details of the source, date and place of publication.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Two reports which referred to polonium were produced by Atomic Energy Authority employees in 1958. The references are as follows:

Stewart N. G. and Crooks R. A., Long-Range Travel of the Radioactive Cloud from the Accident at Windscale. Nature vol. 182 no. 4636 pp627-628.

Dunstar H. J., Howells H. and Templeton W. L., District Surveys following the Windscale Accident, October 1957.

Proc 2nd UN Conference on Peaceful Uses of Atomic Energy vol. 18 pp296-308 (1958).

Nuclear Installations

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if, pursuant to his answer of 22 January on the Radiation Effects Research Foundation report, he will place the National Radiological Protection Board GS-9 document in the Library; what is the membership of the working group advising the Health and Safety Commission; if the remit of this working group includes a re-evaluation of the cost factors in nuclear power investment and the need for any modifications to existing nuclear installations; when the working group plans to report to the Health and Safety Commission; and if the working group's advice will be made available to any planning inquiry into new nuclear power installations.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I am informed by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment that the Health and Safety Commission's Working Group on Ionising Radiations (WGIR) has the following terms of reference:

"To consider all matters concerning the Ionising Radiations Regulations 1985 and related radiation protection matters that are referred to it by the HSE or the Commission and to advise the Commission."

Members of the working group have been nominated by the CBI, the TUC, local authority interests, the National Radiological Protection Board, Government Departments and professional bodies. Among the issues to be addressed initially by WGIR is what action to recommend the commission to take on the advice on dose limitation provided by national and international bodies. It is expected to have reported to the commission on this by the end of 1988. Wider distribution of any report will be a matter for the commission.

I am arranging for a copy of the National Radiological Protection Board's GS-9 document to be placed in the Library of the House.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Sheep

Ms. Walley: To ask the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps have been and are being taken to ensure that potentially contaminated sheep taken to Staffordshire from restricted areas of Cumbria are being monitored.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Sheep may only be sold out of the restricted area of Cumbria after live monitoring. Those found to be above 1,000 bq/kg must be indentified by clipping on the head and neck and marking with a distinctive long lasting paint of a specified colour. It is an offence to slaughter sheep until all sheep of that specified colour have been released from control or the individual animal has been subsequently live monitored and found to be below the 1,000 bq/kg level. In this case it is identified with a distinctive Ministry ear tag as being no longer under slaughter restriction.

All slaughterhouse, livestock market and showground operators in Staffordshire have been informed in writing of the details of these controls and any changes to them, correspondence being copied to the local authority.

Food and Drink Surpluses

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the total current volume in sterling of surplus food and drink in the EEC.

Mr. Donald Thompson: A note setting out the volume of EC intervention stocks of agricultural commodities is deposited in the Library of the House and updated monthly. The estimated book value of the EC stocks set out in the most recently deposited note is £5·5 billion.

Milk Marketing Board (Chairman)

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the chairman of the Milk Marketing Board; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Donald Thompson: My right hon. Friend the Minister and I last met the chairman of the Milk Marketing Board on 16 December when we discussed a number of issues of current concern to the dairy industry.

Beef (Hormones)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what regulations exist for the prevention of the use of hormones in European and British beef; and whether any action is being taken to ensure that beef imported from the United States of America and Canada is also hormone free.

Mr. Donald Thompson: A ban on the administration of hormones to livestock for fattening purposes imposed by EC directives 81/602 and 85/649 was implemented in all member states by 31 December 1987. Imports from third countries such as the USA and Canada, where hormone growth promoters continue to be used, are, however, authorised until 31 December 1988.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Shooting Range, Bruslee

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what investigations were undertaken by the Northern Ireland Department of Agriculture into the potential effects on the livelihood of local farmers of the establishment of a military shooting range at Bruslee, Newtownabbey, Co. Antrim.

Mr. Viggers: None. I understand that it would have been for the local council, from which the land was leased, to take account of local issues relating to the project.

Rents

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what increase in rents is proposed by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive; what reason has been given for this increase; what is its relation to the current rate of inflation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: The Housing Executive's proposals for rental income in 1988-89 will be finalised as part of its annual budget which I expect to receive for approval at the end of February. However, the housing expenditure figures for 1988-89 which I announced in November last assumed that Housing Executive rents would rise by 9·2 per cent. from April 1988, subject to confirmation of a similar increase in England and Wales. This would maintain the recent policy of applying to Housing Executive rents the same increase, in percentage terms, as in England and Wales and would represent a rise of about 5 per cent. above the rate of inflation.

Building Control

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will take steps to require applicants who seek planning permission to obtain certification that plans meet building control regulations before proceeding.

Mr. Needham: No. Not all classes of building work require planning permission and for those which do it would introduce unreasonable and unnecessary delay without adding significantly to the effectiveness of building regulations.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information he has as to the numbers of new properties completed and occupied before plans have been amended to meet building control regulations; and if he will take steps to ensure that district council building control officers are able to obtain amendments to incomplete plans submitted in a reasonable time after request.

Mr. Needham: None. Information in the form requested is not readily available and could be obtained and compiled only at disproportionate cost. Neither the Building Regulations (Northern Ireland) Order 1979 nor the regulations made under it require applicants to submit amended drawings within a prescribed period. I have at present no intention of introducing legislation prescribing such a period.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many and what percentage of plans submitted to district councils in Northern Ireland have required amendment before approval could be granted under building control regulations in each of the last three years.

Mr. Needham: Information in the form requested is not readily available and could be obtained and compiled only at disproportionate cost.

Ballyeasborough Primary School

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the enrolment at Ballyeasborough primary school in each of the past 10 years; why it is proposed to close the school; which school in the district has the facilities to accommodate the children of Ballyeasborough; and if he will make a statement on the future provision of primary education for children from Ballyeasborough district in the Ards peninsula.

Dr. Mawhinney: Enrolments at 31 December were as follows:

	Number
1978	58
1979	61
1980	65
1981	67
1982	59
1983	49
1984	48
1985	51
1986	51
1987	58

In May 1985, the Department of Education approved the formal development proposal to close Ballyeasborough primary school when Victoria primary school, Ballyhalbert, is rebuilt with appropriate extended permanent accommodation. In making this proposal the South Eastern education and library board had regard to the substandard accommodation at both schools, and to the future projected enrolments at both schools which fell short of the recommended viability level for a rural primary school.

The new accommodation for Ballyhalbert primary school will cater for 91 to 123 pupils. It is expected that some of the Ballyeasborough pupils will transfer to Portavogie primary school.

Funds have been made available for the new accommodation to be provided at Ballyhalbert, and building work is due to commence his month.

RUC (Allegations Against Officers)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if Royal Ulster Constabulary officers, the subject of allegations made by Mr. Chan Hok-Chun and Mr. Hui Yat-Chi, continue to be suspended from duty; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: The question of suspension of a police officer is a matter for the Chief Constable of the RUC. But I understand one officer continues to be suspended from duty.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what disciplinary action is to be taken against Royal Ulster Constabulary officers subject to inquiries into allegations made by Mr. Chan Hok-Chun and Mr. Hui Yat-Chi; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: I understand that the RUC's investigation is not completed and that no decision has so far been taken.

Maghaberry Prison

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Stretford (Mr. Lloyd), Official Report, column 201, from where he anticipates that the prisoners accounting for the anticipated rise in the number of inmates at Maghaberry from 38 to 100 by mid-February will be drawn.

Mr. Stanley: The number of inmates at Maghaberry (male) prison has now risen to 93. These prisoners have been drawn from Maze, Magilligan and Belfast prisons.

Belfast City Council (High Sheriff)

Sir John Biggs-Davison: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what grounds Belfast city council have given for declining to nominate a high sheriff for 1987 and 1988, respectively.

Mr. Tom King [holding answer 28 January 1988]: No grounds were given.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Community Care

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, when he now expects to receive and publish Sir Roy Griffiths' review on the future development of community care.

Mr. Newton: I understand that Sir Roy hopes to complete his review shortly. Issues arising from it, including publication, will then be considered.

Maternity Allowance

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many women in the Glasgow, Central constituency claimed maternity allowance for the last year for which figures are available; and how many women are expected to qualify for maternity payment from the social fund after April 1987, assuming that the number of births remains constant.

Mr. Scott: Information is not available in the form requested. But in the 12 months ending 12 January 1988, the latest year for which figures are available, the following number of claims to maternity allowance were made at the Department's offices which now cover the constituency although the boundaries are not conterminous:

	Number
Bridgeton	161
Laurieston	579
City	145
Rutherglen	302

The number of social fund maternity payments made by local offices in the constituency for the period from 6 April 1987 to 12 January 1988 was as follows:

	Number
Bridgeton	243
Laurieston	321
City	205
Rutherglen	450

No separate forecasts were made of the number of women in the constituency likely to qualify for a social fund maternity payment.

National Health Service Expenditure

Mr. Forth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the details of budgeted expenditures on the National Health Service for the West Midlands regional health authority, Bromsgrove and Redditch district authority, and the Worcester district health authority, for 1987-88, 1987-88 (outturn) and 1988-89.

Mrs. Currie: In 1987-88 the West Midlands regional health authority received an initial revenue cash limit of £1,114·4 million. Subsequent additions were made as follows:

	£ million
Following the Government's acceptance of the review body recommendations	26·6
From the waiting list fund	2·9
For breast cancer screening	0·2
Following my right hon. Friend, the Minister for Health's announcement of additional funding for 1987-88 on 16 December	6·7

Outturn figures for 1987-88 will not be available until later this year. The region's initial revenue cash limit for 1988-89 is £1,213·8 million. Allocations to the Bromsgrove and Redditch and Worcester district health authorities are a matter for the West Midlands regional health authority.

Hospitals (Building and Maintenance Costs)

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services which hospitals built in the last 10 years have needed more than £1 million of remedial or maintenance expenditure in any one year; and how much has been spent on them.

Mrs. Currie: Information held centrally on hospital building schemes in England shows only one instance of expenditure in one year of over £1 million on the remedy of defects: building and engineering costs of reinstatement of the cardiac wing of Great Ormond street hospital are currently estimated at £17 million. Litigation continues in respect of claims for the recovery of these costs.

Annual maintenance expenditure of over £1 million is incurred on most hospitals over about 500 beds but the inquiries necessary for a breakdown between remedial and routine work could not be made without disproportionate cost. If my hon. Friend has any particular hospital in mind I would be glad to inquire for him.

National Health Service Staff

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the total numbers in whole-time equivalent of (a) directly-employed National Health Service staff and (b) hospital nursing and midwifery staff in England for 1986.

Mr. Newton: The available information is given in the table.

National Health Service staff in post in England at 30 September 1986

	Whole-time equivalents[1]
Total Directly Employed Staff[2]	801,600
Hospital Nursing and Midwifery Staff[3]	354,700

Source: DHSS Annual Censuses of NHS Medical and Non-Medical Manpower.

[1] Figures are independently rounded to nearest one hundred (100) whole-time equivalents.

[2] Excludes locum medical and dental and agency nursing and midwifery staff.

[3] Includes agency nursing and midwifery staff.

Sir Peter Hordern: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many were employed in the National Health Service as doctors, nurses, administrators, cleaners and other staff in 1961, 1971, 1981 and at the latest convenient date.

Mr. Newton: Doctors, nurses, administrators, cleaners and other staff have been interpreted as

Medical and Dental
Nursing and Midwifery
Administrative and Clerical
Ancillary
Others

Such information as is available is shown in the table. Figures for 1961 are not held centrally.

NHS staff in post in England

At 30 September	Whole time equivalents[1]
	1971[7]	1981	1986
Medical and Dental[2]	29,500	41,000	43,200
Nursing and Midwifery[3]	285,400	391,800	402,700
Administrative and Clerical	70,400	108,800	111,400
Ancillary[4,5]	168,000	172,200	124,300
Others[5,6]	76,300	110,600	120,000
Total directly employed staff	629,500	824,400	801,600

Source: DHSS Annual Censuses of NHS Medical and Non-Medical Manpower

[1] Figures are independently rounded to nearest one hundred (100) whole time equivalents.

[2] Includes permanent paid, honorary and locum staff.

[3] Includes agency staff. Figures not adjusted to take account of the reduction in nurses contractual hours (from 40 to 37½ per week) during 1980-81.

[4] Includes staff in cleaning/domestic, catering, portering and other ancillary areas of work.

[5] On 1 April 1984 operating department assistants transferred from ancillary to professional and technical staff group. Figures not adjusted to take account of this change.

[6] Includes professional and technical, works, maintenance and ambulance staff.

[7] Due to the effects of the 1974 reorganisation some staffing figures for 1971 may not be on a consistent basis with those for 1981 and 1986.

Nurses (Pay)

Mr. Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will set out for the various grades of nurses in the National Health Service the current salary scales inclusive of London weighting; what is the procedure for pay review; and what is the current progress with this.

Mr. Newton: The pay of nursing staff, midwives and health visitors is determined on the recommendations of the independent review body appointed by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister in 1983. The review body is currently taking oral and written evidence from the Health Departments and staff side and is expected to report in the spring.

Current salary scales for nurses, including the London weighting allowances, are set out in the table.

Grade	Salary scale including London Weighting[1] £ per annum
Student nurse	5,470; 5,665; 6,100.
Nursing Auxiliary	5,495; 5,705; 5,915; 6,125; 6,345; 6,565; 6,785.
Enrolled Nurse	7,180; 7,430; 7,680; 7,930; 8,180; 8,530; 8,680.
Staff Nurse	8,230; 8,490; 8,750; 9,010; 9,270; 9,530.
Sister II	9,930; 10,430; 10,930; 11,430; 11,930; 12430; 12,930.
Senior Nurse 7	11,780; 12,320; 12,860; 13,400; 13,940; 14,480.

[1] In addition nurses receive extra payments for working unsocial hours and overtime.

Abortions

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many of those who have had abortions since 1967 have subsequently had psychiatric treatment.

Mr. Newton: I regret this information is not available.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many National Health Service abortions took place in 1985, 1986 and 1987.

Mr. Newton: The statistics of notifications of abortions carried out under the Abortion Act 1967 identify the category of premises where the operation took place. The table shows the number of abortions carried out in National Health Service premises, and for residents of England and Wales only the number of 'agency' abortions on National Health Service patients.

Number of notifications of abortions carried out under the Abortion Act 1967 performed (a) in National Health Service premises, residents and non-residents and (b) in non-National Health Service premises on National Health Service patients under 'agency' arrangements, residents only. England and Wales 1985 to 1987

Year	(a) National Health Service premises	(b) non-National Health Service 'Agency'
1985	65,254	5,919
1986	67,529	6,819
1987[1]	33,695	3,819

[1] January to June inclusive (provisional).

'Agency' gives the number of operations on National Health Service patients undertaken through arrangements between certain National Health Service authorities and the private sector. For National Health Service premises, an unknown number of operations are carried out on non-National Health Service patients.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the names of the 12 clinics which performed the most abortions in 1986 on foreign women with pregnancies of more than 17 weeks gestation, and the percentage of total abortions of more than 17 weeks gestation, and the percentage of total abortions of more than 17 weeks gestation on foreign women that the abortions performed by each clinic represent.

Mr. Newton: For reasons of maintaining confidentiality, statistics relating to individual premises are not released.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many doctors and nurses were engaged on National Health Service abortions in 1985, 1986 and 1987.

Mr. Newton: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will expand on his statement during the report stage of the Social Security Bill, Official Report, 13 January, column 384, in relation to the protection of severely disabled people after the April social security changes by pursuing a solution that will depend on the voluntary sector.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Liverpool, West Derby (Mr. Wareing) on 19 January 1988 at column 685.

Ministerial Visit (Cornwall)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to visit Cornwall to see local hospitals.

Mrs. Currie: Not at present. Ministers do, however, frequently visit health authorities, and the last such visit to Cornwall was in August 1986.

Transitional Protection

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will provide a breakdown of the extra £220 million to be spent in income support in 1988-89 after transitional protection, referred to in the Official Report of 19 November 1987, column 1250, into claimant groups (a) including and (b) excluding compensation for the 20 per cent. contribution to rates.

Mr. Scott: The breakdown of the extra £220 million is as follows:

	Extra spending (£ million)
Pensioners age 80+	+20
Pensioners age 60-79	+30
Sick or disabled	+50
Lone parents	+80
Couples with children	+50
Others	−10
Total	+220

The £220 million includes compensation for the 20 per cent. contribution to rates. This figure cannot therefore be broken down excluding that compensation.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many disabled pensioners currently receiving supplementary benefit who will not qualify for the higher pensioner premium will receive transitional protection under the structural reform of social security benefits.

Mr. Scott: The information is not available in the form requested. All claimants aged 80 or more will receive the higher pension premium, as will an estimated 130,000 claimants aged between 60 and 79 years. A total of 380,000 pensioners aged less than 80 who will not qualify for the higher pensioner premium will receive transitional protection, but this protection will not always arise from needs associated with disablement; other factors are involved. We will look again at the detail of the premiums for disabled people when the results of the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys' survey are known.

Negligence

Sir Anthony Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many cases of negligence or breach of statutory duty have been brought against (a) his Department and (b) health authorities in the last three years; whether such claims were covered by insurance; how much money was paid on settlement; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what requirements are placed by his Department on regional and district health authorities to insure against negligence or breach of statutory duty.

Mrs. Currie: Neither the Department nor health authorities insure against claims relating to negligence or breach of statutory duty but carry their own risks.

The total compensation payments by health authorities for the last three years, including compensation for injuries to persons, damages to property and damages for unfair dismissal were as follows.

	£	Cases
1984-85	5,538,597	3,397
1985-86	8,454,202	3,702
1986-87	11,469,925	4,244

Settlements by the Department in respect of claims for personal injury to members of staff and the public in their dealings with social security local offices were

	£	Cases
1984-85	28,000	14
1985-86	48,000	26
1986-87	23,000	19

(Excludes small claims settled locally).

Figures are not routinely collected on cases where no payment is made.

Income-related Benefits

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish a table showing income support expenditure in 1988-89 broken down into claimant groups as in table 8b in the "Estimated Impact of the Reformed Structure of Income-related Benefits" which will receive (a) more and (b) less than if supplementary benefit had continued with a normal uprating (i) including and (ii) excluding the compensation for 20 per cent. contribution to rates.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is as follows:

	(a) Income support more than supplementary benefit	(b) Income support less than supplementary benefit	Total
(i) Including rates compensation (£ million)
Pensioners
Singles	510	200	710
Couples	340	130	470
Non-pensioners with children
Lone parents	1,250	380	1,630
Couples	1,720	160	1,880
Non-pensioners without children
Single age 25+	1,040	270	1,310
Single age <25	650	360	1,010
Couples	80	330	410
Total	5,590	1,830	7,420
(ii) Excluding rates compensation (£ million)
Pensioners
Singles	310	300	610
Couples	260	190	450
Non-pensioners with children
Lone parents	1,020	580	1,600
Couples	1,550	290	1,840
Non-pensioners without children
Single age 25+	610	650	1,260
Single age < 25	30	950	980
Couples	40	360	400
Total	3,820	3,320	7,140

These figures take no account of transitional protection or estimated expenditure on boarders who are generally to be unaffected.

Transplant Organs (Register)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has had from Sir Roy Calne, FRS on the need for a register of transplant organs; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Edwina Currie: We have received no representations from Sir Roy Calne, but we are in continuing discussion with the British Transplantation Society about the establishment of a register of transplant operations.

Bradford Health Authority

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will undertake an immediate inquiry into the impact on patient services in Bradford of cuts in expenditure by Bradford health authority of £2,100,000 by 1989-90;

(2) what is the latest estimate of Bradford health authority's revenue and capital expenditure for 1987-88; how much non-recurring allocation has been received by Bradford health authority; and whether he expects the authority to be in deficit at the end of the current financial year;

(3) what requests he has made of Bradford health authority to reduce expenditure in 1988-89 and 1989-90; what deficit on revenue expenditure will accrue in 1988-89 and 1989-90 if no reduction in expenditure is agreed; what reduction in revenue expenditure is required in 1988-89 and 1989-90 to avoid deficits arising in each year; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: Allocation of funds, revenue and capital, to Bradford health authority, and any associated monitoring of expenditure, is the responsibility of the Yorkshire regional health authority. The hon. Member may therefore wish to contact the regional health authority chairman for the information he is seeking.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the effect on anticipated deficits of Bradford health authority of each per cent. pay awards which are not met by central Government; how many staff are now employed by the authority; how many staff were employed by the authority in each of the last five years: and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: The table sets out the number of staff directly employed by Bradford health authority for the years 1982 to 1986, the latest year for which data are centrally available. It is not possible to calculate accurately centrally the cost of each percentage increase of pay awards for individual district health authorities.

The hon. Member may wish to write to the chairman of Bradford health authority for the information he is seeking.

NHS Directly Employed Staff[1] in Post in Bradford District Health Authority

At 30 September	Whole equivalents[2]
1982	5,610
1983	5,570
1984	5,390
1985	5,170
1986	5,090

Source: DHSS annual censuses of NHS medical and non-medical manpower.

[1] Includes permanent paid, honorary and locum staff. Excludes senior registrars and consultants whose contracts are held by the regional health authority. Includes agency nursing and midwifery staff.

[2] Figures are independently rounded to nearest ten (10) whole time equivalents.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the names of the members of Bradford health authority; when each was appointed and how long each has served; which members receive an annual salary; and what is the annual salary and annual service in days served in each case.

Mrs. Currie: The members of Bradford health authority are appointed by the Yorkshire regional health authority and Bradford city council. Details are not held centrally but may be obtained from the chairman of the regional health authority. Health authority members do not receive a salary but are entitled to claim travel and subsistence allowances and, in certain circumstances, to some compensation for loss of earnings.

Health Services

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what consideration he gives to any proposal by a district health authority to reduce treatment to those living in a neighbouring district health authority.

Mrs. Currie: The NHS is a national service and general practitioners are free to refer their patients to the consultant they consider most able to benefit their patient. The decision as to whether to accept a referral is a matter for the clinical judgment of the individual consultant. In some instances the consultant may conclude that the patient does not have need for the special services provided by the hospital where he is based and would be more appropriately treated elsewhere. These are not matters where it would be appropriate for us to intervene.

Coronary Disease

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list in the Official Report the number of sufferers of coronary disease whose final diagnosis resulted from initial detection during the course of a National Health Service sight test in each of the past 10 years.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that this information is not available.

Disabled Pensioners

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many disabled pensioners claiming for the first time after April who would previously have received a heating addition and domestic requirements addition worth at least £10 will receive less under income support than they would have done under supplementary benefit.

Mr. Scott: I regret that the information is not available.

Heating Additions

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether supplementary benefits claimants who are tenants of homes built with no fines concrete are entitled to a heating addition.

Mr. Scott: Weekly supplementary benefit heating additions are not awarded specifically to claimants who live in homes built with no fines concrete. Heating additions are, however, available to householder claimants if their home is difficult to heat adequately because, for instance, rooms are damp or draughty.

General Practitioners (Charges)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to introduce charges for patients visiting their general practitioners.

Mr. Newton: No.

Private Patients

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give for 1985, 1986 and 1987 (a) the number of paybeds, (b) the number of discharges and deaths of private patients, (c) the average number of paybeds occupied by private patients daily (d) the percentage occupancy for each district health authority and special health authority.

Mrs. Currie: I shall let the hon. Member have such information as can be obtained without incurring disproportionate cost as soon as possible.

Nurses

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his answer of 13 January, Official Report, column 327, how much money in real terms expressed at constant prices has been spent by health regions on nursing training in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on 27 January 1988 at column 264.

Invalidity Benefit

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services to what factors he ascribes the increase in the average number of persons receiving invalidity benefit from 700,000 in 1982-83 to 995,000 in 1987-88 and the projected rise to 1,120,000 in 1990-91, shown in table 15.6 of Cm 288-II.

Mr. Scott: Invalidity benefit case loads are likely to reflect a number of demographic, medical and economic influences. To understand more fully the importance of these various factors in explaining the numbers of invalidity pensioners, the Department has commissioned research by economists at Newcastle-upon-Tyne university and polytechnic. It is hoped that this project will in due course give a clearer indication of the reasons for the recent increases in invalidity benefit case loads.

Single Payments

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he received the commissioner's decision referred to in his answer of 16 November 1987, Official Report, column 445; and whether, in the light of this decision, he will amend regulations 10 and 10A of the single payments regulations to ensure that single payments for furniture are made where the claimant has become the tenant or owner of an unfurnished home on the date of claim.

Mr. Scott: The commissioner's decision referred to is still awaited.

Benefits

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will ensure that severely disabled people who have a combined order book for attendance allowance and another long-term benefit receive as much compensation for the error in the retail prices index as those receiving the same benefits who have two order books; and how many people are in each of these categories.

Mr. Scott: Attendance allowance is paid at two rates, of which only the higher rate was affected by the error in the RPI. Because of the difficulty of distinguishing at the post office counter between recipients of the two rates, all AA recipients will be eligible for an ex-gratia payment. Where lower rate AA, received by nearly three fifths of AA recipients, is paid in combination with another long-term benefit, the £8 special payment is likely to compensate fully for any loss suffered. Where higher rate AA is paid with another long-term benefit, the degree of undercompensation will vary with the type of second benefit and the length of time for which the recipient is entitled to both benefits during the period April 1987 to April 1989. In these circumstances it would not be appropriate to make a second special payment to all recipients of attendance allowance, simply because a small minority may for special reasons receive benefit on two separate order books, both attracting an £8 payment. It is not known how many attendance allowance order books are held separately by claimants also receiving another long-term benefit, but the numbers are likely to be small.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what categories of claimants will have lost more as a result of the error in the retail prices index than the amount of compensation they are to receive; what will be the average net loss per loser and the total net loss for each of these categories; and how much money is to be distributed to charities to make good these losses.

Mr. Scott: It is not possible to say with accuracy which claimants will have lost more than the amount of the special payments that they will receive because the flat-rate special payments exercise does not take account of whether claimants have been or would be entitled to benefit for the whole of the two years affected by the error in the retail prices index. Generally speaking, the types of claimants who are likely to be undercompensated are those who receive the higher rate of attendance allowance combined with retirement pension, invalidity benefit, or widow's benefit. In each case the maximum net loss per loser will be about £5. The total net loss for these retirement pensioners will be about £640,000; for the invalidity pensioners about £250,000; and for the widows about £5,000. These net losses will comprise about £900,000 of the sum to be distributed among charities.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how much planned expenditure from the social fund for 1989-90 and 1990-91 is for maternity and funeral payments, cold weather payments, community care grants and the excess of leave over repayments, respectively.

Mr. Scott: These figures are planning figures and subject to review in the light of experience of running the social fund.

£ million

	1989-90	1990-91
Maternity and funeral payments	35·2	36·3
Exceptionally cold weather payments	4·5	4·5
Community care grants	60	60
Net cost of loans	39	39

Social Workers

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people are currently receiving training in the certificate of qualification in social work; and to what extent this meets the demand for trained social workers.

Mr. Newton: I have been advised by the Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work that the total number of students on training courses leading to the award of the certificate of qualification in social work, in the United Kingdom, was 6,140 in 1986—the latest year for which figures are available. In the same year there were also 3,812 students on schemes leading to the award of the certificate in social service, which is now accepted by the council as a social work qualification.

The council estimates that an annual intake of 5,000 students is necessary to maintain the current level of qualified social workers. The combined intake of students to CQSW courses and CSS schemes in 1986 was 4,785.

Employment Statistics

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people have been registered as long-term off work due to sickness in the United Kingdom in March, June, September and December for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Scott: Information is not available in the form requested. The numbers of people who were sick for at least 28 weeks and were in receipt of invalidity benefit at the end of the statistical periods of the last 10 available years is shown in the table.

Windscale Fire

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if, in the light of the recent release of papers, he will review previous ministerial statements to the effect that there is no evidence that anyone in the United Kingdom has died as a result of polonium and other radiactive isotopes released into the atmosphere during the Windscale fire of 1957.

Mrs. Currie: All relevant information relating to the health consequences of the Windscale fire was available to Government at the time of my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister's statement on 18 April 1983, at column 12.

NHS (Charges)

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if it is intended that the present review of the National Health Service will consider charges for National Health Service patients receiving treatment in hospitals.

Mr. Moore: The review will be wide ranging and fundamental, and concerned with the development of the Health Service to meet the country's needs over many years to come. We do not intend to begin the review by ruling out any proposals for reform. Each will be considered on its merits and, as my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister said in her reply to the hon. Member on 28 January, at column 313, the Government will consider carefully any submissions put to them.

So far as hospital charges are concerned, my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister reiterated on 28 January, at columns 477-78, that the Government will not introduce board and lodging charges for National Health Service patients during the lifetime of this Parliament.

War Widows

Mr. Cormack: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will use some of the funds made available to correct the error in the retail prices index, as announced to the House on 18 December 1987, to provide extra provision for the more elderly war widows who do not receive Ministry of Defence pensions or other forms of compensation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will use some of its funds made available to correct the error in the retail prices index, as announced to the House on 18 December 1987, to provide extra provision for the more elderly war widows who do not receive Ministry of Defence pensions or other forms of compensation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: Payments will be made to war widows to compensate them for the error in the retail prices index. The money available to correct this error could not provide for improvements in war widows pensions provisions.

Health Checks

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what provision he is proposing to make with hospitals for pathology and X-ray tests, in the light of the proposal in the White Paper, "Promoting Better Health", that patients newly registering with the National Health Service have a health check.

Mr. Newton: It will be for the family doctor to decide whether pathology and X-ray tests are needed, but it is unlikely there will be many such instances. We do not therefore envisage the need for special provision in hospitals for this purpose.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the number of patients awaiting (a) urgent and (b) non-urgent treatment in (i) Leeds Eastern health authority and (ii) Leeds Western health authority on the latest available figures; and if he will give the figures for the previous six and 12 months, respectively.

Mr. Newton: I shall let the hon. Member have such information as can be obtained without incurring disproportionate cost as soon as possible.

War Pensioners

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will take steps to ensure that war pensioners have rights of appeal to independent tribunals, comparable with those of social security claimants.

Mr. Scott: Most pensioners already have a right of appeal to an independent Pensions Appeals Tribunal against decisions about their entitlement to war pension and their level of assessment. If they are dissatisfied with a decision about which there is no statutory right of appeal, they may ask at any time for it to be reviewed by the Secretary of State and can ask their local war pensions committee to make representations on their behalf. War pensions committees are statutorily empowered to hear and consider such complaints and to make representations to the Secretary of State. I am satisfied that these long-standing arrangements operate satisfactorily to safeguard the interests of war pensioners.

Neonatal Units (Staffing)

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list for each year since 1976, for each neonatal unit in England (a) the number of sister posts, (b) the number of staff nurses or staff midwives, (c) the number of support nursing staff including nursing nurses and nursing auxiliaries and (d) the number of medical staff with specific commitment to neonates.

Mr. Newton: Information to this level of detail is not collected centrally for medical staff and is available for nursing and midwifery staff in each district health authority only from September 1981 but this could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Information by regional health authority for 1981 and 1986 is given in the table.

[2] Occupation codes identifying the Special Care Baby Unit area of work were introduced in 1981 therefore some of the apparent increases in staff in this area of work during this period may be partially due to improvements in coding.

Sheffield Health Authority

Mr. Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the increases in medical, nursing and dental staff, whole-time equivalents for Sheffield health authority for the period 1979 to the latest year available; and what are the equivalent figures for England as a whole.

Mrs. Currie: Such information as is available is shown in the table.

Because of the effects of the 1982 National Health Service reorganisation figures for Sheffield district health authority for the years prior to 1982 are not available on a consistent basis with those for 1982 and later years.

Senior registrars' contracts are held by the regional health authority. The district health authority where these staff work cannot be identified centrally. There will therefore be more doctors and dentists actually working in Sheffield district health authority than are accounted for in the table.

Blood Donors

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what is his estimate of the proportion and number of adults in England and Wales that would be suitable for blood donation;

(2) what proportion and number of suitable adults give blood in England and Wales;

(3) what proportion and number of suitable adults are needed to give blood to make England and Wales self-sufficient in blood and blood-derived products;

(4) whether he will consider reducing the period between permitted donations of blood to four months from six, to ease the shortage of blood and blood-derived products, and to make England and Wales self-sufficient; and if he will make a statement;

Mr. Newton: We are already self-sufficient in whole blood. The new £60 million blood products laboratory at Elstree is now on stream and we expect England and Wales to become self-sufficient in blood products next year. Regional health authorities have been set targets to ensure that the necessary amount of plasma is collected for fractionation in the new laboratory.

Plasma may either be collected from donors directly by plasmapheresis at intervals of a few weeks, or may be extracted from blood donations generally given twice a year. Guidance on the frequency of donation is kept under review.

It is not possible simply to relate the number of plasma donations required to the number of donors. A total of about 2·2 million blood and plasma donations were given in 1986. The theoretical eligible donor population is estimated at 27 million but medical restrictions would reduce this total.

Homeless Persons

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations his Department has received from organisations and individuals concerning the consequences for the general health service of resettling homeless persons outside their own borough; and what response has been made to those representations.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 3 December 1987]: We have been unable to trace any representations about resettling homeless persons outside their own borough but the Association of Metropolitan Authorities has written about homelessness in London. The association has asked for a meeting and I have arranged to see them, together with appropriate health authority representatives.

Severe Weather Payments

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list, for Scotland, England, Wales and Northern Ireland, how many pensioner households he estimates to be eligible for exceptionally severe weather payments.

Mr. Scott [holding answer 14 December 1987]: The number of pensioner householders aged 65 or over in the United Kingdom who are eligible for exceptionally cold weather payments is as follows:

	Number
Scotland	88,000
England	779,000
Wales	56,000
Northern Ireland	33,000

Note: These figures exclude claimants with capital in excess of £500.

Pensioners (Savings)

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list for Scotland, England, Wales and Northern Ireland, how many pensioners on supplementary pensions he estimates to have savings of £500 or more.

Mr. Scott [holding answer 14 December 1987]: The number of claimants in the United Kingdom in receipt of supplementary pension (that is men aged 65 or over and women aged 60 or over) who have savings in excess of £500 is as follows:

	Number
Scotland	38,000
England	530,000
Wales	26,000
Northern Ireland	10,000

Paediatric Intensive Care Nurses

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what conveniently available figures he has for the shortage of paediatric intensive care nurses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 18 January 1988]: Nationally, the total number of nursing and midwifery staff, including qualified and unqualified staff, in special care baby units and paediatric intensive care has increased by some 157 per cent. between September 1981 and September 1986; from 1,260 to 3,220 in whole-time equivalent terms. Work is in hand to establish a post-basic paediatric intensive care nursing course in Birmingham. It is expected to commence later this year and will be the first of its kind outside London.

The new grading structure for nurses to be introduced later this year will offer better pay and career prospects in clinical nursing for those who take on heavier responsibilities or who specialise in areas such as paediatric intensive care. It is expected that this will help to improve recruitment and retention.

Recruitment and post-basic nurse training are the responsibility of health authorities. Information on shortages is not collected centrally on a routine basis. However, the results of a recent survey by the regional health authorities, undertaken for the nurses' pay review body, are expected shortly.

TRANSPORT

Trunk Roads

12. Mr. Neale: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport by how much capital spending on trunk roads has increased since 1978-79.

Mr. Channon: Actual capital expenditure in 1978-79 was £327 million. Planned capital expenditure for 1987-88 is £893 million. This represents an increase in real terms of 34 per cent. at 1985-86 prices.

Vehicle Mileage (Motorways)

13. Mr. Waller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the percentage change in vehicle mileage on motorways in England since 1982.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The figure for Great Britain is about 70 per cent.

Roll-on/Roll-off Ferries

15. Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he is satisfied with the progress on international arrangements to improve the safety of roll-on/roll-off ferries.

Mr. Channon: Yes. Following wide-ranging consultations, the United Kingdom has submitted, to the International Maritime Organisation, two sets of proposed amendments to the Safety of Life at Sea 74-78 convention. The first set will be considered for adoption in April.

16. Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the consultants employed by his Department to consider the safety of roll-on/roll-off ferries.

Mr. Channon: In the past three years my Department has obtained the services of what is now British Maritime Technology Ltd.; Lloyd's Register of Shipping; Newcastle university; and one consortium, comprising Lloyd's Register of Shipping, Ocean Fleets Ltd. and the General Council of British Shipping.

24. Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to receive interim reports on the structural safety of roll-on/roll-off ferries.

Mr. Channon: The report of the court of formal investigation into the capsize of the Herald of Free Enterprise included in its longer-term recommendations a proposal that there should be urgent investigations to find methods of improving the survivability of ro-ro ferries if the hull was breached. We intend to complete the first phase of this work by the end of this year.

BR (Fares Policy)

17. Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if, when he next meets the chairman of British Rail, he will raise with him the fares policy of British Rail.

Mr. David Mitchell: No. The level and structure of rail fares are matters for British Rail to decide within the general objectives we have set it.

London Regional Transport

18. Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next expects to meet the chairman of London Regional Transport.

Mr. Channon: This Thursday, 4 February.

Vehicle Mileage

19. Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the percentage change in vehicle mileage on roads in England since 1982.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: 22 per cent.

South Dorset (M5)

20. Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent representations he has received in favour of improving road links between south Dorset and the M5.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We have three schemes on the trunk road sections of the route. Two of these, A303 Ilminster bypass and A5 Dorchester bypass, are due to be completed in the summer and autumn respectively. The third scheme, A303 Ilchester-South Petherton, should start construction in the second half of this year. Dorset and Somerset county councils also have their own programmes of major road improvements and aim to bring the rest of this route up to a satisfactory standard.

Heavy Lorries

21. Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his policy towards the introduction of heavier lorries.

66. Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his policy towards the introduction of heavier lorries.

71. Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the maximum weight of heavy goods vehicles.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There are no plans to change the maximum permitted weight of 38 tonnes.

LRT (Ticketing Systems)

22. Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has met the chairman of London Regional Transport to discuss the safety implications of planned London Regional Transport investment in automatic ticketing systems.

Mr. David Mitchell: No. London Underground Limited is responsible for the design of this system and its safe operation. I have no reason to believe that the system, for which financial approval was given in 1985, is unsafe. If the hon. Lady has a particular cause of concern perhaps she will write to me.

28. Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proportion of planned London Regional Transport capital investment is devoted to the installation of automatic ticketing systems.

Mr. David Mitchell: 12 per cent. in the financial year 1988-89.

West German Minister of Transport

23. Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met his West German counterpart; and what was the content of their discussions.

Mr. Channon: I visited Dr. Warnke in Bonn on 25 November, when we discussed prospects for the December Transport Council and transport issues likely to arise during the German presidency of the European Community. We also met at the Transport Council itself.

Fenchurch Street Station

25. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many letters he has received from the general public about British Rail's services to Fenchurch street station; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: We have received about 20 such letters since my right hon. Friend took up his present appointment. The management of the railway is a matter for British Rail. It is working hard to improve the quality of services to Fenchurch street.

London Underground (Ticketing Systems)

26. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received concerning plans by London Underground Ltd. to install automatic ticketing systems.

Mr. David Mitchell: The design and safety of this system is the responsibility of the London Underground, but I am informed that the new ticket gates will provide more passenger openings than the traditional barrier line, and in the event of emergency can quickly be set to a fully open position either locally or from the central command station at Baker street. In addition they are designed to be fail-safe in the event of a sudden loss of power or air supply, allowing passengers to push through easily and rapidly. Reports of wire mesh cages are entirely false.

59. Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has on the safety implications of the installation of automatic ticketing systems on the London underground.

Mr. David Mitchell: I have been made aware of the features being provided as part of the new underground ticketing system to ensure its effective and safe operation in the event of an emergency.

Drink-Driving

27. Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what were the comparable effects of (a) the 1987 Christmas drink and driving campaign and (b) the 1986 campaign.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: 1987 saw increased media coverage, especially in Scotland, of drinking and driving as news and current affairs. The 1987 campaign reintroduced TV advertising. Preliminary police figures suggest the campaign on the whole had a considerable impact on injuries. Full figures will be published later this year.

31. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what lessons were learnt from the 1987 Christmas anti-drink driving campaign; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The most important lesson from the Christmas campaign is the value of the contributions made by the private sector, and by editorial coverage and discussion in the media. We particularly welcome and hope to build on the support of the brewing industry.

What stands out is the fact that advising people to steer clear of alcohol if they are driving and making non-alcoholic drinks attractive and available are more effective measures than arguing about whether testing should be targeted or random.

Road Schemes

29. Mr. Wood: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many major road schemes were completed in 1987.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: In 1987, a total of 28 major road schemes in the national roads programme were completed. The list is as follows:

M5/M42 Junction (southern turn)
M63 Stretford-Eccles improvement stage 3
A1 Baldersby GSJ
A1 Clifton-Stannington bridge improvement
A2 Barham crossroads GSJ
A6 Chapel-en-le-Frith bypass
A10 Buntingford bypass
A11 Wymondham-Cringleford
A12 Martlesham bypass
A19 Ricall and Barlby bypass
A20 Sidcup bypass
A30 Exeter-Okehampton stage 3
A38 Belvedere Cross-Haldon hill GSJ
A38 Hilliards Cross GSJ
A39 Bideford bypass
A43 Brackley bypass
A43 Towcester bypass
A47 Peterborough Longthorpe GSJ
A47 Peterborough Westwood GSJ
A47 Postwick-Blofield dualling
A47 Wardley hill improvement
A52 Barthomley link-M6
A69 Eighton Lodge junction improvement
A303 Furze Hedge improvement
A422 Stratford northern bypass
A406 South Woodford-Barking relief road
A435 Evesham bypass
A596-A595 Thursby bypass

These schemes have added 72 miles to the network at a total works cost of about £275 million.

Civil Aviation (Competition Policy)

30. Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a further statement on his policy on competition in civil aviation.

Mr. Channon: The Government remain committed to the policy set out in the 1984 White Paper on airlines competition of encouraging a sound competitive multi-airline industry, promoting competition in all markets, and ensuring adequate safeguards against anti-competitive behaviour.

Dial-A-Ride

32. Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the average number of trips per person per week for London Dial-A-Ride members.

Mr. David Mitchell: Less than one per week.

41. Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his policy on the number of trips per week that those eligible for Dial-A-Ride services should be able to receive.

52. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his policy towards encouraging increases in the volume of services provided by Dial-A-Ride services.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Dial-A-Ride services outside London are funded generally from the local authorities' revenue support for passenger transport. The Transport Act 1985 imposes a specific duty on local authorities to have regard to the transport needs of people with disabilities. The execution of this duty is entirely a matter for the local authorities.

Minibus Services

33. Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what evidence there is of a change in the level of minibus services as a result of deregulation.

Mr. David Mitchell: Deregulation has strongly encouraged the introduction of minibuses, which served about 40 places at the end of 1985 and more than 250 by the end of 1987.

Lancashire (Grant)

34. Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received on Lancashire's transport supplementary grant for 1988-89.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I have received nine letters, eight from hon. Members and one direct from Lancashire county council. I am replying to them individually.

London (East End)

35. Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals his Department has for improving vehicle access through the east end of London to Essex and East Anglia.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There is an extensive package of proposals for improvements through east London to Essex and East Anglia. The A406 South Woodford to Barking relief road opened before Christmas. Subject to the completion of statutory procedures, a link road between the M11 at Redbridge and the A102(M) at Hackney Wick is planned for start of works in 1990. Improvements to the A13 and A127 are also planned.

A number of studies are also looking into traffic problems in east London. Stage II of the East London assessment study is now under way, with consultants developing a range of options to relieve the transport-related problems of that area. Consultants have been looking into possible improvements to the A13 between Limehouse and Dagenham and the future needs of the A127. A study of the A12 within Essex was also started recently.

Ports Policy

36. Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has undertaken a review of ports policy recently.

Mr. David Mitchell: We keep our ports policy under continual review.

St. Pancras-Sheffield Line

37. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, in view of the disquiet in the communities along the St. Pancras to Sheffield Midland railway line, he will discuss with British Rail the future of that line.

Mr. David Mitchell: I know of no valid reason why people who use the midland main line should feel any disquiet about its future. The line has an excellent high speed train service which will be improved from next May by extra trains, including one between Sheffield and London, and British Rail has just completed a £25 million programme to modernise its signalling. The future of the line is secure.

Manchester International Airport

38. Mr. Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what level of development has been approved for Manchester international airport in each of the last eight years.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Lancashire, West (Mr. Hind) on 11 January 1988 at columns 132-33.

Disabled People (Transport)

39. Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has to increase the provision of transport for the disabled.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Southport (Mr. Fearn) on November 30 at columns 599-602.

Cycle Lighting

40. Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to introduce a campaign stressing the importance to cyclists of having front and rear lighting on their bicycles during the hours of darkness; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We work for increasing cycling safety. Unlit cycles in the dark are a danger to cyclists and other road users.

The Department continues to distribute free material to local authority road safety officers encouraging cyclists to use adequate lights and clothing so that they can be easily seen. This follows up the regulations requiring new bicycles since October 1985 to carry amber pedal reflectors.

BA (British Caledonian)

42. Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has met the chairman of the Civil Aviation Authority to discuss the implications of British Airways' purchase of British Caledonian.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My right hon. Friend frequently meets the chairman of the authority to discuss issues of mutual interest.

Channel Tunnel

43. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the implications for the level of Channel tunnel rail services of the currently planned provision of on-train customs facilities for Channel tunnel train services.

Mr. David Mitchell: Section 12 of the Channel Tunnel Act 1987 requires on-train controls to be provided on services for destinations beyond London, subject to the railway operators asking for them and providing facilities acceptable to the appropriate Ministers. Discussions are in progress between BR and the Departments concerned.

62. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much he has agreed to allow British Rail to invest in the Channel tunnel.

Mr. David Mitchell: As reflected in the latest public expenditure White Paper, we have approved, in principle, a package of investments proposed by the British Railways Board not exceeding £550 million in total to enable Channel Tunnel rail services to commence in 1993. The board is now preparing detailed appraisals of individual elements in the package before final approval can be given.

British Rail Engineering Ltd.

44. Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has held with the chairman of British Rail about the future size of the work force in British Rail Engineering Ltd.

54. Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has held with the chairman of British Rail about the future size of the work force in British Rail Engineering Ltd.

56. Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has held with the chairman of British Rail about the future size of the work force in British Rail Engingeering Ltd.

Mr. David Mitchell: I refer the hon. Members to my reply earlier today to the hon. Members for Crewe and Nantwich (Mrs. Dunwoody) and for Swansea, East (Mr. Anderson).

Civil Aviation Policy

45. Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to meet the chairman of the Civil Aviation Authority to discuss civil aviation policy.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My right hon. Friend frequently meets the chairman of the Authority to discuss issues of mutual interest.

49. Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he intends to amend his policy on civil aviation, in the light of the purchase of British Caledonian by British Airways.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply my right hon. Friend gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Bristol, South (Ms. Primarolo).

57. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he proposes to meet the chairman of British Airways, following its purchase of British Caledonian, to discuss the implications for civil avaition policy.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My right hon. Friend has no plans to meet the chairman of British Airways at the moment.

Rural Bypasses

46. Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many rural bypasses have been authorised over the last three years; what is their total mileage; and what proportion are proposed as dual carriageway.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Since 1 January 1985, orders have been made for 40 bypasses on national roads, with a total length of nearly 170 miles. Of these 15 (37·5 per cent.) are dual carriageway schemes, with a further five (12·5 per cent.) of mixed dual and single carriageway standard.

London Lorry Traffic

47. Mr. Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what studies his Department has made of changes in routes and frequency of lorry traffic in London, following the completion of the M25 orbital motorway; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Classified traffic counts were taken on all major roads in the vicinity of the M25 motorway in 1987, including those in outer London boroughs. The counts are currently being processed and results will be published in "Transport Statistics Great Britain 1977-1987" in September 1988. Traffic counts of medium and heavy goods vehicles crossing cordons on the London boundary, around inner London and around central London fell by 9 per cent. 6 per cent. and 8 per cent. respectively between 1980 and 1986.

Road Casualty Figures

48. Sir Fergus Montgomery: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has on the relative road casualty figures in (a) France, (b) West Germany and (c) the United Kingdom.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Although data on non-fatal injuries are collected in France and West Germany, differences in definitions and the collection mechanisms used mean that valid comparison in casualties is restricted to fatalities.

The population, fatalities in road accidents as well as fatalities per 100,000 motor vehicles and per 100,000 population in France, West Germany and the United Kingdom in 1975 and 1980 to 1986 are shown in the tables.

Bypasses

50. Mr. Couchman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many bypasses have been built since 1979.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A total of 79 bypasses and relief roads have been built since 1979. They represent 40 per cent. of new national road mileage.

Dartford-Thurrock Crossing

51. Mr. Fallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to the implications for the decision to build the Dartford-Thurrock crossing of capacity in the British steel industry.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The 38,000 tonnes of steel which will be required for construction of this proposed new bridge represents a significant potential order for the British steel production and fabrication industry. It would create some 2,500 man years of work most of which would be in the north-east of England and Scotland.

East London River Crossing

53. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his Department's estimate of the changes in the volume and patterns of traffic using the A2 if the east London river crossing is constructed.

Mr. Channon: The Department's estimate, given at the public inquiry into the East London river crossing, was that traffic volume on the A2 would increase by between 15 and 25 per cent. in the area of its junction with ELRC and by about 5 per cent. in the Dartford area.

Driving Standards

55. Mr. Nicholas Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will bring forward proposals to improve standards of driving.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We are considering ways of achieving higher standards through the tuition given by approved driving instructors to learner drivers. The driving test remains a rigorous test of competence to drive and includes assessment of a candidate's driving behaviour. All drivers should aim to improve their driving ability throughout their driving careers. We are looking at ways of encouraging people to do so. We will offer appropriate advice.

London City Airport

58. Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has met the chairman of the Civil Aviation Authority to discuss the London City airport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My right hon. Friend has had no recent meeting with the chairman to discuss London City airport. The chairman did call on him in December to tell him of the possible suspension of flights between London City airport and Paris pending the outcome of an inquiry. That inquiry concluded in January that flights could safely be resumed, and I am pleased to say they are now running normally.

Network SouthEast

60. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if, when he next meets the chairman of British Rail, he will raise with him the quality of service provided by British Rail's Network SouthEast.

Mr. David Mitchell: We regularly monitor the quality of service on Network SouthEast services and we discuss it with the chairman as necessary. So far NSE's performance during 1987-88 suggests that quality is generally improving compared with 1986-87. For example, overall reliability and punctuality have been significantly better during much of the year. NSE is also planning major investments to improve quality. For example, it plans to invest about £400 million in new trains over the next five years.

Motorway Safety

61. Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about current measures designed to improve safety on motorways.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Rugby and Kenilworth (Mr. Pawsey) on 9 November 1987 at column 81.

In addition, we are now reviewing further measures which could be taken to make motorways safer. My right hon. Friend expects to reach decisions by the spring.

Uncontrolled Air Space

63. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many United Kingdom airports operate international commercial flights in uncontrolled air space.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Civil aviation safety regulation is wholly the responsibility of the Civil Aviation Authority. I understand from the authority that, of the 35 United Kingdom aerodromes designated as customs and excise airports for international flights, 23 are not located within controlled air space (as defined in article 96 of the Air Navigation Order 1985). International flights may also operate from other aerodromes by special arrangement. Flights taking off or landing at aerodromes located within controlled air space may, nevertheless, pass through uncontrolled air space at some stage in their flight.

Manchester Airport

64. Mr. Sackville: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received about the future development of Manchester airport.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We have recently received a number of representations from hon. Members and others about the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report on Manchester airport and its possible implications for the airport's development. The report was commissioned by the Civil Aviation Authority in pursuit of its statutory duty to set a condition governing the maximum charges which may be levied by the airport and is a matter entirely for the authority. We have also received representations about the development of air services between Manchester airport and the United States of America. The United States Government undertook to study proposals tabled by the United Kingdom Government last month. They have agreed to respond as quickly as possible.

Motorway Development

65. Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has any plans to speed up the process of motorway development.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The basic motorway network is already largely in place. Its completion is a top priority within our trunk road construction programme; work on the M20 and M40 is proceeding well. The need for further development of the motorway network is monitored. New schemes are added to the programme when justified.

The White Paper "Policy for Roads in England 1987" added schemes for widening stretches of the M2, M3, M4, M6, M40, M62 and for junction improvements on the M4.

Pre-construction procedures are also kept under continuous review with the aim of minimising the time taken and improving efficiency.

Speed Limit Signs

67. Mr. Higgins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he proposes to begin the experiment, substituting 70 mph speed limit signs for existing signs comprising a black diagonal on a white background; and if he will ensure the experiment is carried out on a major motorway, such as the M25.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The experiment is already under way at a site on the M1. Traffic speeds are now being measured before the erection of 70 mph limit signs. The signs will come into use in the autumn this year. Speeds will then be studied for a further year to see the effect of the change.

Bus Services

68. Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give the number of bus services in operation in England and Wales operating at the latest available date; and what was the comparative figure in 1985.

Mr. David Mitchell: Information is not collected on this basis. Local bus mileage in England and Wales increased by 14 per cent. between November 1985 and November 1987.

Paddington-Heathrow (Rail Services)

69. Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received regarding direct electrification of rail services from Paddington to Heathrow airport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: We have received a large number of representations following the report on surface access to Heathrow by our consultants, Howard Humphreys and Partners, published in June 1987. These include representations on the possibility of an electrified link between Paddington and Heathrow. All the responses are now being considered and we will be making an announcement in due course.

New Roads (Design Life)

70. Mr. Irvine: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the current design life of new roads.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: New roads are designed to carry the traffic expected to use them over 40 years, with appropriate maintenance. Capacity provision is related to an economic evaluation covering the first 30 years of use.

London Bus Services

72. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the adequacy of bus services to the public in the Greater London area.

Mr. David Mitchell: It is for London Regional Transport to assess what levels of bus services are adequate in accordance with its statutory duty to secure the provision of public transport services having regard to transport needs in London. LRT plans to improve the overall level of service operated in the coming year.

Nuclear Material (Transport)

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if, in the light of the planned increase in transport of these materials over the next decade, his Department has undertaken any study of the emergency arrangements for (a) ports, (b) cargo airports, (c) railways and (d) roads currently designated for the receipt, export and transport of nuclear materials.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The transport of radioactive materials must comply with regulations based on international standards which do not depend for their effectiveness on the designation of particular routes or modes of transport.

The increase in traffic over the next decade is not expected to raise new issues of principle.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what arrangements presently exist at ports registered to receive the import of spent nuclear fuel, or other nuclear materials, physically to check that the contents of the imported containers tally with the accompanying inventory and materials carriage documentation.

Mr. David Mitchell: Ports do not have to be registered to handle radioactive materials. For safety reasons it is not possible to open containers of radioactive materials in a port area. The containers are subject to checking on loading and again on arrival at their destination.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will arrange for copies of the PATRAM 86 conference report on the packaging and transport of radioactive materials, published by the International Atomic Energy Agency in 1987, to be placed in the Library.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Yes.

Plutonium

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has on the United States Senate decision on the proposed arrangements (a) to airfreight plutonium to Japan and (b) to re-transfer United Kingdom plutonium to Japan en route from Sellafield, stopping off on United States' territory.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I understand that Congress has incorporated into United States law a clause requiring the Nuclear Regulatory Commission, in certifying the safety of containers used to transport plutonium by air across United States air space, to include a drop test of a full-scale container from the maximum cruising altitude and the crash of a cargo aircraft fully loaded with such containers, unless the commission is satisfied that the stresses on the containers produced by other tests exceed those which would occur during a worst case accident. Meanwhile the International Atomic Energy Agency is reviewing the international regulations to see whether any changes are required in this area.

M67-A57 Junction

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to announce new measures to slow down traffic leaving the M67 in Denton and coming onto the A57 Manchester road and the new roundabout for the M66 motorway.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Traffic leaving the M67 will remain coned down to a single lane until the M66 roundabout opens. This, and construction work on the A57 over the next few months, will help to keep speeds down.

I will write to the hon. Gentleman.

National Bus Company

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish the guidelines for the sale of the National Bus Company's subsidiaries, particularly with respect to any policy regarding the immediate sale or disposal of assets by the purchaser.

Mr. David Mitchell: A copy of the National Bus Company's disposal programme is in the Library of the House.

In general, NBC does not seek to prevent the sale or disposal of particular assets by purchasers of subsidiaries; rationalisation or replacement of assets will often be part of the companies' plans for the successful continuation of bus services.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the undertaking given by Her Majesty's Government during the passage of the Transport Act 1985 relating to the sale of assets by private buyers of National Bus Companies.

Mr. David Mitchell: I am not aware of any such undertakings.

Crosville Motor Services

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will refuse to sanction the sale of Crosville Motor Services to Carlton PSV Ltd. without guarantees that Crewe bus station will remain in continuous use as a bus station;

(2) what undertakings have been received from Carlton PSV Ltd. on the maintenance of suitable bus stations and garages if it is allowed to complete its purchase of Crosville Motors.

Mr. David Mitchell: In accordance with its statutory duties the National Bus Company seeks to sell its local bus operating subsidiaries only to parties who will continue to operate bus services. Responsibility for the negotiation of individual sales rests with NBC. We have not yet received NBC's proposals for the sale of Crosville Motor Services, and therefore I cannot speculate on its recommendation or any eventual decision.

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will make a statement on the proposed sale of Crosville Motor Services to Carlton PSV Ltd.;

(2) if he will make it his policy not to approve any recommendation from the National Bus Company for the sale of Crosville Motor Services to Carlton PSV Ltd.

Mr. David Mitchell: We have not yet received from the National Bus Company any proposals for the sale of its Crosville Motor Services subsidiary. I cannot anticipate or prejudge NBC's recommendation.

Foreign Lorry Drivers

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many foreign lorry drivers, in the past year, have been involved in road accidents; how many were warned for dangerous driving; and how many were prosecuted.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The nationality of drivers involved in injury accidents is not recorded. The nationality of drivers warned and prosecuted for motoring offences is not available.

The number of foreign-registered heavy goods vehicles involved in injury road accidents in Great Britain between 1984 and 1986 is as follows:

Foreign registered heavy goods vehicles involved in injury road accidents: Great Britain: 1984 to 1986

	Fatal	Serious	Slight	Total
1984	18	51	180	249
1985	18	76	196	290
1986	20	70	189	279

Driving Licences

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will estimate the cost of replacing existing driving licences with EEC standard licences.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The present practice of issuing Community model licences when old-style licences have to be renewed or replaced avoids additional cost. Replacing the remaining 17 million old-style driving licences over a three-year period is estimated to cost £55 million.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many people currently hold a full driver's licence in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: At the end of 1987 there were approximately 27 million full driving licence holders in Great Britain, (Northern Ireland has separate driver licensing arrangements).

Foreign-Registered Vehicles

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many foreign registered vehicles entered Britain for each of the last five years.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: This information is not available.

M11 (Harlow)

Sir John Biggs-Davison: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what road surfaces are being used in the repair of the M11 near Harlow; and to what extent the need to reduce noise levels influenced the choice of surface.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The repairs involve cutting out sections of the existing concrete carriageways and the replacement of like for like. This gives no scope for a choice of material other than concrete.

Vehicles (Reversing Accidents)

Mr. Fry: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many (a) fatalities and (b) injuries have been caused by reversing heavy goods vehicles in each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Statistics on the causes of accidents are not collected. The number of casualties in road accidents where a heavy goods vehicle was reversing is shown in the table.

Casualties: in accidents where a heavy goods vehicle was reversing: by road user type and severity: Great Britain: 1982 to 1986.

Road Schemes (Grant)

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the schemes for which grant was paid under section 272 of the Highways Act 1980 during the last eight years, showing the amount of grant paid in each case.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The information requested is as set out.

(i) Projects for which grant over £1 million approved

Route	Title	Progress	Estimated total cost [1](£ million)
Past:
M531(M53)	Ellesmere Port Motorway Extension A5117 to Stoak Interchange	Completed October 1980	4·6
A418	Thame Bypass	Completed November 1980	3·1
A63	Kingston upon Hull South Orbital Road: Market Place—Hedon Road	Completed December 1980	11·6
A52	Gamston to Lings Bar: A52 to A614/A606 Junction	Completed September 1981	6·7
M531(M53)	Ellesmere Port Motorway Extension Stoak Interchange to A56 at Hoole	Completed July 1982	13·2
A282	Dartford Tunnel Approach Roads (North)	Completed November 1982	2·3
M602	M602 Spur to Salford Docks	Completed December 1982	20·6
A249	Improvement between Chestnut Street and Bobbing	Completed December 1982	2·9
M23/A264	Copthorne Link	Completed August 1984	2·0
A420	Shrivenham Bypass	Completed October 1984	3·2
A282	Dartford Tunnel Approach Roads (South)	Completed August 1986	13·9
A282	Dartford Tunnel Toll Plaza	Completed November 1986	7·2

Highway Authorities

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list in the Official Report for each highway authority in England (a) its bid for capital allocation and transport supplementary grant for 1988-89, (b) the allocation announced in each case, (c) the allocation as a percentage of the bid in each case, (d) the percentage of each authority's transport supplementary grant allocation attributable to minor works, for 1987-88 and 1988-89.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The capital allocations figures were given in my reply to the hon. Member for Burnley (Mr. Pike) on 11 January at columns 139-40. The figures for transport supplementary grant are in the following table:

EC (Passenger Transport Subsidy)

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has on the levels of central Government subsidy to public passenger transport in the European Community.

Mr. David Mitchell: I refer the hon. Member to the information on railway subsidies contained in the eighth Commission report on the transposed annual accounts of railway undertakings for 1984 (COM(87)311 final), a copy of which is in the Library. I have no comparable information about subsidies to other forms of passenger transport in the European Community.

Level Crossings

Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to the location of automatic half-barrier level crossings in the United Kingdom, which are situated in residential commuter areas, and which are adjacent to a commuter line railway station where no pedestrian footbridge is provided over the road.

Mr. David Mitchell: The information is not available in the form requested. I wrote to my hon. Friend on 19 January giving examples of automatic half-barrier level crossings which are on main routes and used by children.

Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the expected average and peak pedestrian, including children, and vehicle usage rates for the proposed automatic half-barrier level crossing to be installed on Princess Margaret road, adjacent to East Tilbury station in Thurrock.

Mr. David Mitchell: A census taken over a period of nine days in February last year showed that the peak pedestrian, child and vehicles usage at the crossing in a period of 15 minutes did not exceed 84, 46 and 176 respectively. The average usage during any period of 15 minutes between 0600 and 2400 on the same day was 16, 4 and 67.

I wrote to my hon. Friend on 19 January enclosing an extract from the Department's safety requirements for automatic half-barriers (AHB). He will be aware from this that the number of vehicles using the crossing is not a condition for suitability which has to be satisfied for the selection of AHB.

Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the average and peak rates of pedestrian usage and vehicle usage per hour over automatic half-barrier level crossings in the United Kingdom; and how many of the 330 in existence are within 10 per cent. of the highest usage.

Mr. David Mitchell: The information is not currently available.

Drink-Driving Accidents

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are, for each year since 1975, the figures for deaths caused by drink and driving accidents; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Deaths in road accidents where a driver or rider had a blood-alcohol count in excess of 80 mg of alcohol per 100 ml of blood are given in the table.

Fatalities in road accidents where a driver or rider had a blood-alcohol level in excess of 80 mg per 100 ml of blood: Great Britain 1979 to 1985

	Number
1979	1,550
1980	1,400
1981	1,350
1982	1,450
1983	1,050
1984	1,100
1985	1,000

There has been a welcome downward trend. Drinking and driving remains one of our most serious road safety problems.

Data are not collected on the causes of road accidents.

Road Haulage (Safety)

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what steps he will take against haulage companies registering vehicle fleets in Europe in order to avoid United Kingdom regulations on side guards and splash spray devices;

(2) what estimates are available to him of the percentage of United Kingdom haulage companies and other vehicle fleet owners registering fleets in Europe to avoid United Kingdom transport safety regulations.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We do not have information about the motives of haulage companies or other vehicle fleet owners who choose to register vehicles abroad.

Lyndhurst (Bypass)

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received from residents of Lyndhurst in support of the construction of the bypass proposed by Hampshire county council; and, if so, how many of these residents have signified their support.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We have received a petition containing 1,320 signatures and one other representation from residents of Lyndhurst in support of Hampshire county council's proposals for a bypass around Lyndhurst.

British Rail

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish figures for the proportion of total man-hours worked on British Rail track (a) between 7 am and 7 pm (b) between 7 pm and 7 am (c) on weekdays and (d) on weekends in each of the last eight years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: The Department does not hold such information. The hon. Member should apply to the British Railways Board direct.

TRANSPORT

Roadworks (Basildon)

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what road work plans and improvements are due to be carried out on the A127 and A13 within the Basildon constituency over the next two years.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A new local road bridge is under construction over the A127 near the Fortune of War roundabout. It will facilitate the removal of this roundabout and junction. Draft orders authorising the closure of the existing side roads should be published this spring. Other improvements including the scope for widening the A127 to dual three-lane are still under consideration.

The A13 through Basildon is not a national road. Its improvement is the responsibility of Essex county council.

Motor Insurance

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any information on plans to standardise motor insurance cover within the EEC; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Community's effort has been directed to the harmonisation of compulsory requirements that protect the interests of accident victims. We introduced regulations last December complying with directive 84/5/EEC to secure compulsory insurance liability for damage to property. We are not aware of other EC plans to standardise cover. Our view is that it is for individual drivers to decide what cover they require outside compulsory insurance and for insurers to decide what they are prepared to insure.

M3-M27 Link

Mr. Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he is yet in a position to announce a date when he expects contracts to be let for the completion of the M3/M27 link.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We hope to let a contract for the southern section of the M3 extension later this year. Timing of the contract for the northern section depends on the outcome of the current public inquiry.

Railways (Modernisation)

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the progress of railway modernisation since the passage of the Transport Act 1962.

Mr. David Mitchell: Since the British Railways Board was set up in 1963 it has invested over £11·5 billion in today's prices, in renewal and replacement of the railway. It has now embarked on its biggest renewal programme since the modernisation programme in the 1950s and 1960s.

Road Safety

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the most recent evidence of the effect on accident levels on roads where speed retarders, including road humps, have been installed.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Trials conducted by the Transport and Road Research Laboratory show that speed control humps can significantly reduce injury accidents. New regulations introduced in December 1986 gave increased discretion to local highway authorities as to installation of humps. The Department does not maintain central records of their installation and use.

I am arranging for relevant leaflets issued by the Department to be placed in the Library of the House.

M25 (Service Area)

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has yet decided to proceed with the proposal for a motorway service area on M25 at Iver, Buckinghamshire.

Mr. Channon: I have decided to proceed with our proposal for a service area at Iver. On the information before me I have concluded that a service area here will be well placed to serve needs on a heavily trafficked sector of M25, and that the site proposed is appropriate for that purpose. Preparations and consultations are now being put in hand with a view to application in the late spring for planning clearance and authority to acquire the land.

Motor Cyclists

Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to publish the results of research into the effect on motor cycling of the Transport Act 1981 and on the effectiveness of a one-day training course for learner motor cyclists; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Tomorrow we will be publishing two reports: TRRL research report RR106 — "The Effect on Motorcycling of the 1981 Transport Act" and TRRL contractors report CR56—"An Evaluation of the Effectiveness of a One-Day Training Programme for Learner Motorcyclists". Copies will be placed in the Library.

We shall also be announcing the Government's plans for improving motor cycling safety, in the light of these reports and of the consultation exercise in 1986. The proposals should make a significant reduction in the appalling accident rate of motor cylists, particularly amongst the young and inexperienced riders. Our proposals are:

(a) Replace the present part 1 off-road test of machine handling skills with a compulsory one-day training course, which includes road survival skills, for all new riders of motor cycles and mopeds. Successful completion of the course will be a prerequisite to the issue of provisional motor cycle and moped licences.

(b) At present the on-road (part 2) L test is conducted by a driving examiner following the candidate on foot. In future the driving examiner will accompany the candidate on another vehicle which will permit a more thorough testing in traffic conditions, making it comparable to the test for learner car drivers.

(c) Learner riders will be prohibited from carrying pillion passengers.

(d) A licence category for motor cycles in excess of 400cc will be introduced. Progress to the larger machines will be dependent on a rider having two year's riding experience on a full licence.

(e) New holders of full driving licences will no longer have automatic entitlement to ride a moped or provisional entitlement to ride a learner motor cycle.

We shall consult further on the value of reducing the validity of the provisional motorcycle licence from two years to one. If the L test were not taken within that year, a new licence could not be applied for till a year later.

A copy of the full proposals will be placed in the Library of the House.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Zinoviev Letter

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Attorney-General what information is available to the Lord Chancellor's Department on the current location of the original intercept of the Zinoviev letter of 15 September 1924; what representations he has received regarding its absence from Public Record Office files; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The Lord Chancellor's Department has no information about the location of any document containing the text of the Zinoviev letter as it originally came into the possession of the British Government. A copy of the text is available for public inspection in the Public Record Office. I am not aware of any representations either to myself or to the Lord Chancellor about the absence of the original letter from the Public Record Office.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Greenham Common (Police Numbers)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Thames Valley as to why police officers on duty outside Greenham Common during the dispersal of a cruise missile convoy on the night of 14-15 January did not all display their numbers, and as to why Officer No. 372 at the Swan roundabout had his number covered in a black substance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the chief constable of Thames Valley police that it is force policy that uniformed officers of constable and sergeant rank should display identification numbers at all times. Supervising officers are careful to ensure that the requirement is complied with.

Any specific complaint about the alleged failure of an officer to display an identification number should be pursued with the chief constable. I understand that police constable 372 was not on duty on the night of 14-15 January.

Prison Governors Association

Mr. Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on progress towards recognising the Prison Governors Association.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will accord official recognition to the Prison Governors Association.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are considering the new association's request for recognition in the light of, among other things, the views of other interested parties. Comments from one body are still awaited, but they are expected very shortly, and we shall take a decision as soon as possible.

Government Data Network

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how the police will obtain access to data available via the Government data network.

Mr. Hurd: The proposed Government data network, if implemented, would afford Government Departments and other authorised agencies a secure and cost-effective facility for transmitting data to other locations within the same organisation or, where authorised, to other users of the network. There will be safeguards to prevent unauthorised access by one user to the data of other users.

I am considering whether the network would be suitable for use by the police national computer (PNC) which my Department operates on behalf of police forces. Should it be suitable, the police service would have access only to police data and PNC users would be subject to the same safeguards against unauthorised access as apply to all other users.

Leicestershire (Police Strength)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from the chief constable of Leicestershire concerning a request for additional officers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last received an application by the Leicestershire police authority for an increase in the authorised police establishment of the Leicestershire constabulary; what was the request; and what was his response thereto.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Following a review of the force by the chief constable, the Leicestershire police authority wrote on 15 January seeking approval for an increase in the force establishment of 45 posts in 1988-89, 33 posts in 1989-90 and 13 posts in 1990-91.

The police authority has been informed that its application will be considered, in the light of advice from Her Majesty's inspectorate of constabulary, along with applications which have been received from other authorities for increases in establishment in 1988-89.

Community Radio

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will outline the procedures that will have to be followed by anyone seeking to apply for a licence to run a community radio station.

Mr. Renton: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to a question from the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Dr. Thomas) on 26 January at column 132.

Immigration (Heathrow)

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many immigration officers were on duty and interviewing entrants to the United Kingdom at terminal 4 Heathrow airport between 9 am and 10 am on Monday 11 January; and what was the estimated average waiting time for entrants prior to interview.

Mr. Renton: Fourteen immigration officers were on duty on the inward immigration control at Heathrow terminal 4 between 0900 and 1000 on 11 January. Some passengers had to wait up to 45 minutes for examination, which is exceptional for the time of year. A major contributory factor was the particularly heavy concentration of flights that morning, a number of which had been delayed by adverse weather conditions.

Crime Statistics

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) burglaries, and (b) street attacks there were in 1985 and 1986; what is the estimated figure for 1987; and if he will make a statement about current proposals to deal with these crimes.

Mr. John Patten: Numbers of offences of burglary and robbery recorded by the police in 1985, 1986, and the first three quarters of 1987 were published in a "Home Office Statistical Bulletin" issue number 38/87 in December 1987, copies of which are in the Library. Figures for the whole of 1987 are not yet available.

We shall continue to encourage and support a co-ordinated approach to crime prevention at national and local level disseminating advice on how to reduce opportunities for these and other crimes to occur. We shall also continue to make provision for a strong and efficient police service.

DEFENCE

Rainfall Levels

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when rainfall figures were available between 2 and 7 May 1986.

Mr. Sainsbury: A limited amount of raw raingauge data reaches the Meteorological Office within a few hours of the rain falling, but this represents only some 3 per cent. of the total network coverage providing records. The first maps of estimated surface rainfall for the period in question, based on radar data, were available during May 1986. Maps of daily rainfall, based on partly quality controlled data from some 4,000 sites equipped with raingauges, began to be supplied by the Meteorological Office in late July 1986.

ENVIRONMENT

Job Creation (Docklands)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of jobs created in the London Docklands development corporation area since 1981 has gone to those resident in the docklands boroughs before 1981.

Mr. Trippier: No up-to-date information is available. A survey commissioned by LDDC in 1985 showed that about 30 per cent. of jobs in firms attracted to the corporation's area up to that date were taken by persons who were residents of the three docklands boroughs. A new survey was conducted in 1987 and its results will be published soon.

Smoke Detectors

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will exempt expenditure by local authorities on the installation of smoke detectors in council property from grant penalty under the rate support grant provisions.

Mr. Chope: No.

Energy Conservation

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has made for altering the building regulations in relation to the conservation of energy in domestic, commercial and industrial buildings; when he published his proposals; and when he intends to bring his proposed changes to the House.

Mr. Trippier: A consultation letter on stage 2 of the review of the building regulations was issued on 15 December 1986. This included a number of general proposals relating to the form of the legal requirements in part L (conservation of fuel and power) and to guidance which might be given on ways of meeting those requirements. More detailed proposals are now being developed in the light of comments received, and I intend to issue a further consultation document on part L later this year. I hope that the necessary amendments to this part of the regulations can be laid before Parliament by the end of the year.

Gipsies

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many local authorities in England are equipped for gipsies, under the terms of the Caravan Sites Act 1968; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Roe: All grant-aided local authority gipsy sites in England are provided with basic facilities as recommended in annex A to Department of the Environment circular 11/79 and conform with the standards laid down in the Department's gipsy sites design guide.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many local authorities in England have already complied with the sections of the Caravan Sites Act 1968 relating to gipsies and have subsequently been granted the status of designated areas under the Act, or are in the process of seeking such designation.

Mrs. Roe: A total of 22 London boroughs, 10 former county boroughs, five entire counties and 58 individual districts have been designated under the 1968 Act. These figures take account of one designation order which has been made but will not come into force until February. Eight applications for designation are at present before my right hon. Friend.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which county councils in England have yet to establish permanent caravan sites for gipsies under the terms of the Caravan Sites Act 1968.

Mrs. Roe: All county councils in England except the Isle of Wight have established at least one permanent caravan site for gipsies.

Water (Nitrate Levels)

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to his answer of 20 January, Official Report, column 742, he will specify the areas in which derogations have been given in relation to nitrate levels in public water supplies.

Mr. Moynihan: The areas are specified in the table:

PSA (Cost Limit)

Mr. Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has plans to increase the Property Services Agency's civil running cost limit during the current financial year.

Mr. Chope: Subject to the approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, the PSA's civil running cost limit on Class XX Vote 19 will be increased by £4·976 million from £141·772 million to £146·748 million, due to an underprovision for work undertaken by the agency's directly employed industrial labour force. This is offset by a reduction in non-running cost expenditure within the cash limit, which remains unchanged.

Local Government Reform

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if the undertakings given at columns 1109-1110 in the Official Report of the Standing Committee on the Local Government Bill 1985 by the then Parliamentary Under-Secretary, the hon. Member for Ealing, Acton (Sir G. Young), on rent levels, management, maintenance and access by Londoners in respect of the Greater London council's seaside and country homes, still apply.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 28 January 1988]: The proposed terms for disposal will enable the new landlord to set reasonable levels of rent and of management and maintenance expenditure. The only long-term undertaking given concerned access by Londoners. New lettings will continue to be made exclusively to elderly Londoners by means of reserved nomination rights exercised through the London area mobility scheme.

Property Services Agency

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many cases of fraud, corruption or theft have been reported in the Property Services Agency in respect of consultant staff who have been, or are, working in district works offices; what action his Department has taken; and whether any cases of fraud, corruption or theft involving consultant staff have been reported to the police.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 29 January 1988]: None. One case of procedural irregularity resulted in the resignation of a consultant's employee, but there was no obvious evidence of fraud, theft or corruption involved.

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to release the report by Deloitte Haskins and Sells on the operation of the Property Services Agency.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 29 January 1988]: My right hon. Friend has no plans at present to do so.

ENERGY

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has received on the statement of 19 January by the European Economic Community Environment Commissioner to the European Parliament on the transnuclear waste transport cover-up and bribery incident in the European Economic Community, particularly in terms of its implications for the implementation of EURATOM safety and safeguard arrangements within the United Kingdom.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I am placing a copy of the 19 January statement by Commissioner Stanley Clinton Davis in the Library of the House. On 19 January Commissioner Mosar also told the European Parliament that he had no evidence as yet of diversion of fissile material from Mol for unlawful use. The International Atomic Energy Agency has stated it was satisfied that there had been no unauthorised diversion of nuclear material in significant quantities. The deputy director general of the IAEA has also said he was confident that Euratom's standards were the highest possible.

Plutonium

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if, pursuant to his reply of 15 January, Official Report, column 421, he will set out the reasons why the publication of the yearly plutonium figures could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The information is not available in this form for previous years and could be produced only at disproportionate cost.

Central Electricity Generating Board

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what are the latest financial targets for the Central Electricity Generating Board.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The latest financial target agreed for the Central Electricity Generating Board is to earn a return on average net assets on a current cost accounting basis of 3·75 per cent. in 1988-89 and 4·75 per cent. in 1989-90.

Cash Limits

Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he has any changes to announce to his Department's cash limits and running cost limit for 1987-88.

Mr. Parkinson: The cash limit for class VI, vote 2, has been reduced by £1 million to £250·272 to offset expenditure in connection with the privatisation of the electricity supply industry in England and Wales. Provision for this new expenditure was voted in a Winter Supplement Estimate for class VI, vote 7.

In addition, the cash limit for class VI, vote 3, has been reduced by £0·05 million to £22·823 million. This change arises from the transfer of £0·05 million to the Department of Employment (class VII, vote 4) as a special contribution towards increased costs in 1987-88 associated with the recruitment and staffing of the Health and Safety Executive's Nuclear Installations Inspectorate. My Department's running cost limit has also been reduced by a similar amount to £26·301 million.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Educational Maintenance Awards

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what would be the cost, at 1986-87 prices, of introducing educational maintenance awards for 16 and 17-year-olds in full-time education in schools and colleges at (a) the same rates as supplementary benefit for young people and (b) the same rates as training allowances paid to 16 and 17-year-olds on YTS.

Mr. Dunn: After deducting child benefit and existing maintenance payments from LEAs, the annual cost of paying maintenance allowances to all 16 and 17-year-olds currently in full-time education in schools and colleges is estimated to be as follows:

	£ million
(a) If the allowances are paid at the same rate as supplementary benefit	300
(b) If the allowances are paid at the same rate as YTS allowances	650

Notes:

1. The figure at (a) is based on the 1986-87 supplementary benefit level of £18·40 for 16 and 17-year-olds living at home with their parents, less child benefit at the 1986-87 rate of £7·10 per week. If child benefit is not deducted the figure would increase by about £200 million to £500 million.
2. The figure for (b) is based on the 1986-87 YTS allowances of £27·30 per week for 16-year-olds and £35 per week for 17-year-olds, less child benefit at the 1986-87 rate of £7·10 per week. If child benefit is not deducted the figure would increase by about £200 million to £850 million.
3. Both figures assume no change in the estimated 1985-86 level of local authority spending on maintenance payments for 16 and 17-year-olds, which has been converted to 1986-87 prices for the present purpose.

Education Reform

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many secondary schools in Northumberland have expressed an interest to his Department in the suggestion that they will be able to opt out of local government control.

Mr. Dunn: All individual schools which have approached the Department have done so on the basis that their interest will be treated in confidence.

Nursery Education

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many nursery school places are currently available in Northumberland.

Mr. Dunn: Information on the total number of places available in nursery schools is not collected centrally. The number of pupils attending maintained nursery schools in Northumberland in January 1987 was 44 full-time and 90 part-time. In addition, 89 full-time and 1,593 part-time pupils attended nursery classes in primary schools in the authority.

Further Education Colleges (London)

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has as to further education colleges of the Inner London education authority which provide a specialist service for Greater London, the trade, profession or course with which they are associated, and the number of day and evening pupils attending each one.

Mr. Jackson: In common with colleges of further education in other parts of the country, many colleges maintained by the ILEA provide courses meeting the needs of students and employers from an area rather wider than that of the local education authority. Detailed information on all such courses could be supplied only at disproportionate cost.

Education Statistics

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has as to the numbers of (i) primary and nursery pupils, (ii) secondary school pupils, (iii) special school pupils, (iv) persons in attendance at day colleges, and (v) persons in attendance at evening classes, which are the responsibility of the Inner London education authority, for each local authority in the Inner London education authority area.

Mr. Dunn: Information for areas within authorities is not collected centrally. ILEA publishes statistics by division within the authority.

WALES

Valleys Development Initiative

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether his proposed valleys development initiative, and the sums required for that initiative, will be additional to the levels of expenditure announced in Cm. 288—I and II.

Mr. Peter Walker: The planned levels of expenditure indicated in "The Government's Expenditure Plans for 1988-89 to 1990-91" (Cm. 288 — I and II) include provision for my proposals to introduce a programme to revitalise the south Wales valleys. The planned level of expenditure in years beyond 1988-89 is subject to review in the context of future public expenditure rounds.

Gipsies

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which county councils have yet to establish permanent caravan sites for gipsies under the terms of the Caravan Sites Act 1968.

Mr. Grist: Only West Glamorgan county council has not yet established a permanent caravan site for gipsies, and it is in the process of providing one at Llansamlet, Swansea.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which local authorities in Wales have already complied with the sections of the Caravan Sites Act 1968 relating to gipsies and have been granted the status of designated areas under the Act, or are in the process of seeking designation.

Mr. Grist: No area in Wales has been designated. Applications for designation have been made in respect of Aberconwy, Arfon, Dinefwr, Llanelli, Montgomery, Preseli and Ynys Môn districts.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which local authorities in Wales are equipped for gipsies under the terms of the Caravan Sites Act 1968; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: All counties in Wales except West Glamorgan have at least one official site. All local authority gipsy sites in Wales are provided with basic facilities as recommended in annex A to Welsh Office circular 11/79 and conform with the standards laid down in the Welsh Office gipsy sites design guide.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Bophuthatswana Tuberculosis Association

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what has been the total cost to the small projects scheme of contributions made to the Bophuthatswana Tuberculosis Association; and for what purpose the funds have been used.

Mr. Chris Patten: An allocation of £7,000 has been approved for the association, which is a non-governmental organisation, for the provision of transport and audio-visual equipment. This will enable the association's health educationist to give talks and demonstrations within Bophuthatswana on tuberculosis and other health-related subjects. £6,119 has been spent so far.

THE ARTS

Office of Arts and Libraries

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he has any changes to announce in the running cost limit of the Office of Arts and Libraries and in the cash limits of the Votes for which he has responsibility.

Mr. Luce: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimates, the cash limits for the following votes will be increased by the amounts indicated:

Vote	Current cash limit £	Increase £	Revised cash limit £
Class XII Vote 10	17,858,000	100,000	17,958,000
Class XIII Vote 10	176,126,000	8,169,000	184,295,000
Class XIII Vote 12	1,267,000	60,000	1,327,000

Of these increases, £7,429,000 will be charged to the Reserve, and £900,000 will be offset by a cash limit reduction on class XVII, vote 5. There will therefore be no increase in the planned total of public expenditure.

The additions sought are:

£100,000 on class XII, vote 10, to meet the costs of repairing storm damage to the roof of the British museum (natural history);

£900,000 on class XII, vote 10, to facilitate the purchase of the Sherman theatre, Cardiff, by the Welsh Arts Council;

£7,329,000 on class XIII, vote 10, for payment to Inland Revenue in respect of tax forgone on three major works of art accepted by the nation in lieu of tax;

£60,000 on class XIII, vote 12, to meet the additional costs of the Office of Arts and Libraries in respect of the British Library St. Pancras team. This increase is offset by a corresponding saving on the arts marketing scheme (vote 10). The Office of Arts and Libraries running costs limit will increase by £25,000, from £1,268,000 to £1,293,000.

CIVIL SERVICE

Equal Opportunities

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service what plans he has to introduce training on equal opportunities for women into the top management course.

Mr. Luce: The top management programme includes a number of sessions on social change and on management issues. In these sessions questions of equal opportunity are often discussed. It is planned to continue to include these sessions in future programmes.

Cash Limits

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service if there are any proposals to change the 1987-88 cash limit for the office of the Minister for the Civil Service.

Mr. Luce: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, the cash limit for the Office of the Minister for the Civil Service (class XX, vote 1) will be increased by £1,060,000 from £33,603,000 to £34,663,000. The increase is required to disburse to Civil Service welfare organisations some of the savings to the Exchequer arising from the underpayment of public service pensions as a result of the miscalculation of retail prices index increases; and to clear outstanding debit balances in respect of advance payments made to the Property Services Agency (PSA) since 1983-84. The decision to make additional payments to suitable charities was announced to the House of Commons by my right hon. Friend the Paymaster General on 18 December 1987. Since the payments will be funded from the Reserve, they will not increase the planned total of public expenditure. The PSA payments were made in previous years and there is no call on the Reserve.

PRIME MINISTER

Thamesmead

Q15. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Prime Minister whether she has any plans to make an official visit to Thamesmead.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Afghanistan

Q45. Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Prime Minister if she will meet Dr. Najib, President of Afghanistan, to discuss his Government's policies for the promotion of peace and reconciliation in that country; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: No.

Menwith Hill

Q49. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Prime Minister when she next intends to pay an official visit to Menwith Hill.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

European Community (Budgetary Control)

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a further statement on the position she will take at the European Council meeting on additional resources for the EEC in the light of the recent proposals for budgetary control submitted to the Council by the EEC Commission.

The Prime Minister: I have nothing to add to the statement I made on Tuesday 8 December, at columns 167-8, on the outcome of the Copenhagen European Council.

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 2 February.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 2 February.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 2 February.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 2 February.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 2 February.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 2 February.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others, including one with Chancellor Kohl. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Building Societies Act 1986

Mr. Cash: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he has completed the review of schedule 8 to the Building Societies Act 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: The review of schedule 8 to the Building Societies Act 1986, which I announced on 2 October last, had two purposes. The first was to examine whether schedule 8 could be recast so that it proscribed particular activities within certain broadly specified powers instead of banning everything except narrowly specified powers. We believe that this can be done and I shall be bringing the necessary order before the House in due course.

The review also considered societies' request, through the Building Societies Association, for a substantial extension of their powers. The Government recognise that the gradual step-by-step extension of powers previously envisaged would not be appropriate. Societies need to know the broad scope of their powers for some years ahead in order to make sensible long-term commercial plans. Different societies will want to exercise different powers, and each individual society will probably want to diversify into only a small number of new areas. The Government therefore propose a wide-ranging extension of powers, while ensuring through supervision of business plans by the Building Societies Commission within overall limits on non-traditional assets that individual societies exploit their new powers at a prudent pace.

The mainstream business of societies is, and must remain, that of raising funds from the public for lending on house purchase. But we believe that it is right that societies should be allowed to undertake activities which either complement their mainstream business or which will enable them to compete more effectively by providing the wider range of financial services which customers expect of financial institutions. Societies will, as at present, continue to provide services primarily to the personal sector rather than to companies. But I have decided that societies should also be allowed to:

(a) take an equity stake in both life and general insurance companies;

(b) undertake fund management including management of unit trusts generally (rather than just for the provision of pensions, as at present);

(c) take an equity stake in stockbrokers;

(d) offer a wider range of banking and housing-related services than hitherto.

There will be some limitations on these new powers. It would not be appropriate for societies to become involved as stockbrokers in market-making nor would it be desirable for societies to become fully exposed to the risks inherent in general insurance business. The draft orders which I will bring before the House in due course will set out the proposed restrictions to these powers.

Many of these new activities are supervised under either the Insurance Companies Act 1982 or the Financial Services Act 1986. These arrangements will continue and appropriate arrangements to co-ordinate supervision will also be put in place.

I also propose two other changes under the Act.

First, societies have represented that the limit on unsecured lending to individuals, currently £5,000, is too low. This limit covers personal loans for such items as furnishings as well as car loans and credit card limits. The limit will be increased to £10,000. This will give societies greater scope to compete for retail customers. The Building Societies Commission will ensure that societies continue to have adequate credit assessment and exposure monitoring systems.

The second change concerns asset limits. As societies develop into new activities already permitted under the Act, plus those opened up following this review, they will wish gradually to increase the proportion of their assets which are not residential mortgages. I propose therefore to bring forward an order shortly which will provide for a progressive increase in the limits on non-traditional assets. This will enable societies to plan for expansion into non-traditional activities at a measured pace. The order will provide for an increase in the class 2 and 3 limits to 17½ per cent. and 7½ per cent. respectively in January 1990, to 20 per cent. and 10 per cent. respectively in January 1991 and a further increase to the maximum extent possible within the primary legislation—25 per cent. and 15 per cent. respectively—in January 1993.

The orders necessary to implement these changes will take time to prepare, in consultation with the Building Societies Association. I hope to be able to lay the draft orders before the House before Easter. I recognise that some societies are anxious that they should be able to adopt their new powers in their spring AGMs. We will proceed with all the speed that we can and provide societies with as much information as possible as drafting proceeds. But early adoption may not be possible. It will be important to ensure that the complex secondary legislation is carefully and correctly drafted.

The proposals are a substantial step forward in building society development. They will give societies the freedom to develop and compete across a wide range of financial services business.

Running Costs Limit

Mr. Charles Wardle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he has any plan to change the 1987-88 running costs limit for the Government Actuary's Department.

Mr. Brooke: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, the departmental running costs limit for the Government Actuary's Department will be increased by £26,000 from £2,021,000 to £2,047,000 to provide for new work on behalf of the Department of Trade and Industry. There is no change in the cash limit, and no claim on the Reserve. This increase will be offset by a reduction in the running costs of the Department of Trade and Industry.

Mr. Cran: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if there will be any changes to the 1987-88 running costs limit for Her Majesty's Treasury.

Mr. Brooke: Yes. Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, the 1987-88 running costs limit for Her Majesty's Treasury will be decreased by £200,000, from £66,364,000 to £66,164,000. This decrease applies to expenditure by the central computer and telecommunications agency under class XIX, vote 13. It is mainly due to staff shortages, partly offset by higher pay costs; and to savings in equipment maintenance, stemming largely from delays in the formal acceptance of the agency's office automation system.

Cash Limits

Mr. Key: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he is proposing any further change to the Central Office of Information's cash limit for 1987-88.

Mr. Brooke: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, the cash limit for class XIX, vote 1, will be increased by £9,468,000 from £141,032,000 to £150,500,000. The increase will be offset by reimbursements by the clients of the Central Office of Information and will not therefore add to the planning total of public expenditure. There will be a decrease of £1,164,000 in the Central Office of Information running costs, from £20,164,000 to £19,000,000, following a reduction in staff numbers.

Women (Equal Opportunities)

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many of his Department's management training courses include sessions on equal opportunities for women; and what proportion of managers at grade 6 level and above working outside headquarters have received equal training on equal opportunities for women.

Mr. Brooke: All my Department's management training courses include sessions on equal opportunities —for all groups, not just for women. None of the 12 staff at grade 6 and above working outside London has received training solely dedicated to equal opportunities for women.

Customs Officers (Heathrow)

Mr. Soley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many customs officers were on duty in the goods to be declared channel at terminal 4 Heathrow airport on Monday 11 January between 9 am and 10 am; and what was the estimated waiting time for passengers prior to interview.

Mr. Lilley: Five customs officers were on duty in the red channel.

It is not possible to estimate the waiting time but Customs' records show that passenger traffic at that time was well in excess of the normal average throughput.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Hong Kong Civil Service

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the request from the unions concerned for the establishment of an independent committee of inquiry into pay in the Hong Kong Civil Service.

Mr. Eggar: A request has been made by the staff side of the Senior Civil Service Council that an independent committee of inquiry be set up to consider a pay level survey carried out in 1986. The Governor has declined the request as no specific proposals arising from the survey have been made by the Hong Kong Government. Any such proposals would be the subject of consultation in the Council.

Ms. Rocio Reyes

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made to the Chilean Government concerning the arrest and detention of Rocio Reyes, a former United Kingdom resident, and reports from Amnesty International of threats to Ms. Reyes.

Mr. Eggar: Senorita Reyes was released without charge on 12 September 1987 after nine days in detention. Her Majesty's embassy in Santiago has remained in touch with her. Neither the embassy nor, I understand, Amnesty International is aware of threats made against Senorita Reyes since her release.

Chilean Exiles

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has made any reassessment of the ability of Chilean exiles in the United Kingdom to return home safely in the light of the detention of Luis Tricot and Rocio Reyes and the subsequent alleged torture of Señor Tricot.

Mr. Eggar: I am aware of the practical difficulties which Chilean exiles may face on return from the United Kingdom to their own country. Her Majesty's ambassador remains in touch with returnees, and I understand that this is welcomed. But, as far as I am aware, returnees are not being singled out for harassment. The embassy has made representations on behalf of the Irish Government about Señor Tricot's case.

Aboriginal Australians

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the Government of Australia on (a) the alleged violations of the human rights of aboriginal Australians and (b) the denial of land rights for aboriginal Australians; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: No.

Cash Limits

Sir Antony Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he proposes to make any changes to the Foreign and Commonwealth cash limits for 1987-88.

Mr. Eggar: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, the cash limit for class II, vote 4 (British Council), will be increased by £1,066,000 from £55,658,000 to £56,724,000 to take account of unavoidable increased costs overseas. The increase will be charged to the Reserve.

The cash limit for class II, vote 1 (Overseas Representation), will be decreased by £5 million from £427,247,000 to £422,247,000 due to reductions in assumed costs overseas. This will include a reduction in the running costs limit of £1,500,000 from £396,783,000 to £395,283,000. The cash limit for class II, vote 3 (BBC: External Broadcasting and Monitoring), will be reduced by £4,347,000 from £116,500,000 to £112,153,000 to take account of the over-issue of the grant-in-aid in the previous financial year.

Irish Republic (Young Persons)

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will seek to obtain from the Irish Republic an estimate of the number of young people between the ages of 18 and 30 years who are citizens of the Republic and who have come to live in Great Britain in the last five years; and if he will ask the Government of the Irish Republic to make a contribution towards their welfare and accommodation if they are unemployed or homeless.

Mr. Portillo: I have been asked to reply.

No. Given the freedom of movement between the two countries, neither the Irish nor the United Kingdom Government are in a position to give accurate estimates. Social assistance benefits are available to all persons in need who are lawfully present in Great Britain, without discrimination on grounds of nationality. The Republic of Ireland makes its social assistance benefits available to United Kingdom nationals on the same terms. A system of cross-accounting would not be practical or appropriate in this context.

EMPLOYMENT

Restart

15. Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how the success rate of the restart programme is measured.

Mr. Lee: The main aim of the restart programme is to contact all long-term unemployed people and to offer them positive help back to work. The success of the programme is measured principally by reference to the number of long-term unemployed people contacted, the number interviewed, and the percentage of those interviewed who are offered positive help.

So far in 1987-88 up to the end of November, some 1·8 million people have been contacted. About 1·5 million have been interviewed and 88 per cent. of those were offered positive help.

Construction Industry (Skill Shortages)

17. Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he will next meet the chairman of the construction industry training board to discuss skills shortages in the industry.

Mr. Nicholls: Ministers have regular meetings with all chairmen of industry training boards to discuss various issues. I last met the construction board chairman in December to discuss the board's action plan on skill shortages, and I expect to meet him again in the spring.

Job Clubs

18. Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to expand the number of job clubs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: The planning assumption in the White Paper "The Government's Expenditure Plans 1988-89 — 1990-91" is that the programme will expand to 1,500 job clubs by the end of 1988-89.

British Travel Centre

19. Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people have now visited the British Travel Centre since it was officially opened.

Mr. Lee: There have been more than 1·1 million visitors to the British Travel Centre since it was officially opened by the Prime Minister on 13 June 1986.

Northern Region

20. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many jobs have been created over the past 12 months in the northern region; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: Over the 12 months to September 1987, the net increase in employment in the northern region is estimated to have been 12,000. This figure covers both employees in employment and the self-employed.

68. Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the percentage increase in jobs created in the northern region since 1979.

Mr. Lee: There are no figures for job gains and job losses. Between September 1979 and September 1987, the latest date for which figures are available, the civilian employed labour force in the northern region showed a net decrease of 9 per cent. The figure is unadjusted for the effects of seasonal variations.

The civilian employed labour force is the sum of employees in employment and the self employed.

Restart (Benefit Claimants)

21. Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people have been refused unemployment benefit as a result of their refusal to take up an offer made to them following a restart interview.

Mr. Lee: Any refusal of benefit subsequent to a restart interview follows not from the interview itself but from the decision of an independent adjudication officer operating under long-standing legal rules adopted by successive Governments.

Conference Centres

22. Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what progress is being made by British conference centres in marketing facilities in Britain to international associations and the corporate sector.

Mr. Lee: Good progress is being made in this area through the auspices of the British Conference and Exhibition Centres Export Council, which is supported by the British tourist authority. Britain now has a 10 per cent. share of the market for international conferences and association meetings, and in 1986, conferences earned a record £109 million from overseas visitors.

Job Release Scheme

23. Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement about the implementation of the winding-up of the job release scheme.

Mr. Lee: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Battersea (Mr. Bowis), Official Report, 4 November at column 726. In addition my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced the closure on 3 November and notices were placed in various national newspapers on 6 November giving details of the closure and the procedures for submitting applications.

YTS Trainees

24. Mr. Stevens: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the number of YTS trainees going into work, or further education and training.

Mr. Cope: The latest results from the Manpower Services Commission's regular follow-up survey show that, of those young people who left YTS schemes between April 1986 and July 1987 74 per cent. were in work, further education or training at the time of the surveys.

MSC Training Schemes

25. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people are on Manpower Services Commission training schemes as of January; and how many have been on such schemes since their inception.

Mr. Cope: The information is not available in the form requested. At 31 December 1987, the latest date for which figures are available, there were 417,500 young people in training on YTS and 24,400 people on the new job training scheme. Figures for the numbers in training on any given date are not available for other adult training schemes. Since 1979, the earliest date for which figures are readily available about 3,413,000 starts have been recorded on MSC training schemes.

Short-Break Holidays

26. Mr. Lester: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much revenue was earned by short-break holidays in England in 1987.

Mr. Lee: No estimate is available for the amount earnt by all short break holidays in England in 1987. However, spending on one to three night holidays taken by British residents in England in the first 10 months of 1987 is estimated to be £800 million.

Visitors

27. Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of Britain's visitors came from Europe in 1987; what information he has as to how this figure compares with other European countries; and what is being done to ensure a good spread of markets.

Mr. Lee: Figures are not yet available for the number of visitors to Britain from Europe for the whole of 1987. During the first 10 months of 1987, however, 59 per cent. of visitors to the UK were European residents. Comparative data for other European countries are not yet available.

The British tourist authority recognises the importance of encouraging visitors from a wide spectrum of markets. Through its overseas offices, and joint marketing initiatives with the trade. It seeks to promote tourism to Britain from all destinations.

28. Sir Brandon Rhys-Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the average spending per day by United States visitors to Britain in 1987.

Mr. Lee: An estimate of the average spending per day by United States visitors to Britain is not yet available for the whole of 1987. However, during the first two quarters of 1987. January to June, the average amount spent per day by United States visitors to the UK was £56.

101. Sir Marcus Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has on the number of people under 25 years who visited Britain in 1987.

Mr. Lee: Information on the number of people under 25 years who visited Britain is only produced on an annual basis and is not yet available for 1987. However, in 1986 the number of visits to the United Kingdom by people under 25 was 3·7 million.

Labour Statistics

29. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people are currently employed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: In September 1987, the latest date for which figures are available, there were 24,446,000 people in the employed labour force in Great Britain. This represents an increase of 1,449,000 since March 1983. The figures are adjusted for the effects of seasonal variations. The employed labour force is the sum of employees in employment, the self-employed and Her Majesty's forces.

40. Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the ratio of persons in employment to persons unemployed in each year since 1983.

Mr. Lee: The table shows the total employed labour force, and the number of unemployed claimants (excluding school leavers) in the United Kingdom for June of each year since 1983, and also the ratio of employed labour force to unemployed claimants. All figures are seasonally adjusted.

	Employed Labour Force Thousands	Unemployed Claimants Thousands	Ratio
June 1983	23,594·9	2,884·2	8·2:1
June 1984	24,049·4	2,978·6	8·1:1
June 1985	24,437·9	3,109·3	7·9:1
June 1986	24,537·3	3,212·5	7·6:1
June 1987	24,907·5	2,925·2	8·5:1

45. Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will consider maintaining a record of the employment destination of all those who leave Manpower Services Commission schemes or who leave the unemployment register.

Mr. Cope: The Manpower Services Commission follows up people leaving the programmes it administers, in order to measure how effective they are in helping people. The information collected includes the destination of leavers. The way in which this information is collected varies from programme to programme and can be on a sample basis.

More than 400,000 people currently leave the unemployment register in any month. Although records of individual destinations are not maintained, information on the characteristics of the vacancies filled through jobcentres are available. Additionally there have been recent ad hoc surveys which will provide information on amongst other matters the destination of specific groups of unemployed people.

52. Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the current level of unemployment.

Mr. Lee: On 10 December 1987 the number of unemployed claimants in the United Kingdom was 2,695,810.

58. Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people in Lambeth have been unemployed for more than a year.

Mr. Lee: On 8 October 1987 the number of unemployed claimants in the London borough of Lambeth who had been unemployed for more than one year was 10,523.

63. Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the fall in unemployment in Waveney over the past 12 months; and what has been the comparable position in the United Kingdom as a whole.

Mr. Lee: On 10 December 1987, the number of unemployed claimants in the Waveney local authority area was 5,011, a fall of 1,205 since December 1986. The comparable figure for the United Kingdom as a whole was 2,695,810, a fall of 533,357.

67. Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the total number of people unemployed in the Chelmsford local authority area in December 1987 and December 1986.

Mr. Lee: On 10 December 1987 the number of unemployed claimants in the Chelmsford local authority area was 2,946. The corresponding figure for December 1986 was 3,788.

72. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what discussions he has had on employment trends with his counterparts in the EEC member states.

Mr. Cope: Since the adoption by the Community of the action programme on employment growth in December 1986, after an initiative by the United Kingdom with Italy and Ireland, we have sought to keep the subject of employment growth high on the agenda of business for the EC Council of Labour and Social Affairs Ministers. The Council has considered a report on the action programme, and has pursued as a priority the issue of long-term unemployment. We frequently seek to promote discussion of issues relating to employment growth with the European Commission and other member states.

75. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many men and how many women were in full-time employment in June 1979 and in December 1987 in (a) Wales and (b) the United Kingdom.

Mr. Lee: Estimates of the numbers of full-time and part-time male employees in employment for the dates and areas specified are available only from the September 1984 census of employment. Regional estimates of the numbers of self-employed people do not separately identify full-time and part-time employment. The available comparable information is given in the table.

89. Mr. Knowles: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment which regions are showing the greatest falls in unemployment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: The unemployment rate fell in all regions over the last 12 months. With the largest falls being in the west midlands, Wales, north-west and the north. In the last 18 months since June 1986 the falls have also been largest in these regions.

102. Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the measures taken to reduce unemployment in the 18 to 25-year-age group.

Mr. Lee: Those in the 18-to-25-year-age group are already benefiting from the growth in the economy which has produced more than 1·4 million new jobs since March 1983. In addition, they can take advantage of the wide range of employment and training measures we have developed to help unemployed people back into employment. Unemployment among those aged 18 to 25 fell by 175,166 in the year to October 1987. Unemployment amongst the under 25s is now at the lowest level for over five years.

We are now moving towards meeting our guarantee to everyone in this age group who has been unemployed for between six and 12 months of the place on the job training scheme or on the enterprise allowance scheme or in a jobclub.

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the percentage increase in the number of unemployed people in the United Kingdom since May 1979.

Mr. Lee: Between 10 May 1979 and 10 December 1987, the number of unemployed claimants in the United Kingdom, excluding school leavers and adjusted for discontinuities and seasonality, increased by 126·9 per cent.

Disabled People

30. Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what further steps he intends to take to improve the employment prospects of disabled people.

Mr. Lee: I have no proposals to put forward at this time. I shall be reviewing the position in the light of the Report by the National Audit Office on employment assistance to disabled adults and the report by the National Advisory Council on Employment of Disabled People which reviewed the principles underlying employment provisions.

In the meantime my Department and the Manpower Services Commission will continue to promote vigorously employment opportunities for people with disabilities, both through existing special schemes as well as the full range of employment and training programmes.

84. Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what recognition he will give to the needs of disabled people in the forthcoming White Paper on adult training.

Mr. Fowler: The forthcoming White Paper on unemployment and training will set out the Government's decisions about the new training programme for unemployed adults. The Government recognise that disabled people have particular needs and these will be fully recognised in the new programme.

YTS

31. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the working of YTS.

73. Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a further statement on the progress of the YTS.

Mr. Cope: On 31 December 1987 there were some 417,000 young people receiving high-quality training on YTS schemes. Of those young people leaving the schemes between April 1986 and July 1987, around 74 per cent. went into employment, further education or training. In addition, around 1,900 organisations have achieved full approved training organisation status demonstrating their commitment to provide high-quality programmes.

The YTS is now firmly established as a standard method of recruitment and training for many employers, and the Government hope that more and more companies will recognise the substantial benefits YTS can offer.

32. Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people are on YTS schemes; and how many of them are entitled to travel expenses.

Mr. Cope: At the end of December 1987 there were some 417,500 young people in training on YTS, of whom nine out of 10 are non-employed. All non-employed YTS trainees are entitled to be reimbursed the amount by which their essential weekly training-related travel costs exceed £3. If required to live away from home for the purpose of YTS training, such trainees are also entitled to assistance with the costs of travel between home and training location.

87. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many young people are currently undertaking training on the YTS; and if he will make a statement.

95. Mr. Day: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many young people are currently on the YTS; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: At the end of December 1987 there were some 417,500 young people in training on YTS.

This represents an impressive achievement in convincing young people of the value of training. It also represents significant progress towards our objective that all young people under 18 years of age should have the opportunity either to continue in full-time education or of entering a period of work experience combined with work-related training and education.

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what his estimate is of the number of YTS places in Wales in 1988-89, 1989-90 and 1990-91 that will arise from the proposed Manpower Services Commission corporate plan for Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: I have been asked to reply.

The Manpower Services Commission's corporate plan for Wales, which gives estimated expenditure up to 1989-90, shows £68·7 million for YTS in 1988-89 and £68·9 million for 1989-90. The current estimate is that 29,354 places will be available for 1988-89. The number of places for 1989-90 will be estimated around the end of this year.

Strikes

33. Mr. Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many working days were lost through strikes in September 1987; and what was the comparable figure in September 1978.

Mr. Nicholls: The number of working days lost through stoppages of work due to industrial disputes in September 1987 is provisionally estimated as 48,000. This compares with 878,000 working days lost in September 1978.

91. Mr. Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many working days were lost by strikes in 1987; how this compares with 1978; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The number of working days lost through stoppages of work due to industrial disputes in 1987 is not yet available. In the 12-month period to November 1987, 3,494,000 working days were provisionally estimated to have been lost. This compares with 9,405,000 working days lost in 1978.

Skill Shortages

34. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he will next meet representatives of British chambers of commerce to discuss skill shortages.

Mr. Cope: I often meet representatives of British chambers of commerce and discuss issues including the demand for and supply of skills, and will continue to do so.

55. Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received on skill shortages in (a) the south and (b) the north.

Mr. Cope: I have received a number of letters and approaches from individuals and organisations, from many areas of the country, who are interested in various aspects of skills supply and demand. It is not possible to provide a breakdown on the geographical basis requested.

Job Training Scheme (Child Care)

35. Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he expects to make a decision on the expansion of job training scheme child care payments under the pilot scheme to all job training scheme managing agents.

103. Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to increase the take-up of the job training scheme child care payment system.

Mr. Cope: Decisions will be taken when the present pilot scheme comes to an end later this month.

42. Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will expand the payment for child care facilities for single parents on job training schemes to two-parent families where both are in employment.

Mr. Cope: No. Child care payments are being made by the MSC only to unemployed single parents who join the new job training scheme in 10 areas where this arrangement is being piloted. Parents are normally responsible for making their own child care arrangements.

Non-statutory Training Boards

36. Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he is satisfied with the contribution to training made by the non-statutory training boards.

Mr. Nicholls: I believe that research currently being completed will show that the majority of non-statutory training organisations are effective in their role of improving their industry's training arrangements. The Manpower Services Commission is continuing to work to strengthen those organisations which are less effective.

Training Funds

37. Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what level of entirely new resources will be devoted to the new programme for training unemployed people.

Mr. Cope: Government funds for the new programme will total some £1·4 billion—the current provision for the programme it will replace. In addition, it is expected that employers will contribute towards the training costs of trainees engaged in practical training on their premises. It is estimated that these contributions will total about £150 million.

Enterprise Allowance Scheme

38. Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the cost of the enterprise allowance scheme in the current year; and how many individuals are participating in it.

Mr. Cope: The estimated cost of the enterprise allowance scheme is £208·1 million for the financial year 1987-88. This includes £8·8 million in running costs. Currently there are 96,000 participants on the scheme.

104. Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a further statement on the payment of the enterprise allowance scheme.

Mr. Cope: The computerised payment system for the enterprise allowance scheme currently pays the allowance to 96,000 participants. Since the beginning of the scheme the system has satisfactorily paid the allowance to over 315,000 unemployed people who have started up their own business.

YTS (Bridging Allowance)

39. Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to improve the bridging allowance payable to young people waiting to enter YTS schemes.

Mr. Cope: None. The proposed bridging allowance will be set initially at £15 per week, more than twice the current level of child benefit. The allowance is designed to provide short-term help for those young people who may have to wait a few weeks for a YTS place after leaving a job or a previous YTS place.

Mines (Women)

41. Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many responses to "Restrictions on Employment of Young People and the Removal of Sex Discrimination in Legislation" are in favour of denouncing international labour convention 45 on underground work (women) and European Social Charter article 8(4)(b).

Mr. Nicholls: No responses have been received to date concerning international labour convention 45: underground work (women) and European Social Charter article 8(4)(b). The closing date for comments on the consultative document is 29 February 1988.

Training

43. Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans his Department has to increase the level of training and retraining in the working population.

Mr. Cope: The Employment Bill provides that the Manpower Services Commission will be renamed the Training Commission. Its main task will be to encourage the provision of skills that companies need for growth and individuals needs for jobs.

To this end it will continue to develop the youth training scheme, as a high-quality training scheme for all young people under 18, including those in work, in order to produce a better qualified and more adaptable work force.

Its provision for adults will give a high priority to training for the unemployed. Especially the long-term unemployed, to enable them to compete successfully for the growing number of jobs. Following my right hon. Friend's announcement of 18 November, we are now considering the commission's proposals for implementing a new programme to train up to 600,000 adults a year at a cost of some £1·4 billion and we aim to publish details in a White Paper shortly.

We also look to the Training Commission to encourage and support others, especially employers, to respond to the lead given by this Department by increasing their investment in training and retraining throughout working life, to meet the demands of rapid change and competition.

CBI (Training)

44. Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he will next meet the chairman of the Confederation of British Industry to discuss training issues.

Mr. Cope: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State often meets the president and director-general of the Confederation of British Industry to discuss issues including training and receives advice on training from the Manpower Services Commission on which the CBI is represented.

Claimant Statistics

46. Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will estimate the numbers claiming benefit on the basis of no work being available, who are not seeking employment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: According to the results of the labour force survey, in spring 1986 there were 860,000 people in the count of unemployed claimants who were not seeking work. Details were published in an article in the January 1988 edition of Employment Gazette.

Inner Cities

47. Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he is taking to improve employment opportunities in the inner cities.

Mr. Cope: The Department of Employment and Manpower Services Commission provide a wide range of national programmes which aim to equip individuals with the skills and motivation to compete for available jobs and to stimulate enterprise and the growth of small businesses. The Government have guaranteed that (a) all unemployed 16 and 17-year-olds receive an offer of a place on YTS (b) all 18 to 25-year-olds unemployed between six and 12 months receive an offer of a place on the job training scheme, enterprise allowance scheme or in a jobclub; and (c) all those unemployed over six months receive a restart interview every six months. These guarantees provide direct help to unemployed inner city residents and serve to target resources on those areas of greatest need.

The level of commitment is reflected in the estimated expenditure by the Department and the Manpower Services Commission of over £1·1 billion in the 57 urban partnership authorities.

239. Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the contribution his Department is making to the Government's inner cities initiatives.

Mr. Cope: The Department of Employment and Manpower Services Commission provide a wide range of national programmes which aim to equip individuals with the skills and motivation to compete for available jobs and to stimulate enterprise and the growth of small businesses. The Government have guaranteed that (a) all unemployed 16 and 17-year-olds receive an offer of a place on the youth training scheme; (b) all 18 to 25-year-olds unemployed between six and 12 months receive an offer of a place on the job training scheme, enterprise allowance scheme or in a jobclub; and (c) all those unemployed over six months receive a restart interview every six months. These guarantees provide direct help to unemployed inner city residents and serve to target resources on those areas of greatest need.

The level of commitment is reflected in the estimated expenditure by the Department and the Manpower Services Commission of over £1·1 billion in the 57 urban partnership authorities.

Young People (Training)

48. Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many young people entered employment in 1987 with no access to training.

Mr. Cope: The information is not available in the form requested.

A postal Survey of young people aged 16 and 17 was conducted in February 1986 as part of the youth cohort study. Of these young people who were in full-time employment outside of YTS, 34 per cent. said that they were not receiving training or instructions.

65. Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will introduce a guarantee of training for all young people entering employment for the first time.

Mr. Cope: Only employers can guarantee training for their own young employees but, through YTS the Government provide high-quality training for 16 and 17-year-old school leavers. The government intend in 1988 to guarantee a place on YTS for all young people under 18 who leave or lose a job or previous YTS place, right up to their 18th birthday. Very many employers see the benefits of YTS as a method of recruitment and training this is why YTS has become the main route into employment for the under-18 age group.

Job Vacancies

49. Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the number of job vacancies registered at jobcentres in the south London area.

Mr. Lee: On 4 December 1987, the number of unfilled vacancies registered at jobcentres in the south London* area was 8,379.

Note:—*Beckenham and Penge, Bermondsey, Bexley Heath, Borough, Brixton, Bromley, Catford, Camberwell, Clapham Junction, Croydon, Deptford and Greenwich, Eltham, Erith, Kingston-upon-Thames, Lewisham, Mitcham, Orpington, Sidcup, Stockwell, Streatham, Sutton, Tooting-Balham, West Norwood, Wimbledon, and Woolwich.

90. Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many vacancies are currently registered in jobcentres in East Anglia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: The number of unfilled vacancies registered at jobcentres in the East Anglia region on the 4 December 1987 was 8,156.

92. Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the number of job vacancies in the east midlands.

Mr. Lee: The number of unfilled vacancies registered at jobcentres in the east midlands region on the 4 December 1987 was 11,787.

Working Practices (Productivity)

50. Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has as to changes in working practices which are leading to increases in productivity; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: An increasing number of firms and plants are reaching agreements to reduce demarcation and allow more flexible working by craft and other employees. Others have achieved more efficient manning levels. These developments have clearly contributed to the substantial improvement in productivity in the 1980s.

Conference and Exhibition Centres

51. Mr. Beaumont-Dark: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much has been invested in conference and exhibition centres in Britain over the past 10 years.

Mr. Lee: Figures are not available for Britain over the past 10 years. However, the English tourist board's survey of investment in projects costing over £0·5 million shows that for the year 1987 a total of £202·9 million was invested in England in conference centres and theatres.

Job Seekers (Relocation)

53. Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans his Department has to assist job seekers wishing to locate in different regions of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Lee: My Department operates a number of provisions to assist job seekers wishing to locate in different regions of the United Kingdom, including the travel-to-interview scheme, and the NATVACS computerised vacancy bank. These are being kept under review. From 1 January 1988 assistance under the travel-to-interview scheme has been extended to cover unemployed job seekers with interviews to attend in Northern Ireland.

Adult Training

54. Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has received the Manpower Services Commission report on proposals for a new adult training programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: My right hon. Friend has received the Manpower Services Commission proposals and has asked the Commission to begin the necessary preparatory work for introducing the new programme from September. The detailed decisions on the new programme will be included in the White Paper to be published later this month.

Tourism

56. Sir Peter Blaker: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is being done to encourage tourism in Blackpool and the Fylde.

Mr. Lee: I understand that the Blackpool borough council currently spends some £800,000 a year on advertising, and £1·25 million on the illuminations. Amongst the many new tourism developments in the area are the 1,000-place car and coach park, the refurbishment of the Winter Gardens conference and exhibition centre, the opening of the Sandcastle centre and continuous capital investment at the pleasure beach. In addition, I understand that many existing hotels have improved and upgraded their facilities and several major new hotel developments are planned.

Since 1985, the English tourist board have made some £388,000 of section 4 assistance available to tourism projects in Blackpool and the Fylde.

60. Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much tourists spent in the East Midlands Tourist Board area in 1986; and how many jobs tourism supports within the region.

Mr. Lee: The amount spent by tourists in the East Midlands tourist board area in 1986 is estimated to be around £400 million. Estimates of employment in all tourism-related industries are not available on a regional basis for 1986. However, the number of employees in employment in hotels and catering in the east midlands was 58,900 in June 1986. This figure does not include the self-employed for whom a comparable estimate is not available.

American Tourists

57. Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to meet the chairman of the British Tourist Board to discuss American tourists visiting the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: I have no plans to meet the chairman of the British tourist authority to discuss this topic in particular, but I maintain a very close interest in all the United Kingdom's tourism markets, and meet the chairman of the British tourist authority frequently.

61. Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the average length of stay of United States visitors to Britain in 1987.

Mr. Lee: An estimate of the average length of stay of United States visitors to Britain is not yet available for the whole of 1987. However, during the first half of the year (January to June), the average length of stay of United States visitors to the United Kingdom was nine days.

Coaches (London)

59. Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make it his policy to assist the London Tourist Board and the British Hotels, Restaurants, and Caterers Association in their implementation of a code of conduct for the handling of coaches in the capital.

Mr. Lee: I welcome the initiative of the London tourist board and the British Hotels, Restaurants and Caterers Association in preparing the code of conduct. I shall join my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport in taking every opportunity to encourage the coach industry to adopt the practices recommended in the code.

Labour Trends

62. Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will make a statement on the trend in unemployment.

Mr. Lee: On 10 December 1987 the number of unemployed claimants in the United Kingdom, adjusted for seasonality and excluding school leavers was 2,614,000 a fall of 505,400 over the last 12 months.

British Tourist Authority

64. Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he last met the chairman of the British Tourist Authority; and what was discussed.

Mr. Lee: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State last met the chairman of the British tourist authority on 15 July. In my capacity as Minister of tourism I frequently meet the chairman of the British tourist authority to discuss the problems and opportunities facing the industry.

MSC (Training Initiatives)

66. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he will next meet the chairman of the Manpower Services Commission to discuss local training initiatives.

Mr. Cope: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State meets the chairman of the Manpower Services Commission frequently to discuss a wide range of training issues, including local training initiatives.

Small Firms Service

69. Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the progress of the small firms service.

Mr. Cope: The small firms service through its information and counselling arms works to promote viable and profitable small businesses. In 1986-87, in England, it handled 283,537 inquiries and gave 38,210 counselling sessions. With the development of local enterprise agencies, it is increasingly developing its counselling activities with established businesses.

Copies of the annual report on the service for 1986-87 were placed in the Library in July.

Engineering Industry (Skill Shortages)

70. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he will next meet the chairman of the engineering industry training board to discuss skill shortages in the industry.

Mr. Nicholls: Ministers in the Department have regular meetings with all chairmen of industrial training boards to discuss various issues. I expect to meet the chairman of the engineering board in the spring.

MSC (Training Measures)

71. Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he next plans to meet the chairman of the Manpower Services Commission to discuss training measures; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State meets the chairman of the Manpower Services Commission frequently to discuss a wide range of training issues.

Training (Child Care Provisions)

74. Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what provisions there will be for child care payments under the new training scheme announced on 18 November 1987.

Mr. Cope: The proposals put forward by the Manpower Services Commission are being considered, and detailed arrangements for the new programme will be announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State in the White Paper to be published later this month.

YTS (Allowances)

76. Mr. James Lamond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will review the YTS scheme allowances for travelling to training centres.

Mr. Cope: These allowances will be considered in the light of the Manpower Services Commission's review of YTS funding which is now nearing completion.

Job Vacancies

77. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the latest trends in the number of vacancies reported to jobcentres; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: The number of new vacancies notified to jobcentres in the United Kingdom increased by 6·2 per cent. over the past 12 months to reach 236,100 in the month ending 4 December 1987.

78. Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the number of job vacancies in the north-west.

Mr. Lee: The number of unfilled vacancies registered at jobcentres in the north-west region on the 4 December 1987 was 22,010.

Hotels (Job Opportunities)

79. Mr. Dickens: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many new jobs have been created through hotel expansion in the Manchester area over the past two years.

Mr. Lee: The past two years have seen considerable growth in hotel provision in the Manchester area. It is estimated that nearly 1,800 full-time and part-time jobs have been created in hotel developments during that period in the cities of Manchester and Salford.

New Hotels (Investment)

80. Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has on the amount of investment that took place in new hotels in the United Kingdom in 1987.

Mr. Lee: Comparable information is not available for the United Kingdom as a whole. However, English tourist board estimates show that over £318 million was invested in projects with a value of £0·5 million or more in new hotels, extensions and refurbishments in 1987.

School Leavers

81. Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of school leavers went directly into full-time employment (a) in 1979 and (b) in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Lee: 30 per cent. of those young people aged 16 on 1 September 1984, who had left school between September 1984 and February 1986, went directly into full-time employment, according to results of the England and Wales youth cohort survey. This information is not available for earlier years.

Small Firms

82. Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what improvements in the survival rate of small firms has occurred since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: The best available data on the number of small businesses that exist at any one time are provided by VAT registrations and deregistrations. They show no change in the lifespan of registered firms since 1979, although since that time there has been a rising number of registrations and an average net increase of 500 businesses a week.

Hotel and Catering Industry (Wages)

83. Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many cases of underpayment in the hotel and catering industry the wages inspectors investigated in 1987; how many were the result of complaints by staff; and how many were the result of routine spot checks.

Mr. Nicholls: Work on processing the Wages Inspectorate's statistics for 1987 is not yet complete. I shall arrange for the information requested to be published in the Official Report in due course.

Government Contracts (Tendering)

85. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what responses he has had to the booklet "Tendering for Government Contracts".

Mr. Cope: The response to this booklet has been most encouraging. Since the second edition became available in September 1987, almost 4,000 copies per month have been sent out to small firms centres and similar outlets for distribution to the public. Key extracts from the booklet are also held on the Prestel database.

Overseas Visitors

86. Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of overseas visitor nights were spent out of London in 1987.

Mr. Lee: An estimate of the percentage of overseas visitor nights spent out of London is not available for the whole of 1987. However, in the first half of the year (January to June) approximately 57 per cent. of all nights spent in the United Kingdom by overseas visitors were spent outside London.

Enterprise Agencies

88. Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many inquiries were received by enterprise agencies and as a consequence how many new businesses were created in 1987.

Mr. Cope: Local enterprise agencies are independent bodies accountable to their own boards and sponsors. This Department does not have comprehensive information on the inquiries they handle or the businesses they have helped to create.

Business in the Community's most recent survey of agencies, undertaken in spring 1986, showed that the 132 agencies responding to a question on inquiries had handled some 129,000 enquiries. 118 agencies replying to a question on business start-ups claimed to have helped create more than 10,000 new businesses.

Leicester (Unemployment)

93. Mr. Ashby: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the decline in unemployment in Leicester in 1987.

Mr. Lee: On 10 December 1987, the number of unemployed claimants in the Leicester local authority area was 15,378—a fall of 3,519 since December 1986.

Tourism (Hearing-Impaired People)

94. Sir George Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is being done in the tourism industry to provide special aids for the hearing-impaired.

Mr. Lee: The Holiday Care Service in conjunction with the English tourist board has produced a booklet "Providing for Disabled Visitors", which gives guidance to the tourism industry on helping people with impaired hearing. I understand that an increasing number of hotels and places of entertainment are installing induction loop systems.

North-West Region

96. Mr. Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the change in the level of employment in the north-west region since January 1987.

Mr. Lee: Between December 1986 (figures are not available for January 1987) and September 1987 the latest date for which figures are available, the civilian employed labour force in the north-west region fell by 3,000. The figure is unadjusted for the effects of seasonal variations.

The civilian employed labour force is the sum of employees in employment and the self-employed.

Basildon

97. Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the latest figures for the number of people currently unemployed in the constituency of Basildon, and for the corresponding period in each of the last four years.

Mr. Lee: The table shows the number of unemployed claimants in the parliamentary constituency of Basildon in December of each year since 1984. The comparison is affected by the change in the compilation of the unemployment statistics in March 1986.

	Number
December 1984	6,913
December 1985	6,400
December 1986	6,165
December 1987	4,549

Self-Employment

98. Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people are currently self-employed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: In December 1987, the latest date for which figures are available, there were an estimated 2,720,000 self-employed people in Great Britain.

East Midlands

99. Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the decline in unemployment in the east midlands and the rise in the number of unfilled vacancies in Nottingham.

Mr. Lee: On 10 December 1987 the number of unemployed claimants in the east midlands region, adjusted for seasonality and excluding school leavers was 162,800 a fall of 30,800 over the last 12 months. The number of unfilled vacancies registered at jobcentres in Nottingham on 4 December 1987, was 1,305 an increase of 86 since December 1986.

The jobcentres that cover Nottingham are Nottingham, Arnold, Bulwell, Ilkeston, and Netherfield.

Tourists (Surrey)

100. Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many visitors stayed overnight in Surrey in 1986; how much they spent, and how many jobs they provided.

Mr. Lee: Information on the total number of visitors to Surrey is not available for 1986. However, overseas residents made about 450,000 overnight visits to Surrey in 1986 and spent about £95 million. The latest data on employment in tourism-related industries in Surrey relate to September 1984 when there were an estimated 21,600 employees in employment. This figure excludes self-employed persons for whom a comparable estimate is not available.

Community Programmes

105. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what guidance he has given to managers of community programmes about the arrangements they should make to prepare for the replacement of the programme in mid-August; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has asked the Manpower Services Commission to proceed immediately with preparatory work on the new adult training programme. Therefore the Manpower Services Commission has issued guidance to its area managers about the arrangements they should make to prepare for the replacement of the community programme from September 1988. This guidance proposes that the contracts of community programme agents and independent sponors which are due for renewal from 1 February, should be extended up to the start of the new programme. To help ensure a smooth transition the Manpower Services Commission's area managers will be talking in detail to all agents and sponsors about these arrangements and the positive role they can continue to play in moving forward into the new programme.

Tourism (Unified Business Rate)

106. Mr. Bevan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has regarding the effect of the proposed unified business rate on the tourism industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: I have no reason to expect that the introduction of the proposed unified business rate will have any significant effect on the tourism industry as a whole in England.

Industrial Injury

107. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the number of working hours lost as a result of industrial injury in 1987.

Mr. Nicholls: The information requested is not available. For information on working days lost, I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him in the Official Report, 24 July 1987 at column 669.

Historic Churches

108. Mr. Curry: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is being done to assist historic churches to attract tourist visitors.

Mr. Lee: The English tourist board offered assistance totalling some £185,000 from the section 4 scheme to tourism developments relating to historic churches in the 1986-87 financial year. At regional level a number of specific initiatives are planned including the 1988 Festival of Yorkshire Abbeys.

New Training Programme

109. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he intends to publish his White Paper on the new training programme.

Mr. Fowler: I plan to publish a White Paper on unemployment and training shortly. It will set out the Government's decisions on the new training programme for the adult unemployed.

Deaf Unemployed People

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many of those registered unemployed were deaf in each of the last five years.

Mr. Lee: I regret that this information is not available.

Disabled Person's Unit

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement as to the future of the Manpower Services Commission's disabled person's unit.

Mr. Lee: Neither the Manpower Services Commission nor the employment service has a disabled person's unit. However, the employment service of this Department has responsibility for the disablement resettlement service. This provides help to people with disabilities in the employment field, through jobcentre services, disablement resettlement officers and the disablement advisory service.

The Manpower Services Commission has responsibility for the employment rehabilitation service, which provides assessment and rehabilitation through employment rehabilitation centres and ASSET (assistance towards employment) centres.

Disablement Advisory Service

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has as to the use of the disablement advisory service; and if he has any plans to encourage an expansion in its use.

Mr. Lee: The disablement advisory service was introduced in 1983. Up to October 1987, well over 37,000 employers had been visited by staff of the service to promote and advise on the implementation of good policies and practices in the employment of people with disabilities and advice had been given in over 24,000 cases involving retention, career development and promotion of individual disabled employees, provision of aids to employment, and so on. The service has an important role in marketing the code of good practice on the employment of disabled people. The service has recently been supplemented by a major organisations' development unit to liaise at senior levels with very large employing organisations. Marketing of these services to employers will continue as in the past. There are no further plans for expansion.

Deaf People (Training)

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what training services his Department provides for people who have been deafened.

Mr. Lee: Training programmes are delivered through the Manpower Services Commission. The commission provides a number of dedicated services for people with disabilities including, though not exclusively for, the deaf. These include the employment rehabilitation service, residential training, and other specialist training schemes.

In addition, all mainstream training programmes supported by the Commission are open to, and designed to encourage opportunities for, deaf people who are otherwise eligible, both those born deaf and those in whom the condition is acquired. Special arrangements have been introduced in both the youth training scheme and the new job training scheme to provide support for deaf trainees through trained communicators.

The Commission has also sponsored training courses for communicators and for British sign language trainers.

Deaf People (Employment)

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has as to the number of (a) profoundly deaf and (b) hard of hearing people in (i) full-time employment and (ii) part-time employment in England and Wales for each of the last five years.

Mr. Lee: I regret this information is not available.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has any plans to monitor the progress of deaf and hearing-impaired people in employment.

Mr. Lee: I have no plans at present to monitor any groups of people with disabilities who are in employment.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether his Department has any plans to collect more comprehensive statistics on the employment of deaf and hearing-impaired people.

Mr. Lee: I expect to receive shortly final proposals for research into the numbers and characteristics of people with disabilities in the labour force. The precise breakdown of disabilities to be used in this research is yet to be established, but I will keep in mind the need for information about people who are deaf and hearing impaired as will also be done for people with all types of disability. My Department has no plans at present to collect regular statistics of this kind.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has any plans to update the Manpower Services Commission's booklet "Code of Good Practice on Employment of Disabled People" to include more details on deafness and hearing impairment.

Mr. Lee: The code of good practice on the employment of disabled people will be reviewed in the light of the results of current research into employers' attitudes towards the quota scheme and the impact of the code. I will bear in mind the hon. Member's suggestion.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many (a) deaf and (b) hearing-impaired people are employed in his Department; and what percentage this represents of all employees in his Department.

M. Lee: This answer can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many deaf people currently registered unemployed have been unemployed for more than (a) three months, (b) six months, (c) one year and (d) three years.

Mr. Lee: I regret that this information is not available.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the numbers of deaf people who are unemployed by region.

Mr. Lee: I regret that this information is not available.

Deafness Awareness Training

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to provide deafness awareness training for all jobcentre staff; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: We intend that jobcentres will participate in the sympathetic hearing scheme, and intend that all jobcentre staff will receive appropriate training this year.

We have recently made induction hearing loops available to all jobcentres, and are monitoring their usage and effectiveness. Help is also available from specialist social workers belonging to local authority social services departments and from relevant voluntary organisations when professional interpreting assistance is required for communicating with some profoundly deaf clients.

Disablement Resettlement Officers

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what element of the initial training of disablement resettlement officers is specifically devoted to (a) deaf awareness and (b) communication skills.

Mr. Lee: One module of the initial training course for disablement resettlement officers is specifically about the problems of hearing impairments including communication aspects. This is followed by project work, which includes establishing links with local agencies helping the deaf, and acquiring knowledge of resources available at local, regional and national level.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what criteria are used to judge whether disabled people should be advised by disablement resettlement officers or other jobcentre staff.

Mr. Lee: There are no hard and fast rules, but disablement resettlement officers (DROs) provide particular help to those people with disabilities who require specialist occupational counselling and advice, and those who have special needs arising from their disabilities.

In particular, they help (a) recently disabled people, (b) those who have an acute need for occupational advice in relation to their disability, (c) those who need counselling to engender either confidence or realism in relation to their employment prospects, and (d) those whose disability impedes the process of job search and for whom the normal jobcentre services are therefore not appropriate.

However, anyone with a disability can see a DRO on request.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many deaf people were placed in work by the disablement resettlement officer service for each of the last five years; and of these how many went into sheltered workshops.

Mr. Lee: The disablement resettlement officer service aims to help all people with disabilities, regardless of the type of disability. I therefore regret that the information requested is not available.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many disablement resettlement officers are currently employed by region.

Mr. Lee: The numbers of disablement resettlement officers currently employed, by region are as follows:

	Numbers
Northern	27
Yorkshire & Humberside	43
East Midlands & Eastern	37
London and the South East:
Eastern Division	38
Southern Division	39
Western Division	36
South West	33
Wales	28
West Midlands	42
North West	47
Scotland	45

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the average length of service for a disablement resettlement officer for each of the last five years.

Mr. Lee: I regret the information is not available and can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many disablement resettlement officers currently employed are qualified in communication skills with deaf people.

Mr. Lee: I regret the information is not available and can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has any plans to increase the level of training about deafness given to disablement resettlement officers.

Mr. Lee: I have no plans at present to increase the level of training about deafness given to disablement resettlement officers.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the average size of population served by a disablement resettlement officer.

Mr. Lee: Disablement resettlement services are organised in relation to various considerations — geographical location, the size of the labour market, proximity of hospitals, public transport availability, size of caseload and so on. An "average size of population" served by a disablement resettlement officer would therefore have little real meaning, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has any plans to improve the career prospects for disablement resettlement officers.

Mr. Lee: Disablement resettlement officers are members of the executive officer grade of the administration group of the home Civil Service. As such they are eligible for the normal avenues of promotion and career developmental opportunities appropriate to that grade.

Bargain Breaks

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is being done to promote bargain breaks and leisure learning breaks overseas.

Mr. Lee: The British tourist authority undertakes a number of marketing initiatives to promote these forms of tourism. It has conducted joint advertising campaigns with trade partners throughout northern Europe and Scandanavia to encourage a greater interest in them and to create an awareness of the wide range available throughout Great Britain.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Cereal Farmers

Sir Peter Hordern: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish a table showing the cost of support for European Community cereal farmers through the common agricultural policy; how many predominantly cereal farmers there are in the United Kingdom; and what was the average income of such farmers for the latest available year.

Mr. Donald Thompson: In 1986 expenditure on cereals under the guarantee section of the EAGGF was 3,391 million ecus (£2,197 million).

At the June 1986 agricultural census there were 19,600 specialist cereals holdings in the United Kingdom.

Figures for the total income of cereals farmers are not available. For the year 1986-87 (March to February) the average net farm income for specialist cereal farms in the United Kingdom was £9,200.

Notes:

(a) Specialist cereal farms are defined as those where more than two thirds of their gross margins are generated from cereals.

(b) Net farm income represents the return to the farmer and spouse for their manual and managerial labour and on tenant-type assets such as farm machinery invested in the farm business. It is calculated before the deduction of interest charges.

Animal Slaughter (Pre-stunning)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the research into the pre-stunning of animals at time of slaughter will be complete.

Mr. Donald Thompson: My Department is funding research projects in this area at the Agricultural and Food Research Council's institute of food research (Bristol). It is not possible to say when this work will be completed.

Milk Production

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has as to the likely final milk production figure for the United Kingdom in 1987-88.

Mr. Donald Thompson: It is too early to forecast precisely the volume of milk production in the United Kingdom for the 1987-88 year. However, our latest estimate is that wholesale deliveries will be very close to the level of the United Kingdom wholesale quota which is fixed at 14,057·3 million litres.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action is taken by the European Community to ensure that national figures for milk production are accurate, and that European Community instructions concerning milk quotas are observed.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The European Commission takes very seriously its obligation to ensure that it has accurate information about production in each member state and cross-checks material supplied by them with nationally published statistics. Each member state has been visited by the European Community's Court of Auditors or by inspectors from the European agricultural guidance and guarantee fund and some countries have been visited by both agencies. Failure on the part of a member state to meet its Community obligations can result in proceedings in the European Court of Justice and the Commission has recently won its case against Italy for failure to implement the quota regime.

Creameries

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list information available to him on the creameries closed in each year since 1984.

Mr. Donald Thompson: My hon. Friend will be aware that the management of creameries is a matter for the companies concerned and i do not therefore have comprehensive records. He will also be aware that these companies will take their decisions about deployment of capital on the basis of a range of factors including supplies, efficiency and market developments. It follows from this that some closures will have been part of programmes which include expansion at other plants or in other areas of a company's activities. The creamery closures listed need to be considered in this light.

New Zealand Lamb

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the total tonnage of imports of New Zealand lamb in each year since 1970, and the percentage of the total United Kingdom lamb market that these imports represent in each year.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The information is as follows:

Year	New Zealand mutton and lamb imports	Imports as percentage of Offtake[1]
1970	295·6	54·3
1971	310·3	54·6

New Zealand Butter

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the total tonnage of imports of New Zealand butter in each year since 1970, and the percentage of the total United Kingdom butter market that these imports represent in each year.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The information requested is as follows:

Radioactivity (Sheep)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food why no sheep which had died from natural causes were monitored for radioactivity in the restricted area of Cumbria after March 1987.

Mr. Donald Thompson: My Department's monitoring effort is directed primarily at the protection of the food chain and thus at the monitoring of live sheep leaving the Cumbria restricted area under the "mark and release" scheme. The hon. Member has been informed of arrangements for dealing with sheep which have died of natural causes in my replies of 1 December and 10 December 1987 at columns 541-2 and 259 respectively.

Nuclear Accidents

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has completed his Ministry's contingency plans to deal with the effects of a nuclear accident overseas; if he will place a copy in the Library; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: My Department's contingency plans for dealing with emergency contamination of food or agriculture involving the powers provided in part I of the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985 are in process of revision following the development of the national response plan announced by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 30 June 1987 at columns 65-67 and in the light of our experience of operating the plans during the post-Chernobyl period. I will place a copy of the revised plans in the Library of the House when the revision is complete and I will let the hon. Member know when I have done so.

Radioactivity Monitoring

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list all the monitoring programmes for radioactivity his Ministry has undertaken or commissioned since May 1986, the type of substances tested, if animals were tested and whether they were alive or dead, and where any results have been published.

Mr. Donald Thompson: My Department maintains routine monitoring programmes in both the aquatic and terrestrial environments and additional emergency monitoring has been ongoing in both these areas since the Chernobyl accident. A comprehensive range of food, agricultural and aquatic materials is monitored in these programmes. Animal testing is based on dead samples with the exception of the programme of live monitoring of sheep in the restricted areas. Data have been published in (i) radionuclide levels in food, animals and agricultural products, (ii) aquatic environment monitoring report numbers 15 and 18. These reports together with additional tabulated aquatic data and live monitoring results for sheep have been placed in the Library of the House.

Farm Waste Unit

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what changes he is making to the operation of the farm waste unit, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I attach great importance to the work and advice on pollution control undertaken by my Department which I am determined should be carried out as efficiently as possible. The farm waste unit has made a very valuable contribution in this area but there is now far more need for advice at local level. Responsibility for this aspect of its work is being transferred to the regional farm mechanisation advisers, and local ADAS advisers in the field who are better placed to maintain close contact with the customer. The unit's research and development functions will of course continue to be carried out centrally under two specialist posts established for this purpose.

Bacon and Pork Imports

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the estimated advantages for bacon and pork imports from EEC countries in the United Kingdom market arising from present green currency rates; whether he will make representations to have an urgent change in the green pound rates; and if he will make a statement on the present state of the United Kingdom's pig industry.

Mr. MacGregor [holding answer 1 February 1988]: The monetary compensatory amounts payable on imports from Denmark and Holland are currently £53·85 per tonne for pig carcases and £68·93 per tonne for bacon sides. Our commitment is to see MCAs abolished in this sector. There are widely differing views within the EC on this issue and it will not be easy to achieve. But we shall be battling for MCA changes in the agricultural price review. I welcome the decision to reintroduce aids for the private storage of pigmeat which should help to strengthen the market; that decision was taken by the management committee as a result of pressure from the United Kingdom and other member states.

Food (Radioactivity Levels)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the permissible radioactivity levels in food agreed at the recent European Economic Community Council of Ministers meeting.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 1 February 1988]: Council Regulation (Euratom) No. 3954/87 of 22 December 1987 lays down the procedure for determining the maximum permitted levels of radioactive contamination of foodstuffs and feedingstuffs which may be placed on the market following a future nuclear emergency. The levels specified are as follows:

Maximum permitted levels for foodstuffs and feedingstuffs (Bq/kg or Bq/l)

	Baby foods[1]	Dairy produce[2,3]	Other foodstuffs except minor foodstuffs[4]	Liquid foodstuffs[5]	Feedingstuffs[6]
Isotopes of strontium, notably Sr-90	—	125	750	—	—
Isotopes of iodine notably I-131	—	500	2,000	—	—
Alpha-emitting isotopes of plutonium and transplutonium elements, notably Pu-239, Am-241	—	20	80	—	—
All other nuclides of half-life greater than 10 days, notably Cs-134, Cs-137[7]	—	1,000	1,250	—	—

[1] Baby foods are defined as those foodstuffs intended for the feeding of infants during the first four to six months of life, which meet, in themselves, the nutritional requirements of this category of person and are put up for retail sale in packages which are clearly identified and labelled 'food preparation for infants'. Values to be established.

[2] Dairy produce is defined as milk falling within headings Nos. 04.01 and 04.02 of the Common Customs Tariff, and the corresponding headings of the combined nomenclature as from 1 January 1988.

[3] The level applicable to concentrated or dried products shall be calculated on the basis of the reconstituted product as ready for consumption.

[4] Minor foodstuffs and the corresponding levels to be applied to them will be as defined in accordance with Article 7.

[5] Liquid foodstuffs as defined by Chapters 20 and 22 of the Common Customs Tariff and by the corresponding Chapter of the combined nomenclature as from 1 January 1988. Values are calculated taking into account consumption of tap-water and the same values should be applied to drinking water supplies at the discretion of competent authorities in member states. Values for liquid foodstuffs to be established.

[6] Values to be established.

[7] Carbon 14 and tritium are not included in this group.

This regulation entered into force on 3 January 1988 alongside Council Regulation (EEC) No. 3955/87 which continues the controls on imports of agricultural products from third countries introduced following the Chernobyl accident.

Pig Producers

Mr. Latham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the current problems of pig producers and on the action he is taking to improve the situation affecting monetary compensatory amounts.

Mr. MacGregor [holding answer 1 February 1988]: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave today to the right hon. Member for Strangford (Mr. Taylor).

Milk Production

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many dairy farmers in each county in England and Wales produce milk up to the quota; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson [pursuant to his answer, 25 January 1988, c. 52]: In the 1986-87 quota year, the number of dairy farmers in each county of England and Wales who delivered more milk than their wholesale quota are set out in the following table. The position given is before any interchange between wholesale and direct sale quota and is not therefore final. These data are held by the Milk Marketing Board on the basis of names and boundaries that applied in 1933; they do not therefore reflect existing county boundaries.

In England and Wales, supplementary levy liability arises on the net excess of deliveries over quota for the Milk Marketing Board as a whole. This system contributes to meeting the needs of the industry by providing the flexibility for some producers to exceed their quotas, and for this over-production to be offset by the extent to which other producers fall short of their quotas. In 1986-87, when the net excess of production over quota in England and Wales was less than 1 per cent., about 54 per cent. of producers were over quota and about 45 per cent. under quota.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Radiation

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the number of farms, the number of sheep and the area of land, in acres, under restriction in Northern Ireland as a result of radioactivity from the Chernobyl accident; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Viggers: The information requested is as follows: 123 farms, 27,355 sheep and 21,612 acres.

Pig Products

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what system of inspection is in operation to examine imports of pig products from Belgium, France, Denmark, Netherlands and Germany for (a) swine fever, and (b) antibiotic residues; and what controls are applied to imports of pig products from (i) Great Britain and (ii) the Republic of Ireland.

Mr. Viggers [holding answer 1 February 1988]: Imports into Northern Ireland of pig products from Belgium, France, Denmark, Netherlands and West Germany are subject to licensing controls operated by the Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland in accordance with the rules of intra-Community trade which preclude pigmeat from areas affected with swine fever (or meat in contact with such meat) and meat containing antibiotics residues.

These controls provide for examination by the Department of the veterinary health certification required to accompany consignments and of the product itself at points of entry to Northern Ireland. All documentation is inspected to ensure that EC directive requirements are fully satisfied. Similar controls apply in the case of imports from Great Britain and the Republic of Ireland.

Imports into Northern Ireland from outside the United Kingdom of pig products. as foods intended for sale for human consumption, are also liable to examination by authorised officers of district councils under the Imported Food (Northern Ireland) Regulations 1984. Such foods must be marked with a health mark which has been recognised by the Department of Health and Social Services for Northern Ireland and must be accompanied by a health certificate in a format set out in the regulations.

FEOGA Grants

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he was first informed that there had been no successful applications for FEOGA grants for new fishing boats in the recent allocations by the EEC; what was the closing date for appeal against this decision; when Northern Irish applicants were advised of the closing dates for appeal; what information was available to him on the degree of completeness of some Northern Irish applications before he knew that they had been rejected; if he has all necessary documentation to ensure that applications were complete; and if he will make a statement on the role of his Department in assisting applicants for FEOGA grants for new fishing boats.

Mr. Viggers [holding answer 1 February 1988]: The Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland became aware that no Northern Ireland projects for new fishing boats submitted under the first round of EC regulation 4028/86 were to be approved by the Commission when the draft decisions were tabled for the opinion of the Standing Committee on Fisheries Structures at its meeting on 11 December 1987. There is no appeals procedure against these Commission decisions but in the Standing Committee the United Kingdom delegation made representations regarding the low level of aid to Northern Ireland.

In the early autumn the Department became aware from informal contacts that the Commission intended strictly to apply powers which exist in the regulation to reject as incomplete those applications not accompanied by plans and specifications for new boats. The Commission decisions resulting from the application of this rule agree with the Department's records, except for three cases where plans were submitted but the Commission has rejected the application as incomplete because of the absence of plans.

In common with the other Fisheries Departments, the Department of Agriculture make application forms and explanatory leaflets available to prospective applicants. When any additional or supplementary information is obtained from the Commission, this is made available to fishermen's representative organisations. The Department is responsible for the initial receipt of applications and onward submission to the Commission along with certification that the project forms part of the United Kingdom's multi-annual guidance programme, the extent and form of member state aid, the VAT status of the applicant and details of any existing boat belonging to the applicant. However, responsibility for the completion of applications rests with the applicant or his agent.

SCOTLAND

Lothian Region

112. Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people under the age of 25 years are currently unemployed in Lothian region.

Mr. Lang: On 8 October 1987 (the latest date for which information is available) there were 15,926 unemployed claimants under 25 years of age in Lothian region.

This information is available in the Library.

Manufacturing Employment

113. Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what were the levels of manufacturing employment in Scotland at June 1979, June 1983, June 1987 and January 1988.

114. Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what were the levels of manufacturing employment in Scotland at June 1979, June 1983, June 1987 and January 1988.

115. Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what were the levels of manufacturing employment in Scotland at June 1979, June 1983, June 1987 and January 1988.

Mr. Lang: The table sets out the estimates for June 1979, June 1983, June 1987 and September 1987, the latest date for which this information is available. Some of the decline in the figures for manufacturing will be the result of reclassification of jobs such as industrial cleaning, catering, road haulage and other services previously done by manufacturers' own employees and now done by subcontractors outside manufacturing.

Blood

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what is his estimate of the proportion and number of adults in Scotland that would be suitable for blood donation;

(2) what proportion and number of suitable adults give blood in Scotland;

(3) what proportion and number of suitable adults are needed to give blood to make Scotland self-sufficient in blood-derived products;

(4) whether he will consider reducing the period between permitted donations of blood to four months from six, to ease the shortage of blood and blood-derived products, and to make Scotland self-sufficient; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Scotland has been self-sufficient in blood and all normally-required blood products since the end of 1983. Approximately 300,000 blood donations are collected each year, representing about one donation per 11 persons in the age group (18 to 65-year-olds) eligible to give blood.

Individuals whose health is such that it is not safe for them to give blood are excluded from so doing. Similarly, there are restrictions on giving blood to reduce the risk of transmitting diseases—for example, malaria, hepatitis or AIDS. The total number of people who as a result are not suitable for blood donation, however, is not known.

The Scottish national blood transfusion service already accepts blood donations at 12-weekly intervals although donors are sent invitations to attend to give blood at 16-weekly or six monthly intervals, depending on local collection arrangements. Apheresis donations (in which donors give a particular part of their blood and that part which is not required is returned) can be made at intervals of only a few weeks.

D and C Operations

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the rate of deaths per 10,000 women having D and C operations in Scotland in each of the last 25 years for which figures are available of (a) anaesthetic deaths arising directly or indirectly out of such operations, (b) deaths due to embolism directly or indirectly linked to such operations, and (c) other deaths directly due to such operations; and if he will break down this rate by whether or not the D and C operation also involved an abortion.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I regret that the information requested is not held centrally.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he had concerning the total number of D and C operations performed in Scotland in each of the last 25 years for which figures are available.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Administration of Justice

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Orkney and Shetland on 18 January, Official Report, column 515, what information he has as to any of those cases which were marked for no proceedings by reason of resources not being available to deal with them within the judicial system in any fiscaldom in Scotland between 1984 and 30 November 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Information relating to cases which were marked "no proceedings" is not available.

Regional Aid

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate the amount of regional selective assistance to be paid out in Scotland for each year from 1988-89 to 1990-91.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 28 January 1988]: The 1988 public expenditure White Paper contains net provision for my right hon. and learned Friend's industry, energy, trade and employment programme in 1988-89, 1989-90, 1990-91, of £266 million, £260 million and £260 million, respectively. Within these totals present expectation is that regional selective assistance (RSA) and related schemes, including the new investment grant for small businesses, will account for some £60 million, £60 million and £80 million in 1988-89, 1989-90 and 1990-91, respectively. The increase in provision between the years reflects expected additional demand for RSA which is envisaged as a result of the ending of the RDG scheme. In addition, support to firms in Scotland will be provided through the new innovation grants scheme and enhanced business development services.

SOCIAL SERVICES

National Insurance Contributions

110. Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what measures are taken by his Department to enforce payment of national insurance contributions by employers so that employees are not denied entitlement to unemployment benefit.

Mr. Scott: Employees' class 1 national insurance contributions are usually collected by the Inland Revenue's PAYE arrangements, the bulk of which are paid into the national insurance fund. The Inland Revenue can recover contributions that are not paid over by employers, but this Department takes responsibility for enforcement. Enforcement is usually achieved by suing for the debt in the civil courts, but criminal proceedings can be instituted.

There are some, 2,000 national insurance inspectors, who examine employers' records to ensure compliance with the National Insurance Contributions Regulations. In the year ending April 1987 the inspectors completed some 100,000 surveys, in which employers' records were examined. Inland Revenue PAYE auditors also visit firms and examine their records. These routine visits can lead to the discovery of irregularities.

Employees' contributions which have been collected are recorded after the end of the tax year on the person's national insurance account, which is held by the Department's records branch. If insufficient contributions are recorded there for that year, the person is informed, and irregularities can then come to light. Failure on the part of employers to pay over contributions can also be discovered when a benefit claim fails.

All cases where contributions have not been recorded on the person's account are investigated urgently. Contributions will usually be treated as if they had been paid, so that entitlement to benefit is not affected. Action is then brought against the employer to recover the arrears.

Midwives

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many newly qualified midwives entered into practice in (a) Hartlepool area district health authority, (b) Sunderland district health authority and (c) Durham district health authority in the years 1984-85, 1985-86 and 1986-87.

Mr. Newton: Information in the form requested is not held centrally. The latest staff in post figures are shown in the table.

Disqualification (Appeals)

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if, pursuant to the reply given on 26 November 1987, Official Report, columns 263-64, he will indicate the number of cases of disqualification that were taken to an appeal tribunal, showing how many resulted in the disqualification being overruled, distinguishing as far as possible between the different heads of section 20(1) of the Social Security Act 1975; and if he will also provide information for each year since 1976 showing the number of such appeals and the outcome of the appeal.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is not readily available prior to April 1984, the date of the establishment of the independent office of the president of social security appeal tribunals, and could be extracted only at disproportionate cost. The available information is shown in the table.

Great Ormond Street Hospital

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what percentage of the costs of Great Ormond street children's hospital is met (a) by his Department, (b) from charities including the Wishing Well Appeal and (c) from other specified sources.

Mrs. Currie: Approximately £40·1 million of Exchequer capital and revenue was spent by the Hospitals for Sick Children special health authority (which is also responsible for Queen Elizabeth hospital, Hackney) at Great Ormond street last year; to which was added some £2·3 million expended on behalf of a number of charitable organisations by its special trustees.

The £30 million which the Wishing Well Appeal hopes to raise over the next seven years will go towards rebuilding and equipment at Great Ormond street. The Government intend to make a contribution of approximately £27 million to this redevelopment, over and above capital committed to maintenance of existing buildings, fees and equipment. The exact size of this contribution will not be known until detailed costing of the scheme is complete.

We warmly welcome the tradition of partnership between voluntary and statutory sources of support for which this internationally prestigious hospital is already famous.

Community Care

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what guidance is issued to health authorities regarding consultants employed by health authorities acting as partners or beneficiaries in private homes allocated to patients under the Government's community care policy.

Mr. Newton: None. This is a matter for health authorities to determine locally in the light of individual circumstances.

Dialysis Patients

Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects (EPO) to be made available to dialysis patients suffering from acute anaemia.

Mr. Newton: The licensing authority has recently received an application to market a medicinal product containing rDNA erythropoietin (EPO), a product developed by a biotechnological process. Similar applications have also been received by other member states of the European Community. Under the procedure introduced by directive 87/22/EEC for the purpose of increasing the harmonisation of licensing decisions in the Community for "high technology" medicinal products, one member state has requested an opinion on EPO from the Community's Committee for Proprietary Medicinal Products. This opinion must be taken into account before a national licensing decision can be made. I am unable to comment on the likely outcome of this application or to predict when EPO will become generally available in the United Kingdom. It is currently being used on a limited scale to treat patients who are participating in clinical trials of the substance and can be used by registered medical practitioners for individuals on a "named patient basis".

Hospital Patient Statistics

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will list the number of in-patient beds currently available in each outer London health district; and if he will identify what proportion of beds in each district is available for patients requiring intensive care;

(2) if he will list the total number of (a) in-patients and (b) out-patients treated in each of the outer London health districts in the last year for which figures are available;

(3) if he will list the average length of stay for in-patients in each of the outer London health districts.

Mrs. Currie: The tables show the available information. No information is available centrally on the number of beds used for intensive care treatment, or on the average lengths of stay of mental handicap and mental illness in-patients.

Hospitals (Building and Maintenance Costs)

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many hospitals built in the last 10 years have cost more than 15 per cent. above the original estimate of construction cost; and what is the total amount of these overruns.

Mrs. Currie: Information held centrally on National Health Service building schemes in England, which relates to schemes started since 1980, indicates that five out of 36 schemes, each valued at over £5 million and with a total value of £315 million, started and completed since 1980, overran the contractual sum by more than 15 per cent. Subject to resolution of outstanding final accounts, the total amount of these overruns is estimated to be £12·4 million.

Meningitis

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many cases of meningitis have been reported in the Northern regional health authority and Northumberland district health authority areas in each year from 1985.

Mrs. Currie: Meningitis may be caused by a number of different organisms. The hon. Member may be particularly interested in meningococcal meningitis: the table shows notifications of cases for this and for all forms of acute meningitis.

Number of notifications of acute and meningococcal meningitis, Northern regional health authority and Northumberland district health authority, 1985-87

Social Security Reform

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many households in the Blyth valley area he estimates will lose payments they at present receive for heating bills with the implementation of the Social Security Act.

Mr. Chris Scott: I regret that no information is available concerning the number of households in the Blyth Valley area who are in receipt of supplementary benefit heating additions.

Disabled People

Mr. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his estimate of the number of severely disabled people currently receiving attendance allowance who will not receive severe disability premium as a result of its restriction to people living alone without carers who receive invalid care allowance.

Mr. Scott: It is estimated that of the 174,000 supplementary benefit claimants who receive attendance allowance, or whose partner or dependant does, 7,000 will receive the severe disability premium in income support. Similar information is not available for those not in receipt of income support who claim housing benefit.

Equal Opportunities

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many of his Department's management training courses include sessions on equal opportunities for women; and what proportion of managers at grade 6 level and above working outside headquarters have received training on equal opportunities for women.

Mrs. Currie: Twenty management training courses cover equal opportunities for women issues; six include specific sessions on equal opportunities. Five social security regions have held management awareness seminars on equal opportunities. All managers at grade 6 and above are informed of Departmental policy and commitment to equal opportunities for women. The majority have attended management training courses or seminars.

Residential Care

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether, where a housing association provides residential care for elderly people, those residents who loan all but £3,000 of their capital to the housing association are allowed to receive full social security benefits; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: Only supplementary benefit operates a capital cut-off under the present system. Regulations provide for any sum deposited with a housing association, as defined in section 189(1) of the Housing Act 1957 or section 208(1) of the Housing (Scotland) Act 1966, as a condition of occupying the home, to be disregarded. It is for the independent adjudication authorities to decide if this provision applies in the light of the facts of each case. From April, the same rule will apply to income support, housing benefit and family credit.

Community Alarm Schemes

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if housing benefit is paid in respect of tenants or owner-occupiers' contributions to community alarm schemes in their own home under the present housing benefit regulations; and if it will be paid under the housing benefit regulations which come into effect on 1 April.

Mr. Scott: Under the present housing benefit regulations help with service charges can be provided through housing benefit for people in rented accommodation. There is no specific reference to alarm systems in the current housing benefit regulations, but the costs of this service can be met if the tenant has no option but to pay and the local authority considers that the service is "reasonably necessary for the proper enjoyment of the dwelling".

From April, the new regulations clarify existing policy by making it clear that housing benefit is available to help with the costs of alarm systems where they are provided in accommodation which is occupied by and specifically designed or adapted or otherwise particularly suitable for elderly, sick or disabled people.

For owner-occupiers help with service charges is available through supplementary benefit — income support from April—on the same basis as the help given to tenants through housing benefit.

Population Statistics

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the 10 areas in England which have seen (a) the greatest population growth and (b) the greatest population reduction, since 1965.

Mrs. Currie: The information requested is as follows:

Thousands

Local Authority Area (ranked by change)	Resident Population		Population change
	Mid-1965	Mid-1986	1965-86
i) Greatest Growth

Opticians

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list those opticians in the north-east area of Manchester who are not routinely handing out general optical service prescriptions, identified in the summary of the National Health Service investigator's report.

Mrs. Currie: The Family Practitioner Committee is initiating service committee proceedings against three practitioners where the auditors' report provided some evidence of their failure to hand over prescriptions. It would be prejudicial to the practitioners concerned to publish their names.

General Practitioners

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what is the number of general practitioners per 1000 population for (a) England and Wales, (b) the west midlands, (c) north Staffordshire and (d) Stoke on Trent;

(2) what is the average number of patients on general practitioner lists for (a) England and Wales, (b) west midlands, (c) north Staffordshire and (d) Stoke on Trent.

Mrs. Currie: The information requested is not held centrally in respect of north Staffordshire or Stoke-on-Trent. Figures are available as at 1 October 1986, as follows:

	Number of general practitioners per 1,000 population	Average number of patients per general practitioner
England and Wales	0·52	2,033
West Midlands Region	0·51	2,040
Staffordshire Family Practitioner Committee (including North Staffordshire and Stoke-on-Trent)	0·48	2,105

D and C Operations

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the rate of deaths per 10,000 women having D and C operations in England and Wales in each of the last 25 years for which figures are available of (a) anaesthetic deaths arising directly or indirectly out of such operations, (b) deaths due to embolism directly or indirectly linked to such operations and (c) other deaths directly due to such operations; and if he will break down this rate by whether or not the D and C operation also involved an abortion.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that this information is not available centrally.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has concerning the total number of D and C operations performed in England and Wales in each of the last 25 years for which figures are available.

Mrs. Currie: I shall let my hon. Friend have such information as is available without incurring disproportionate costs as soon as possible.

AIDS

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether the special trust fund for HIV positive carriers to be run by the Haemophilia Society has yet been established; and when he expects the first applications for financial assistance to be invited.

Mr. Newton: Following close collaboration officials and officers of the Haemophilia Society, measures necessary to establish the special trust fund are nearing completion. The Haemophilia Society is already giving financial help on an interim basis to urgent cases to need. Applications for financial help from other haemophiliacs infected with HIV and their dependants are being accepted so that payments can be made as quickly as possible.

Health Statistics

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will list by London health authority the total available patient beds for each year since 1979;

(2) if he will list by district health authority (a) the establishment figure of medical laboratory scientific officers for each year since 1979, (b) the number in post for each year since 1979, and (c) the number who have left the National Health Service in the last year;

(3) if he will list by district health authority the number of people on waiting lists for urgent and non-urgent operations for December of each year since 1982.

Mr. Newton: I shall let the hon. Member have such information as is available centrally without incurring disproportionate costs as soon as possible.

Benefits (Adjustment)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to review the system of flat rate compensation payment available to benefit claimants or as a result of the miscalculation of the retail prices index; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: We have no plans to review the system of ex gratia payments we are making as a result of the error in the calculation of the RPI. We are making these payments, although we have no legal requirement to do so, to more than 12 million beneficiaries. The exercise is designed to combine as far as possible fairness with speed of payment.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to review the position of benefit claimants in receipt of more than one benefit for which a flat rate compensation payment is available after the miscalculation of the retail prices index who have received only one payment because they have a combined order book.

Mr. Scott: We have no plans to do so. Having two benefits combined on one order book does not automatically mean that the claimant has suffered twice from the error in the retail prices index. The ex-gratia special payments fully compensate the great majority of people who have combined order books for two benefits, including the least well-off pensioners with supplementary pensions. Less than 10 per cent. of people with combined books will be undercompensated for the retail prices index error because of the method of payment.

Child Care and Family Services

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he will be issuing a consultation paper on his proposals concerning standards for day care and residential holidays for children aged between five and 16 years referred to in the White Paper "The Law on Child Care and Family Services".

Mr. Newton: The Department, jointly with the Department of Education and Science and the Department of the Environment, has today issued a consultation paper "Day Care and Residential Holidays for Children over Five". It is being sent to local authorities including non-metropolitan district councils in England; voluntary bodies active in the child care, disabled, mental handicap, educational, sporting and recreational fields; and organisations representing medical, nursing and social work interests.

The Government have decided that a full registration system which would apply to all activities provided for children aged between five and 16 would be inappropriate and impractical. It is primarily the responsibility of parents to satisfy themselves about the adequacy of the arrangements to which they entrust their children. Whilst we recognise that children need to be protected from harm, we believe that out-of-school or holiday play schemes need a lower level of control than residential holidays where children are away from their parents for some time. The Government are seeking views on two options: the introduction of a limited registration scheme (for which legislation would be necessary). This would be operated by local authorities and apply to residential holidays for groups of children for up to 27 days; or the establishment of voluntary codes of practice to be drawn up by private or voluntary organisations. These would cover day care and residential activities.

Similar consultation exercises are being carried out by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Geriatric Patients

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the numbers of geriatric patients in the central Nottingham health authority area for each year from 1979-1987 inclusive.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 15 January 1988]: The information requested is given in the table.

Number of geriatric patients treated in National Health Service hospitals in the Central Nottingham Health Authority[1] for each year from 1979 to 1986 (latest available).

Year	In-patient discharges and deaths	Out-patient attendances	Regular day patients

Accident and Emergency Services (Greenwich)

Mrs. Rosie Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services on how many occasions and for what reasons either the Greenwich district hospital or the Brook hospital have been closed to accident and emergency admissions over the past 12 months.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 27 January 1988]: The table lists periods of restriction to the accident and emergency departments of the Brook and Greenwich district hospitals over the past year and indicates the reasons for them.

Unplanned closures have declined markedly from their summer peak, which reflects Greenwich health authority's commitment to avoid them in future and to provide a continuous accident and emergency service from these two hospitals.

When the Brook hospital accident and emergency department has been closed, patients have been taken to the nearby department at Greenwich district general hospital. When there has been a restricted service at the Greenwich DGH department, the reverse has happened. There have been no simultaneous restrictions of service at the two departments.

Greenwich health authority is also covered by the new London emergency bed monitoring service.

[1] Intensive treatment beds—There are 8 ITU beds at the Brook Hospital, 2 of which are at present closed because of shortage of nursing staff. Also available are six coronary care beds which, while not 'intensive' beds offer a high level of clinical care.
[2] Intensive treatement beds—There are 10 ITU beds at Greenwich District General Hospital, two of which are at present closed because of shortage of nursing staff.

Private Patients

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give, for each regional health authority, district health authority, and special health authority, and for England as a whole, the number of attendances in 1983 and 1986 by (a) private out-patients, (b) private day cases and (c) private regular day patients.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 18 January 1988]: The information requested is given in the table.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Commercial Vehicles

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the total output of lorries and commercial vehicles, the percentage exported and the proportion of the domestic market taken by imports in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) West Germany and (c) Japan in 1958, 1960, 1965, 1970, 1975 and in each year from 1979 to 1987.

Mr. Atkins The available information is shown in the tables.

Imports

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will give imports as a percentage of home demand in 1987 or over the maximum available period of 1987 projected on a yearly basis for (a) all manufactures, (b) chemicals, (c) motor vehicles, (d) textiles, (e) clothing and footwear, food and so on, (f) metals, (g) metal manufactures N. C. S., (h) mechanical engineers, (i) electrical engineering and (j) office/data processing instruments.

Mr. Atkins: Information on import penetration is contained in Business Monitor MQ12 "Import penetration and export sales ratios for manufacturing industry", copies of which are in the Library of the House.

Research and Development

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has on the regional distribution of civil research and development expenditure by Government and industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The information is not available and could only be produced at disproportionate cost.

Accident Statistics

Mr. Janner: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has on the number of people who have died of asphyxiation from accidentally swallowing a pen top, how many of these were children, and how many of these accidents occurred in school.

Mr. Butcher: Information is available for England and Wales from three sources: (i) a study of all children's deaths registered as inhalation of a foreign body between 1964 and 1984, (ii) the home accident deaths database for 1982-1985, and (iii) a newspaper cutting service (though the latter is not regarded as exhaustive).

A total of 10 cases is known to my Department. All the victims were children. Two of the accidents occurred in schools, the other eight at home.

The following table gives details of the extent of information available.

British Steel Corporation

Mr. Page: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he is in a position to announce a revised external financing limit for the British Steel Corporation.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: As hon. Members will know, BSC's performance in the first half of this year has been impressive. I am glad to say that the corporation's latest forecasts for the rest of the current financial year indicate that a reduction in the EFL from £66 million to minus £300 million is practicable, and this change has now been made.

EC (Research Council)

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what progress was made at the meeting of the Research Council of European Community Ministers on 21 December 1987, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Community's Council of Ministers (Research) met on 21 December in Brussels: I represented Her Majesty's Government.

The Council adopted a revision to the 1985-89 programme on radiation protection. This revision will provide a sum of 10 million ecu (£7 million) for additional work related to the Community's response to the Chernobyl accident.

The Council also adopted common positions on the ESPRIT II programme in information technology and on a revision to the BRITE programme in industrial technology.

ESPRIT II is the largest single programme in the Community's 1987-90 framework programme for research and development. ESPRIT II will, over five years, provide 1600 million ecu (£1120 million) of Community funding for projects in microelectronics and peripheral technologies, information processing systems and application technologies. The same amount of funding will be provided by the industrial partners and other contractors in the ESPRIT projects. The United Kingdom Government expect the ESPRIT II programme to make a major contribution to the research needs of the information technology industry.

The revision to the BRITE programme will provide a further 60 million ecu (£42 million) to support projects in industrial technologies such as wear and resistance, joining technologies, polymers and composite materials and flexible materials. As with ESPRIT, the Community funding is matched by similar contributions from contracting partners.

The United Kingdom has participated fully in this rapid progress towards the implementation of specific programmes within the framework programme. This underlines our commitment to the principle of collaborative research within the Community on programmes which are well defined and meet clear Community needs.

The Research Council also held a first debate on the Commission's proposals for the future programme of the joint research centre. The debate revealed a large measure of agreement that the JRC is in need of very considerable reform. I am hopeful that progress will be made towards this objective over the next few months.

Airbus

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will take steps to make public the financial structure and financial situation of Airbus Industrie; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 1 February 1988]: Airbus Industrie is Groupement d'interet economique (grouping of mutual economic interest) established under French law. The Members of the partnership are Aerospatiale of France, with 37·9 per cent. participation, Deutsche Airbus of Germany, also with 37·9 per cent., British Aerospace of the United Kingdom, with 20 per cent. and CASA of Spain with 4·2 per cent. As a groupement d'interet economique, Airbus Industrie is not required to publish accounts. The results of the Airbus business of the partner companies are, of course, included in the annual accounts which these companies publish under their national laws.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the role which he has given to his special adviser Sir Jeffrey Stirling in relation to the Airbus project.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 1 February 1988]: The Governments of the four Airbus partner countries have recently appointed a small group of wise men to consider the organisation of the Airbus programme. This step reinforces the continuous efforts of the partner companies, including British Aerospace, to improve the efficiency of the organisation. I have asked Sir Jeffrey Sterling to act as the United Kingdom member of this group.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what representations he has received concerning the provision of further subsidies for Airbus projects following the decline in the value of the dollar; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 1 February 1988]: The United Kingdom Government have provided launch aid to British Aerospace for the Airbus A320 programme, and have agreed to provide it for the Airbus A330/A340 programmes. Launch aid is not a subsidy and is repayable with a real rate of return to the Government. Senior representatives of British Aerospace have discussed with my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster the effects on their Airbus business of the decline in the value of the dollar. They have not submitted an application for further launch aid.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make it his policy that Airbus Industrie should become a public limited company; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 1 February 1988]: No. The partners in Airbus Industrie are British Aerospace and its partner companies in France, Germany and Spain. It is their responsibility to take any decisions about the future organisation of the Airbus programme. Airbus partner Governments have an interest in organisational questions as they have provided financial support to the programme. This is why they have asked the group of wise men to consider the matter and to advise them.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what recent discussions his Department or its representatives have had with the partner companies of Airbus Industrie or their sponsoring Governments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 1 February 1988]: My Department has regular meetings at ministerial and official level with other Airbus partner Governments, and also with British Aerospace and Airbus Industrie. A wide range of topics of mutual interest is discussed at these meetings.

Household Glass (Accident Statistics)

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) how many children have been injured in accidents involving household glass and glazing in each of the last 10 years;

(2) how many accidents involving household glass resulted in personal injury for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Butcher [holding answer 1 February 1988]: The following estimates of the numbers of accidents involving household glass that were treated at hospitals in England and Wales from 1980 to 1987 have been made from sample data collected by my Department's home accident surveillance system. No other data are available.

Year	Estimated numbers of accidents children under 15 years	Total
1980	52,000	133,000
1981	36,000	102,000
1982	42,000	113,000
1983	44,000	124,000
1984	45,000	126,000

Year	Estimated numbers of accidents children under 15 years	Total
1985	39,000	122,000
1986	34,000	110,000
[1]1987	33,000	110,000

[1] provisional estimates.

These figures include the following articles: windows, doors containing glass, unfitted panes, glass cabinets, mirrors, bottles, jars, dishes, drinking glasses, binoculars, greenhouses and unspecified glass, even though the glass part of the article may not have been involved in the accident. Only some of the accidents will have involved broken glass.

Regional Development

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how much money has been spent in each of the last 10 years by his Department or agencies responsible to his Department on attracting industry from (a) the United Kingdom and (b) overseas into (i) Scotland, (ii) Wales, (iii) Northern Ireland and (iv) the English regions, by region.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 1 February 1988]: My Department's Invest in Britain Bureau promotes the United Kingdom as a whole as a location for overseas investment, and the Department also provides grants to five English regional development organisations similarly to promote their respective regions. The total amount of money my Department has spent in each of the last 10 years on promotional programmes, and on the regional development organisations, is as follows:

Year	Invest in Britain bureau	Grants to English RDOs (£)

[1] NDC took over from the NEDC with effect from 1 April 1987. The grant figure for the NDC in 1987-88 includes £180,000 for a core programme of activities aimed at regional regeneration.
[2] Inward took over from Norwida with effect from 1 October 1985.
[3] Budget.

Funding for the promotional agencies in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland is a matter for their respective Secretaries of State.

In addition, my Department has spent the following amounts in the past three years on the promotion of the regional development grant and regional selective assistance schemes in England, and on the printing of booklets on the same schemes for use throughout Great Britain:

Year	£
1985-86	77,000
1986-87	104,000
1987-88 to date	71,000

Detailed records are unavailable for earlier years.

THE ARTS

Museums (Portsmouth)

Mr. Martin: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will give details of the sums of money allocated to help (a) the national maritime museum and (b) other museums in Portsmouth, for both maintenance and purchase grants for the most recent convenient period; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: The national maritime museum has been allocated £205,000 for purchases for the collection and £2,510,000 for building and maintenance work in 1988-89.

Central Government support for non-national museums in 1988-89 includes provision for £72 million within the rate support grant to English local authorities for museum capital and current expenditure, and some £4·5 million for the challenge grant schemes for, inter alia, purchases for collections and conservation and related capital work that are administered by the Museums and Galleries Commission and the English Area Museum councils.

Portsmouth is rich in history and is endowed with some fine museums. I had the pleasure of visiting a number of them just over a year ago.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Food (VAT)

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when value added tax on selected foods was first imposed; and for what stated purpose.

Mr. Lilley: Value added tax on selected foods was first imposed from 1 April 1974 by the then Chancellor of the Exchequer, the right hon. Member for Leeds, East (Mr. Healey). The stated purpose was contained in his Budget statement, the relevant extract of which is in the Official Report for 26 March 1974 at columns 308-309.

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which food products are subject to the standard rate of value added tax.

Mr. Lilley: I refer the hon. Gentleman to my reply to the hon. Member for Newcastle-upon-Tyne, North (Mr. Henderson) on 1 February at column 463.

Business Expansion Scheme

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if, pursuant to his answer of 27 January on business expansion scheme investment, he will give the number of investors falling within each of the categories shown in the table.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 2 February 1988]: The table is derived from information collected in the survey of personal incomes. As the notes in "Inland Revenue Statistics" indicate, at the time when the survey was conducted, it is likely that a substantial number of claims for business expansion scheme relief for investments in 1984-85 had yet to be submitted. No alternative source of information on numbers of investors is available centrally. I regret therefore that it is not possible to provide the information requested.

Woodlands (Taxes)

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many taxpayers were granted capital gains tax exemption of growing timber from commercial woodlands in the last year for which figures are available;

(2) how many taxpayers opted to have woodlands taxed under schedule B instead of schedule D in 1986-87; and if he will give for these taxpayers a breakdown showing the percentage paying tax at (i) 60 per cent., (ii) 55 per cent. and 50 per cent., (iii) 45 per cent. and 40 per cent. and (iv) 27 per cent.;

(3) if he will estimate the value of woodland liable to tax under (a) schedule B and (b) schedule D in 1986-87.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 2 February 1988]: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Nurses

Ms. Harman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the percentage change of tax and national insurance as a percentage of average gross earnings, including overtime and other payments, of National Health Service nurses between 1980 and the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 27 January 1988]: Between 1980-81 and 1987-88 the real take-home pay of nurses rose by 22 per cent. In the same period, the proportion of their earnings taken in income tax and NIC is estimated to have increased by 0·7 percentage points from 26·2 per cent. to 26·9 per cent. If the 1978-79 tax régime had been kept in place and simply adjusted for inflation the proportion of earnings taken in tax and NIC in 1987-88 would have been 28·3 per cent.

Earnings figures are derived from the "New Earnings Survey" occupation category, "Registered and enrolled nurses, midwives" and are for those employed full-time on adult rates whose pay was not affected by absence. The nurse is assumed to be contracted out of SERPS.

SCOTLAND

Radioactivity

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number of farms, the number of sheep and the area of land, in acres, under restriction in Scotland as a result of radioactivity from the Chernobyl accident; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: About 66,000 acres with some 63,000 sheep on 69 farms are currently under restriction in Scotland as a result of radioactivity from the Chernobyl accident.

Health Funds

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the present value of projected budget allocation for each health fund for the years 1988-89 and 1989-90, if a National Health Service pay and prices deflator of 2 per cent. above gross domestic product is assumed.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Individual allocations to health boards for recurrent expenditure are made annually and are not projected ahead to later years.

Cheese Manufacturers (Milk Supplies)

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action has been taken, following the meeting between the Minister of State responsible for Agriculture and the hon. Members for East Lothian, for Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley (Mr. Foulkes), for Cunninghame, North (Mr. Wilson) for Western Isles (Mr. Macdonald) on 11 November 1987, to improve the supply of milk to cheese manufacturers in Scotland; and if he will make a further statement on the situation in that industry with particular reference to its ability to supply both existing and potential markets.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: While some commercial elements are still to be resolved, discussions between the Scottish Milk Marketing Board and its counterparts south of the border to secure a supply of milk for manufacturers in Scotland are now at an advanced stage. All recognised cheddar plants in the Scottish board's area are currently producing cheese. Their ability to meet market demand will depend to an extent on the outcome of the inter-board negotiations.

Employment and Training (Accident Statistics)

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each year since 1983 the number of fatalities and accidents involving participants in Government employment and training schemes in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: Figures for fatalities and accidents to participants on employment and training schemes are not available, other than for YTS. For YTS the information is set out in the table.

	Accidents[1]
Period	Fatal	Major	Minor
1983 (1 April to 31 December)	1	11	73
1984	1	33	227
1985	1	28	263
1986 (1 January to 31 March)	—	8	68
1986 (1 April to 31 December)[2]	1	38	143
1987[2]	—	56	265

[1] The figures are compiled on a similar basis to those prepared by the Health and Safety Executive on employed persons, but also include a number of accidents, in particular road traffic accidents during scheme time and accidents in educational establishments, which may not have been reportable to the HSE had the individuals been employed. The fatality in 1984 was a road traffic accident in scheme time.

[2] Up to 31 March 1986 major injuries were classified according to the criteria in the Notification of Accidents and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1980. From 1 April 1986 major injuries have been classified according to the criteria in the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1986. This has had the effect of reclassifying some accidents from the minor to the major category and means that figures before and after 31 March 1986 are not directly comparable.

Respite Care

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what hospitals offer respite care in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Detailed information is not held centrally. Respite care facilities are available in most psychiatric and geriatric hospitals and units and in units for the younger physically handicapped. Such facilities are also available in a number of general hospitals.

Cash Limits

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether the Lord Advocate proposes any changes to the Crown Office and Procurator Fiscal Service cash and running cost limits for 1987-88.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The cash limit on class XX, vote 21, will be reduced by £250,000 from £17,706,000 to £17,456,000 and the running costs limit by £250,000 from £16,892,000 to £16,642,000 subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate. Class XX, vote 22, will be increased by £250,000 from £3,586,000 to £3,836,000.

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he proposes to make any further changes to the cash limits for 1987-88 within his responsibility.

Mr. Rifkind: I shall be making the following changes. As announced on 23 July 1987, at columns 434-36, the cash limit for class XVI, vote 2 (Agricultural Services and Fisheries, Scotland) was increased by £1·400 million, from £69·959 million to £71·359 million to reflect the carry forward of capital underspends allowed under the end year flexibility scheme. Following expected savings on a number of services this cash limit can be reduced by £800,000 to give a revised cash limit of £70·559 million.

This reduction will partly offset an increase of £1·876 million on class XVI, vote 3 (Regional and General Industrial Support, Scotland) from £127·029 million to £128·905 million. The increase results from an expected shortfall in receipts from the European Community of £2·395 million. This is partly offset by decreases of £500,000 in the grant-in-aid to the Scottish Development Agency which expects to realise additional receipts of that amount and £19,000 net from miscellaneous subheads.

The cash limit on class XVI, vote 11 (Administration of Justice, Scotland) will be reduced by £100,000 from £13·121 million to £13·021 million. This reduction, which arises from lower than anticipated expenditure on a computer project, is partly to offset increased expenditure of £550,000 on class XVI, Vote 13 (Legal Proceedings, Scotland) which is not cash limited.

The cash limit for class XVI, vote 14 (Prisons, hospitals and community health service etc., Scotland) will be increased by £12·650 million from £1,721·125 million to £1,733·775 million. Of this increase £7·6 million was announced by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health and Education on 18 December 1987 to allow extra funding for hospitals and community health services. The remainder reflects the net extra cost of implementation in Scotland of the fresh start initiative in the prison service, and is offset by extra receipts, £3·750 million, and from provision not now required on class XVI, vote 12 (Police Grant, Legal Aid and Criminal Injuries Compensation, Scotland) £1·3 million.

I shall also be seeking parliamentary approval to increase class XVI, vote 26 (Privatisation of the electricity supply industry, Scotland) by £310,000 to give a revised cash limit of £680,000. This allows for higher than anticipated advisers' fees in preparation for the privatisation of the South of Scotland Electricity Board and the North of Scotland Hydro Electricity Board. It will be fully met from a cash limit reduction on class XVI, vote 21 (Scottish Office Administration) which will reduce the cash limit from £114·584 million to £114·274 million.

There is a related increase in the running costs limit for the Scottish Office of £6 million from £171·956 million to £177·956 million arising from the implementation of fresh start.

These changes represent a net charge on the Reserve of £9·141 million and will not therefore increase the planned total of public expenditure.

Parliamentary approval for the changes in voted expenditure will be sought through Supplementary Estimates.

ENERGY

Coal Reserves

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has on assessed coal reserves in (a) England as a whole and (b) Northumberland.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is a matter for the British Coal Corporation, and I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member. The Department does not undertake its own assessments of coal reserves vested in British Coal.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Suspension Statistics

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many hon. Members have been suspended from the service of the House in each year since 1974; and if he will break these figures down by party affiliation of the hon. Members concerned.

Mr. Wakeham: The information requested is as follows:

Session	Number of members suspended
1974	None
1974-75	None
1975-76	None
1976-77	None
1977-78	None
1978-79	None
1979-80	None
1980-81	1 Democratic Unionist
	1 Labour (twice)
1981-82	3 Democratic Unionist
	1 Labour
1982-83	None
1983-84	3 Labour
1984-85	None
1985-86	1 Labour
	1 Plaid Cymru
1986-87	None
1987-88[1]	3 Labour
	1 Plaid Cymru

[1] To date.

Guidance to Ministers

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Lord President of the Council whether (a) the Cabinet Office, (b) the Cabinet Secretary or (c) the Prime Minister have ever issued guidance to departmental Ministers as to Government policy on the extent of detail given in ministerial replies to parliamentary questions.

Mr. Wakeham: No such guidance has been issued to Ministers by (a) the Cabinet Office, (b) the Cabinet Secretary or (c) the Prime Minister. The extent of detail given in replies to parliamentary questions is a matter left to the judgment of individual departmental Ministers subject to parliamentary conventions and considerations such as cost.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Apartheid

86. Mr. Caborn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what efforts he has made to provide increased assistance to the victims of apartheid in line with the Commonwealth Okanagan statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: I refer the hon. Member to the answers I gave to my hon. Friends the Member for Birmingham, Hall Green (Mr. Hargreaves) on 1 December 1987, at column 483, and for Orpington (Mr. Stanbrook) on 11 January, at column 12.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Departmental Property (Sussex)

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is the cost of the alterations to the former Foreign and Commonwealth Office radio station at Kings Standing, Sussex for uses as a nuclear shelter;

(2) what use is to be made by the general public of the nuclear shelter currently under construction at Kings Standing in Sussex.

Mr. John Patten: Part of this site is being developed as an administrative centre for use in a possible emergency. It is not the practice to give detailed information about facilities of this kind. The building is not intended for use by the general public.

Criminal Damage (Compensation)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will initiate a scheme to compensate, in a similar way to the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board, those who have suffered damage to property as the result of crime; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: There are no plans to initiate such a scheme.

Juvenile Crime

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many juvenile crimes have been dealt with in Seaham and Peterlee magistrates' courts in the last five years.

Mr. John Patten: The readily available information relates only to indictable offences and is given in the following table:

Defendants aged 10 and under 17 proceeded against for indictable offences in the Easington division[1]

Year	Total proceeded against
1982	303
1983	229
1984	245
1985	238
1986	167

[1] Includes Seaham and Peterlee magistrates' courts. Figures for 1986 are published in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales supplementary volumes" a copy of which is in the Library.

BBC Wales

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last met the Controller of BBC Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: My right hon. Friend has not yet had the opportunity to meet the Controller of BBC Wales.

Cash Limits

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he intends to make any changes to the 1987-88 cash limits within his responsibilities and to his Department's running cost limit.

Mr. Hurd: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, the cash limit on class XI, vote 2, Prisons, England and Wales, will be increased by £38,159,000 which, after the surrender of the increase of £3,233,000 for end year flexibility announced by my right hon. Friend, the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 23 July 1987 at columns 434-8, will increase from £681,137,000 to £716,063,000.

The Home Office running cost limit will also be increased by £22,387,000 from £758,815,000 to £781,202,000.

This additional provision is necessary partly to cover the cost of accommodating prisoners in police cells and the measures taken to cater for the unforeseen surge in the prison population during the first half of the year, and partly to meet extra costs incurred as a result of the delayed and phased implementation of the Fresh Start package of reforms in working practices and management structures in penal establishments.

This additional provision now required for class XI, vote 2, is found partly from money set aside to meet possible additional costs associated with Fresh Start when this cash limit for 1987-88 was agreed, partly from savings on the Central Administration, Miscellaneous and Community Services and Civil Defence, England and Wales, class XI, vote 3 and partly from the reserve. There is therefore no increase to the planned total of public expenditure.

The cash limit for the Central Administration, Miscellaneous and Community Services and Civil Defence, England and Wales, is reduced by £10,500,000 from £408,320,000 to £397,820,000. This reduction includes the surrender of the increase of £2,000,000 for end year flexibility announced 23 July 1987.

Chimpanzees, Baboons and Gorillas

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many chimpanzees, baboons and gorillas were imported into the United Kingdom in each of the last 10 years, showing for each year for what purposes and from which countries of origin.

Mr. Moynihan: The best available statistics are published by the Department and by the European Commission in annual reports for the years 1978 to 1985 under the convention on international trade in endangered species. These and statistics as yet unpublished for 1986 and 1987, indicate the following imports during the last 10 years:

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Crown Prosecution Service (Cash Limit)

Mr. Knox: To ask the Attorney-General whether any changes will be made to the Crown Prosecution Service's cash limit and running costs limit for 1987-88.

The Attorney-General: Yes. The cash limit on class XX, vote 25 (Law Charges, England and Wales) will be reduced by £22,209,000 from £107,009,000 to £84,800,000 and the running costs limit by £21,209,000 from £103,209,000 to £82,000,000. This is because the Department has, so far, failed to recruit sufficient staff to carry out its statutory duties. Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, the non-cash limited class XX, vote 26 (Crown Prosecutions, England and Wales) will be increased by £8,100,000 gross. It will be offset by additional receipts of £4,500,000 increasing the net provision by £3,600,000 from £44,900,000 to £48,500,000. Most of this increase is needed to hire private agents to perform the functions of Crown prosecutors. The balance of £18,609,000 will be surrendered to the reserve.

TRANSPORT

Vehicle Registration

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made with his Department's review of the vehicle registration numbering system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Channon: The consultative group which was asked to undertake the review has now submitted its report. The group examined a wide range of possible systems and conducted a major public consultation exercise. The majority of responses, from a wide variety of interested parties, showed a clear preference for the present system. After considering these responses, the group has unanimously recommended that the present registration numbering system, with the year prefix letter changing each August, should remain in place. having carefully considered the group's report, I have decided to accept its recommendation, and thus to retain the existing system unchanged.

The report is today being published and I am placing copies in the Library of the House.

Cash Limits

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what changes are proposed to the 1987-88 cash limit on his Department's votes and to his Department's running costs limit.

Mr. Channon: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, the cash limit for class VIII vote 4 is to be increased by £1,477,000 from £116,179,000 to £117,656,000. The cash limit for class VIII vote 2 is to be reduced by £4,806,000 from £192,400,000 to £187,594,000 to take account of transfers of:—

(a) £2,500,000 to the non-cash limited class VIII vote 3 as a partial offset to the increased cost of port severances in the spring Supplementary Estimate on that vote, which is also subject to parliamentary approval;

(b) £1,477,000 to class VIII vote 4 as an offset to the spring Supplementary Estimate on that vote; and

(c) £829,000 to class VIII vote 5 as a partial offset to increased public expenditure on rural bus grants on that vote.

The balance of the spring Supplementary Estimate on class VIII vote 3 will be charged to the reserve and the balance of the increased requirement for rural bus grants will be offset by savings on class VIII vote 5, in neither case adding to the planning total of public expenditure.

The running costs limit of the Department of Transport has been reduced by £80,000 from £272,850,000 to £272,770,000. This £80,000 will be transferred to the running costs limit of the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland to cover the cost of additional work which it is undertaking as the agent of the Department of Transport on the licensing and registration of vehicles in Northern Ireland.

Pension Schemes (Government Contributions)

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to reduce the Government's contribution under the Transport Act 1980 to the British Rail pension scheme or to the National Freight Corporation pension scheme.

Mr. David Mitchell: I have no immediate plans to reduce these pension contributions. But the amounts involved are substantial (some £90 million a year to railway pension schemes, and £6 million to NFC schemes), so that the necessity for them must be kept under review. I am in touch with the chairman of British Rail about this and would, of course, also consult the chairman of the NFC before deciding on any action which would affect the contribution to NFC schemes.

Any changes in the existing arrangements for Exchequer funding of BR or NFC pensions would require primary legislation, and would not affect any pension rights already earned.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Equal Opportunities

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he plans to upgrade the equal opportunities officer post in his Department to grade 7, in line with civil service guidance.

Mrs. Rumbold: The grading of the equal opportunity officer's post will be considered in the light of a regular staffing review of the Department's personnel division now taking place.

Derbyshire (Capital Spending)

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was capital spending on education in Derbyshire for each parliamentary constituency in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Dunn: Data relating to individual constituencies are not available. Excluding expenditure on voluntary aided schools, gross capital expenditure on education in Derbyshire for the years in question was as follows:

1986-87	9,647,731
1985-86	9,311,397

1984-85	11,109,215
1983-84	9,367,044
1982-83	10,442,459
1981-82	10,062,010
1980-81	9,069,225
1979-80	6,913,713
1978-79	6,686,695
1977-78	7,138,386

Source: Department of Environment Form CO1.

Expenditure on voluntary aided schools in 1986-87 and 1985-86 was £186,580 and £310,314 respectively. Data in relation to earlier years could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Degree Courses

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proportion of children whose father's occupation is given as being in social class III, IV and V were university or polytechnic students undertaking degree courses in 1986; and what were the comparable figures in 1958, 1961, 1971 and 1981.

Mr. Jackson: It is estimated the number of university entrants from social classes IIIm, IV and V as a percentage of the relevant working class population was 3 per cent. in each of the years 1986, 1981 and 1971; 2 per cent. in 1961 and 1 per cent. in 1955. Information for 1958 is not available.

Similar information is not collected by the polytechnic central admissions system, but a sample survey of young people attempting examinations qualifying them for HE entry in 1985 indicated that about 7 per cent. of the relevant working class population entered some form of HE including sub-degree courses. A sample survey of 21-year-olds in 1962 indicated the equivalent percentage then was 3 per cent.

Cash Limits

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give details of any revised cash limits for his Department's votes in 1987-88.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimates where appropriate the following cash limit changes have been made:

£'000

Class	Vote	Description of expenditure	Current cash limit	Revision	Revised cash limit
XII	3	Universities etc.	1,708,028	−1,410	1,706,618
XII	4	Central administration	58,309	+450	58,759
XII	5	Agricultural and Food Research Council	54,427	+512	54,939
XII	7	Natural Environment Research Council	72,070	+1,250	73,320
XII	8	Science and Engineering Research Council	357,752	−290	357,462

The increase on vote 4 is needed to cover the running costs of extra staff required to implement the Government's education reforms. A reduction in expenditure on staff seconded to outside bodies means that the associated gross running costs limit is unchanged, but the consequent reduction in receipts for seconded out salaries results in the need for an increase in net provision.

The increase on vote 5 is required to reimburse the Agricultural and Food Research Council for costs incurred by the council in 1987-88 as a result of the sale of the National Seed Development Organisation and the assets of the Plant Breeding Institute.

The increase on vote 7 is to reinforce the work of the British Antarctic Survey.

The increases on votes 4 and 7 are offset by reductions on votes 3 and 8. Of the increase in vote 5, £200,000 will be met from unallocated expenditure provision within the science budget with the remainder charged to the reserve. These changes will not therefore add to the planned total public expenditure.

LINK Programme

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement about progress on the LINK programme.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: In announcing the LINK initiative, my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister indicated the Government's intention to boost industrially relevant research and development, and to make scientists and the business community more aware of the potential of science and technology for commercial exploitation. LINK will eventually range over the whole spectrum of science based technology.

Today, with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, I have announced the first five LINK programme areas. These are — molecular electronics, advanced semiconductor materials, industrial measurement systems, eukaryotic genetic engineering, and nanotechnology. Each of these programmes is in a key area of strategic research. The first five programmes will account for some £83 million. The total expenditure on LINK by Government and industry is expected to be at least £420 million over the next five years; Government will meet up to half of the cost of each programme.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

South Africa (Exports)

87. Mr. Cunliffe: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy on the exportation of plastic film to South Africa, in the light of United Nations arms embargo.

Mr. Alan Clark: The export of plastic film to South Africa is not in breach of the United Nations arms embargo or any of our international commitments.

Apartheid

88. Mr. Turner: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what are the implications of Her Majesty's Government's support for the forthcoming United Kingdom South Africa Trade Association trade mission for his policy on apartheid; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: Government policy towards South Africa remains unchanged. Within the limits of our international obligations, the full range of DTI services is available to the United Kingdom South Africa Trade Association trade mission to South Africa.

Regional Development

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list by name and location the amount of regional development grant and regional selective assistance grant moneys made available for private nursing homes in Tyne and Wear, Northumberland, Durham and Cleveland in each of the last two years.

Mr. Atkins: Private nursing homes do not qualify for regional development grant. There were three offers of regional selective assistance in Tyne and Wear, Northumberland, Durham and Cleveland in the two years ended 31 December 1987. Details are as follows:

Name and location	Amount £
Mr. and Mrs. P. Smith, Whitley Bay	10,000
Redezeus, Sunderland	25,000
John Lisle, Whitley Bay	20,000

British Steel

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he last met the chairman of British Steel; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Atkins: I last met Sir Robert Scholey on 16 December when we discussed a number of matters relating to the corporation and its prospects.

Regional Development Grants

Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list all those companies which have received regional development grants for the years 1979 to 1987, inclusive; and (a) how much each company received and (b) for what purpose the grant was provided.

Mr. Atkins: The information requested is only available at disproportionate cost. However, details of grant recipients above certain thresholds are published quarterly in "British Business". The relevant publication dates are given in the table.

Pest Control Services (Report)

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when the report of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission on the supply of pest control services is to be published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: The commission found that a monopoly situation existed in favour of the Rentokil Group plc and its subsidiary operating company, Rentokil Ltd., which supplied over 60 per cent. of the United Kingdom market for pest control services. They concluded that Rentokil had established a dominant position in the market which enabled it to fix its prices largely unconstrained by competition. Many customers were charged higher prices than they would be in conditions of normal competition. There was an unduly limited choice of suppliers, particularly for customers who required a nationwide service.

Where Rentokil does encounter competition, the commission noted that its high profitability — as illustrated by its 28 per cent. return on turnover and its 92 per cent. return on capital employed—had enabled it to cut its prices selectively, thus inhibiting the development of competition. The commission found that Rentokil's differential pricing practices operated against the public interest.

As a remedy against the charging of high prices, the commission has proposed that Rentokil should provide more information in written statements to its customers about the way its charges have been calculated.

The commission pointed out that some of Rentokil's past acquisitions of smaller pest control companies had been designed to reduce competition or frustrate the expansion of potentially larger companies. Rentokil's stated policy was now to expand by organic growth of its existing business rather than through further acquisitions. Nevertheless, the commission referred to the Director General of Fair Trading's duty under the Fair Trading Act 1973 to keep himself informed about the creation of merger situations and suggested that this task would be facilitated if Rentokil gave an undertaking to notify him of any proposed acquisitions of other pest control companies.

Where an MMC report finds that aspects of a monopoly operate against the public interest, the Fair Trading Act gives me powers to take appropriate action to remedy the adverse effects. These powers include a requirement to divest assets and prohibition of price distrimination. Although this report did not specifically canvass these possibilities, I thought it right to consider these and other options. However, I accept the MMC's view that in the circumstances of this case, the most appropriate remedy is that Rentokil should provide the customer with more information.

I am consequently asking the Director General of Fair Trading to hold discussions with Rentokil with a view to obtaining appropriate undertakings; that Rentokil should provide more information about its charges to customers and that the company will notify him of any proposal to acquire further pest control companies.

Cash Limits

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether any changes will be made to his Department's cash limits and running cost limit for 1987-88.

Mr. Butcher: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimates, the cash limit for Class V, Vote 2 will be reduced by £7,498,000 to £456,751,000 to offset the increased provision on Class V, Vote 1. The cash limit for Class V, Vote 3 will be reduced by £2,000,000 to £148,085,000 since £2,000,000 of the planned expenditure on accommodation works for the DTI has been met from PSA expenditure on Class XX, Vote 19. The Department's running cost limit has been reduced by £165,000 to £275,207,000 to reflect the reclassification of £139,000 of Industrial Research Establishment expenditure and to allow an increase of £26,000 in the Government Actuary's Department's running costs to cover additional work on behalf of my Department's insurance division. No net increase to public expenditure results from these changes.

Chile (Ministerial Visit)

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if, pursuant to his answer of 30 November 1987, Official Report, column 380, he will list the representatives of the Chilean opposition whom the Minister of State, the hon. Member for Plymouth, Sutton (Mr. Clark), met during his trip to Chile, indicating whether the meetings were separate or in a group, and giving the venue for each.

Mr. Alan Clark [holding answer 2 February 1988]: I met the following in the British embassy residence. I had discussions with them individually and we then assembled for a private dinner hosted by His Excellency Mr. Alan White.

Sr. Patricio Phillips, President, National Party.
Sr. Juan Hamilton, Vice-President, Christian Democrat Party.
Sr. Heraldo Munoz, University of Chile.
Sr. Rene Abeliuk, Former President, Social Democratic Party.
Sr. German Molina, Chilean Human Rights Commission, Member, Izquierda Cristiana Party.
Sr. Armando Jaramillo, President, Republican Party.
Sr. Ricardo Claro, University of Chile.
Sr. Jovino Novoa Vasquez, Member, Renovacion Nacional Party.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

AIDS

7. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further plans he has to contribute to the international effort to combat the spread of AIDS.

Mr. Eggar: We will continue to play a full and active part in international co-operative efforts.

On 26-28 January, we hosted in London a world summit of Ministers of Health on programmes for AIDS prevention. This conference, jointly organised with the World Health Organisation, was attended by representatives of 149 countries of whom over three quarters were Ministers. A London declaration on AIDS prevention was adopted by consensus; this should help to give a significant impetus to the development of public education and information programmes as the single most important component — in the absence of vaccine or cure — of national AIDS programmes.

As my right hon. Friend Secretary of State for Social Services announced on 26 January, we will, subject to parliamentary approval, be contributing a further £4·5 million from the overseas aid programme to the World Health Organisation's global programme on AIDS in 1988.

NATO-Warsaw Pact (Force Balances)

14. Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the progress being made in talks on the present imbalance in conventional forces between NATO and the Warsaw pact.

Mr. Mellor: The MBFR talks, which deal with a limited area of central Europe, have made no real progress for the last 15 years. The main reason has been the Warsaw pact's failure to provide adequate data on its forces or to accept proper verification. Informal discussions are now under way in Vienna with a view to setting up a new negotiating forum within the framework of the CSCE process. This would deal with the whole of Europe from the Atlantic to the Urals. Progress has so far been encouraging. We hope that substantive talks can begin later this year.

Drug Running

15. Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what his Department is doing to counter the international threat from drug runners.

Mr. Eggar: We are taking a leading role both bilaterally and in multilateral organisations. We have played an active part in United Nations activities in this field and within the Council of Europe. We make substantial contributions to international assistance programmes and are working to conclude reciprocal agreements for the tracing, seizing and confiscation of traffickers' assets.

65. Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether Her Majesty's Government are receiving co-operation from the Government of Thailand in tackling the question of drug running.

Mr. Eggar: There are frequent exchanges between the drug enforcement bodies of the Royal Thai Government and their British counterparts. I will be visiting Thailand next week with a view to establishing areas for further co-operation on drugs matters.

71. Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether Her Majesty's Government is receiving co-operation from the Government of Pakistan on tackling the question of drug running.

Mr. Eggar: There are regular exchanges between the Pakistan enforcement bodies and the corresponding British authorities. When I visit Pakistan later this week I will be looking to see if this valuable co-operation can be improved further.

Cyprus

16. Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current situation in Cyprus.

Mrs. Chalker: For the last few months, attention in Cyprus has been focused on the presidential election which is to take place on 14 February. Once the election is over, we believe the United Nations Secretary-General's new permanent special representative will begin fresh efforts to find a way forward.

45. Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans to make an official visit to Cyprus; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend has no present plans to visit Cyprus.

Middle East

17. Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what response he has made to the statement made by the Palestine Liberation Organisation leader Yasser Arafat in January that the Palestine Liberation Organisation would recognise Israel in exchange for Israeli and United States' agreement to participate in an international peace conference on the middle east.

Mr. Mellor: None. The Palestine Liberation Organisation cannot expect to play a role at an international peace conference until it unambiguously renounces violence, accepts United Nations Security Council resolutions 242 and 338, and acknowledges Israel's right to a secure existence.

25. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he intends to discuss middle east problems with his opposite number in the European Economic Community member states; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend expects to discuss middle eastern questions with his European colleagues at their next meeting on 8 February.

33. Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will take steps to promote an international conference to promote peace in the middle east.

Mr. Mellor: We shall continue to work for an international conference under United Nations auspices as the framework for negotiations between the parties directly concerned.

Sharpeville Six

18. Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the South African Government to secure the grant of clemency in relation to the Sharpeville Six.

73. Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what instructions he has given to the British embassy in South Africa with regard to securing a grant of clemency in relation to the Sharpeville Six; and if he will make a statement.

75. Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action Her Majesty's Government have taken towards securing a grant of clemency in relation to the Sharpeville Six.

Mrs. Chalker: In February 1986, Her Majesty's ambassador expressed to the South African Government our concern at the death sentences and at allegations that some of the accused had been tortured. After their appeals had been dismissed last December, the members of the European Community made a collective appeal for clemency. We also supported a statement issued on behalf of the United Nations Security Council. We have since reiterated our concern direct to the South African Government.

23. Mr. Buchan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has contacted the South African ambassador over the issue of the granting of clemency in relation to the Sharpeville Six; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: In February 1986, Her Majesty's ambassador expressed to the South African Government our concern at the death sentences and at allegations that some of the accused had been tortured. After their appeals had been dismissed last December, the German ambassador made an appeal for clemency on behalf of the European Community. We also supported a statement issued on behalf of the United Nations Security Council urging the South African Government to commute the death sentences on the six. We have since reiterated our concern direct to the South African Government.

Chinese Foreign Minister

19. Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next plans to meet the Chinese Foreign Minister.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: As I said in the House on 20 January, I look forward to welcoming Mr. Wu Xuegian on an official visit to Britain in the spring.

EC (Foreign Policy)

20. Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he is satisfied with the progress being made towards achieving co-operation in foreign policy between European Community members.

Mrs. Chalker: Yes. The ability to speak and act together with the Twelve is a significant help in achieving British objectives. The Twelve have issued declarations on a wide range of major international issues as they have arisen. At the European Council in December 1987 they welcomed the INF agreement between the United States and Soviet Union; called on the Soviet Union to withdraw all its troops from Afghanistan by a date in 1988; reiterated their support for an international conference on the middle east; expressed their concern at the situation in the occupied territories; and called for an end to the Iran-Iraq conflict and a follow-up resolution to enforce implementation of Security Council resolution 598.

51. Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next proposes to have discussions with his European Community partners concerning the developments of common European foreign policies.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend will be meeting his colleagues from the Twelve to discuss European political co-operation matters on 8 February.

Nigeria

21. Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on relations between the Federal Government of Nigeria and Her Majesty's Government, in the light of the recent visit to Nigeria by the Prime Minister.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister's visit to Nigeria demonstrated the close and cordial relations we enjoy with a fellow Commonwealth member.

Mr. Govan Mbeki

22. Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the South African Government about the restrictions being placed upon Mr. Govan Mbeki by the South African police and the security services.

Mrs. Chalker: We regret the South African Government's decision to place restrictions on Mr. Mbeki and have made our views known to them.

African National Congress

24. Mr. Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last made official contact with representatives of the African National Congress.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend met the president of the African National Congress, Mr. Oliver Tambo, on 20 September 1986 when he was president of the Foreign Affairs Council of the European Community.

Afghanistan

26. Mr. Couchman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has about Soviet intentions towards withdrawing from Afghanistan.

78. Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has about the Soviet Union's intentions with regard to a total withdrawal of their military forces from Afghanistan.

Mr. Eggar: We welcome the Soviet Union's publicity expressed wish to withdraw its troops from Afghanistan. We look to it to do so this year.

46. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans to meet his counterpart in the Afghanistan Government; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: No.

Austria

27. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on United Kingdom relations with Austria.

Mrs. Chalker: Relations between the United Kingdom and Austria are friendly and reflect the common interests of our Governments and peoples.

Pakistan

28. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has about the extent of the Afghan refugee burden on Pakistan.

Mr. Eggar: There are some 3 million Afghan refugees in Pakistan. We admire Pakistan's generosity in giving them refuge. We have ourselves provided about £50 million in assistance to these refugees since 1980.

Central America (Peace Plan)

29. Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to congratulate the President of Nicaragua on his compliance with the Arias central American peace plan, and enjoin all parties to the conflict in Nicaragua, including the United States of America, similarly to comply.

Mr. Eggar: The central American Presidents decided on 15-16 January that they were not entirely satisfied that the peace agreement had been fully complied with. Statements issued by the Twelve members of the European Community on 15 and 26 January urged all the central American countries to fulfil their outstanding obligations without delay and requested all parties indirectly involved to contribute to the efforts to achieve peace.

63. Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with his counterparts in central America about the progress of the Arias peace plan; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Her Majesty's ambassadors in the region maintain close contact with the Governments of Central America about the peace plan. We shall have the opportunity to discuss it with central American Foreign Ministers during the European Community/Central America/Contadora meeting in Hamburg on 29 February to 1 March. The United Kingdom will take an active part in these discussions.

72. Mr. MacDonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has made any offer of assistance to President Arias of Costa Rica in his efforts to bring peace to central America.

Mr. Eggar: We and our European Community partners have strongly supported his efforts to bring peace and strengthen democracy in the region. As recently as 26 January a statement by the Twelve reaffirmed our readiness to assist the peace process to the best of our ability. The doubling of European Community aid commitments to the region underlines our support.

Moscow

80. Sir George Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has any plans to pay an official visit to Moscow.

Mr. Mellor: My right hon. and learned Friend will be visiting the Soviet Union from 14 to 17 February at the invitation of the Soviet Minister for Foreign Affairs, Mr. Eduard Shevardnadze. He expects to discuss a broad range of issues, including bilateral relations, arms control, regional questions and human rights.

South Africa

31. Mr. Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether any ministerial visits are planned to South Africa over the coming year.

Mrs. Chalker: No ministerial visits to South Africa are at present planned.

37. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will name those black moderate leaders within South Africa, or their representatives, whom he has met since June 1983 and the places and dates of his meetings.

Mrs. Chalker: Since June 1983 my right hon. and learned Friend has met many representatives of black opinion in South Africa including Chief Buthelezi, Archbishop Tutu, Chief Mabuza, members of the House of Delegates and members of the National African Federated Chamber of Commerce. In the last 18 months, I have met among others, Dr. Phatudi, Archbishop Tutu, Mr. Gumede and Dr. Boesak.

67. Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the South African Government about the recent curbs on legal trade union activity.

Mrs. Chalker: We have welcomed the legalisation of black trades unions in South Africa. We continue to follow their development with interest. We have made repeated representations to the South African Government about the detention without charge of trades unionists and others.

Gaza Strip

32. Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans to pay an official visit to the Gaza strip.

Mr. Mellor: My right hon. and learned Friend has no present plans to visit the Gaza strip.

EC (Political Development)

34. Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on political development on the EEC in 1988 to date.

Mrs. Chalker: Negotiations have concentrated on the future financing of the Community. We have made it clear that effective and binding control over Community spending is essential to any agreement.

EC (Internal Market)

35. Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will raise at the next Foreign Affairs Council the progress being made towards achieving an internal market in the European Community by 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend and I regularly discuss progress towards completing the single European market with EC Foreign Ministers. Detailed discussions on the single market are pursued in the internal market and other specialist councils. Over 100 measures towards that goal have been agreed in the past 18 months, 48 of them during the United Kingdom presidency.

Gulf (Protection of Shipping)

36. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received concerning the protection of shipping in the Gulf area.

Mr. Mellor: We are in close and frequent contact with a wide range of Governments, shipping organisations and unions about the protection of shipping in the Gulf. We remain committed to the principle of freedom of navigation, and will continue to do everything possible to assist British merchant shipping in the region.

Falkland Islands Council

38. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next intends to meet representatives of the Falkland Islands Council; and what matters he intends to discuss.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend has no current plans to meet Falkland Islands councillors.

Chemical Weapons

39. Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the progress being made towards achieving a verifiable worldwide ban on chemical weapons.

Mr. Mellor: Encouraging progress was made last year in the chemical weapons negotiations in Geneva. In July the United Kingdom tabled a paper on practical steps needed to ensure the effective implementation of a ban. However, complex issues remain to be dealt with, particularly on verification and arrangements for an international inspectorate, if we are to achieve an effective convention.

Acid Rain

40. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received from foreign Governments concerning the pollution of other European countries by acid rain, resulting from pollution emanating from Britain.

Mr. Eggar: We maintain close contact at all levels with a number of countries, mainly in Europe, on a range of pollution issues including acid rain.

UNESCO

41. Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government will now reconsider British membership of UNESCO.

Mr. Eggar: As we made clear when we withdrew from UNESCO, we would need to see clear evidence that fundamental and far-reaching reform had been achieved in the organisation before we could reconsider our position on membership. We welcome the appointment of a new director-general; but our fundamental concerns remain UNESCO's programmes and administration. We shall follow developments in UNESCO closely, in order to see how the reform process proceeds and will keep an open mind.

44. Sir Jim Spicer: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representation he has received about the Government's policy towards contacts with UNESCO.

Mr. Eggar: We have received no formal representations.

Angola

42. Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will have discussions with the Angolan Government about how Britain could best assist the People's Republic of Angola, in the light of the South African Government's failure to comply with United Nations Security Council Resolution 602; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: We are in regular contact with the Government of Angola through normal diplomatic channels.

56. Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make representations to the South African Government about the withdrawal of its troops from the territory of the People's Republic of Angola; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: We support United Nations Security Council resolutions 602 of 25 November and 606 of 23 December, both of which called for the immediate withdrawal of South African troops from Angola. We continue to urge this upon the South African Government.

Namibia

43. Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he has taken to secure South Africa's compliance with United Nations Security Council Resolution 601 on Namibia, and the early implementation of United Nations Security Council Resolution 435; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: We have taken every opportunity, both publicly and in private, to urge on the South African Government the pressing need for them to withdraw from Namibia and allow the early implementation of Security Council resolution 435.

76. Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last conveyed to the South African Government Her Majesty's Government's demand for South African withdrawal from Namibia; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: We take every opportunity, both publicly and in private, to urge on the South African Government the pressing need for them to withdraw from Namibia and allow free and fair elections in accordance with the United Nations plan for Namibian independence.

Anglo-Japanese Relations

47. Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current state of Anglo-Japanese relations.

Mr. Eggar: Relations are good and friendly. During my right hon. and learned Friend's recent visit to Japan he and Foreign Minister Uno reaffirmed both Governments' commitment to building and strengthening our mutually beneficial partnership.

Hong Kong

48. Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met the Governor of Hong Kong and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend last met the Governor on 26 October last year. Their discussions reviewed the whole range of current issues involving Hong Kong. Such meetings play an important part in our close and regular consultations with Hong Kong.

57. Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received about the introduction of greater democracy in Hong Kong; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend has received representations on this subject from a variety of sources in Hong Kong and the United Kingdom, covering a range of opinions. These have been carefully considered and will be taken fully into account in the decisions which will be announced in the Hong Kong Government's White Paper in February.

British Citizens (Overseas Assistance)

49. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action the Government are taking to ensure that adequate help is given to British citizens abroad in genuine distress.

Mr. Eggar: Her Majesty's consular staff overseas make every effort to give prompt, sympathetic and effective advice and whatever help they properly can to distressed British nationals seeking assistance.

Demand for consular services continues to rise sharply with nearly 27 million people travelling abroad from the United Kingdom in 1987 compared with only 5·5 million 20 years ago. Both procedures and staffing are kept under constant review to ensure the optimum use of available resources.

The aim of our public education activities, including the wide distribution of the consular leaflet "Get It Right Before You Go", is to explain what consuls can and cannot do and to encourage self-help, wherever possible, so as to enable consular staff to concentrate on cases of genuine distress.

European Parliament (Electoral System)

50. Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will report on the progress which has been made towards the establishment of a uniform electoral system for the European Parliament in time for the 1989 elections.

Mrs. Chalker: Discussion has so far produced no agreement among the member states of the European Community on a uniform electoral procedure.

PLO

52. Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will hold an official meeting with the London representative of the Palestine Liberation Organisation to discuss the recent development of Palestine Liberation Organisation policy on the recognition of Israel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: No.

Common Agricultural Policy

53. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the Government will take steps to ensure that there is a thorough reform of the common agricultural policy before any further money is provided for the European Community.

Mrs. Chalker: I have nothing to add to the statement made by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on Tuesday 8 December, at column 167, following the European Council.

Ministerial Visits (Central America)

54. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when was the last visit by a Minister of Her Majesty's Government to (a) Costa Rica, (b) El Salvador, (c) Guatemala, (d) Honduras and (e) Nicaragua.

Mr. Eggar: Baroness Young the then Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, visited Costa Rica in January 1986 and Guatemala in February 1987. There have been no ministerial visits to Honduras, El Salvador or Nicaragua in recent years.

Gulf (UN Naval Command)

55. Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he is yet in a position to report on progress towards a United Nations naval command in the Gulf

Mr. Mellor: The Soviet Union has put forward a number of proposals relating to the establishment of a United Nations naval force for the Gulf. We continue to believe that such a force would be impractical in current circumstances.

Japan

58. Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he discussed the balance of trade between the United Kingdom and Japan during his recent visit to Japan; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend's talks with Foreign Minister Uno, with International Trade and Industry Minister Mr. Tamura, and with leading representatives of Japanese industry included discussion of trade. He called for Japanese efforts to increase domestic demand to open her markets. We note the United Kingdom exports to Japan rose 30 per cent. in the first 11 months of 1987 and are now worth over £1,500 million per annum.

Nelson Mandela

59. Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last made representations to the South African Government for the release of Mr. Nelson Mandela and other imprisoned leaders of the African National Congress.

Mrs. Chalker: With the Commonwealth and our European partners we have long called for the unconditional release of Mr. Nelson Mandela and other political prisoners. The issue was last raised with the South African Government in January.

United States Ambassador

60. Mr. Lamond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met the ambassador of the United States of America; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend regularly meets the United States ambassador to discuss a wide range of bilateral and international topics and values this frank and constructive dialogue. They last met on 19 January.

Third World Debt

61. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will meet the other Foreign Ministers of the EEC to discuss Third world debt; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend meets his counterparts from the European Community and other leading industrialised countries regularly. Debt is often discussed.

Kampuchea

64. Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he intends to review Her Majesty's Government's current policy on Kampuchea.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to the statement I made during the Adjournment debate on Cambodia on 21 January, at column 1224.

French Government (Visa Requirements)

66. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made in response to the imposition of visa requirements by the French Government in the light of the problems which have arisen in the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe.

Mrs. Chalker: None.

Spain and Portugal

68. Mr. Curry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what ministerial contacts there have been recently with Spain and Portugal on European affairs.

Mrs. Chalker: I visited Madrid and Lisbon from 17 to 19 January for talks with Spanish and Portuguese Ministers.

SADCC Countries

Mr. Wells: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement on the progress of the policy he is pursuing with SADCC countries.

Mrs. Chalker: Britain has long been involved in working to strengthen the economies of SADCC states, to reduce their economic dependence on South Africa and, through the SADCC organisation, to restore the natural pattern of transport in the region by rehabilitation of regional routes through Mozambique. From 1980 to 1986 Britain gave £819 million in bilateral aid to SADCC states.

My hon. Friend the Minister for Overseas Development visited Tanzania from 26 to 30 January to attend SADCC's annual meeting in Arusha (28-29 January) and for bilateral discussions. During his visits my hon. Friend announced a further £10 million of British aid for the SADCC organisation's projects, taking our total pledges to SADCC to £45 million. He also announced £20 million additional programme aid for Tanzania. Our aid is highly valued by SADCC states. Steady progress is now being made in the rehabilitation of the regional transport routes.

Diplomats (Parking Fines)

70. Sir Anthony Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether Her Majesty's Government have any plans to seek to reduce further the number of unpaid parking fines by diplomats in London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: We seek continually to reduce the number of unpaid parking fines by diplomats in London through the firm application of the policy described in its White Paper on diplomatic immunities and privileges (Cmnd. 9497). The figures for unpaid fines for the full year of 1987 are not yet available, but will be published as soon as possible. We expect that they will show a further decrease on those for 1986.

Middle East (Killings)

74. Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to instruct Her Majesty's consulate in Jerusalem to forward Her Majesty's Government's condolences to the families of those shot dead by the Israeli security services during the recent disturbances in the occupied territories; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: No. We sympathise with all those—Palestinians and Israelis—who have suffered as a result of the recent violence.

Chile

77. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met the Chilean ambassador to discuss relations with Chile.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend last met the Chilean ambassador on 1 December 1987 to discuss bilateral relations, including the question of human rights.

Syria (Nerve Gas)

79. Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the implications for the middle east peace process of allegations by the Government of Israel that Syria is developing nerve gas production facilities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The development of chemical weapons by any state in the region cannot but further complicate an already difficult and dangerous situation. We are working for a global ban on chemical weapons as the only practical way to relieve mankind of this terrible threat overshadowing his future.

Nicaragua

80. Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans to expand United Kingdom diplomatic representation in Nicaragua.

Mr. Eggar: Yes. A third United Kingdom-based diplomatic service officer is shortly to be posted to Managua as proconsul.

African National Congress Office, Bulawayo (Attack)

81. Miss Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the South African Government about the infringement of Zimbabwean sovereignty during the attack by the South African armed forces on the African National Congress office in Bulawayo in January.

Mrs. Chalker: So far as we know, the Zimbabwe Government have not claimed that the South African armed forces were involved in the attack. However, we are opposed to cross-border violations in either direction however and wherever they occur. We have consistently urged the South African Government to respect the sovereignty and territorial integrity of their neighbours.

South Lebanon (Bombing Raids)

82. Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further representations he has made to the Israeli Government about the retaliatory bombing raids by the Israeli air force against civilian targets in South Lebanon; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The Israeli Government are well aware that we condemn such raids.

Occupied Territories (Deportation)

83. Mr. McKelvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he proposes to make to the Israeli Government about the breach of international law involved in the deportation of Palestinians from the occupied territories to the Lebanon.

Mr. Mellor: We have already made representations to the Israelis bilaterally and together with our partners in the Twelve. We voted for United Nations Security Council resolutions 607 and 608 which called on Israel to refrain from deporting Palestinian civilians and to ensure the safe return of those already deported.

Argentina

84. Mr. Haynes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many British citizens are currently resident in Argentina.

Mr. Eggar: In the period since 1982, 3,741 Argentine residents entitled to British nationality have registered with the British interests section in Buenos Aires. Of these, 647 males over 18 are recorded as holding exclusively British nationality. The remainder are not categorised as holding single or dual nationality.

Gibraltar

85. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the United Kingdom-Spanish agreement on Gibraltar, dated 2 December 1987, will come into operation.

Mrs. Chalker: The first step is for the Gibraltar House of Assembly to adopt the necessary amendments to current Gibraltar customs and immigration legislation. Once this has been done, the agreement will come into operation not later than one year after the United Kingdom notifies Spain of the House of Assembly's decision. During this period, the new Spanish terminal will be built.

Bophuthatswana

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what dates since 1 January 1983, British Embassy staff in South Africa have visited Bophuthatswana; with whom discussions or consultations were held; and what was the purpose of these visits.

Mrs. Chalker: Staff at Her Majesty's embassy in South Africa pay regular visits to Bophuthatswana. Full details of the information requested are not available.

Drug Trafficking (Caribbean)

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he intends to take any action to discourage drug trafficking on British dependent territories in the Caribbean.

Mr. Eggar: We are currently implementing a number of recommendations arising out of our 1986 survey to improve the defences of the dependent territories against drug-trafficking. These have included assistance with training and advice, and provision of detection and surveillance equipment, including an aircraft and police launch. It is part of our continuing programme to combat drug-trafficking in the Caribbean as a whole, in co-operation with regional Governments and the Government of the United States.

British Council

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received from British arts companies touring abroad concerning the effect on their activities of the levels of funding for the British Council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: None. The British Council has maintained a suitable level of arts promotion activity overseas.

Northern Ireland (Administration of Justice)

Mr. McCusker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has asked the Government of the Irish Republic to list the precise objections held by them to the administration of justice in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: I have been asked to reply.

The Government of the Republic of Ireland have made known to us their concerns about the present arrangements for the administration of justice in Northern Ireland. They have put forward a number of proposals for change which we have considered as part of our continuing commitment to enhancing public confidence in the administration of justice in Northern Ireland.

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people are employed in the confectionery, cake and biscuit industries in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Lee: In September 1987, the latest date for which figures are available, there were 129,000 employees in employment in the bread, biscuits and flour confectionery industries in Great Britain. The figure is unadjusted for the effects of seasonal variations. Estimates for the United Kingdom are not available.

Dock Labour Scheme

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Pembroke of 14 January, Official Report, columns 362-63, why the administrative costs of individual local dock labour scheme boards are not made public.

Mr. Nicholls: I regret that the information is not held centrally and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Restart Interviews

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will place in the Library a copy of the specimem answers to be used as guidelines by his Departments staff when interviewing claimants for the restart interview.

Mr. Lee: No. Other than as a training aid, no such specimen answers have been issued. Staff are instructed to approach the interview on the basis that clients have individual needs and treat them accordingly.

WALES

NHS Expenditure

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the expenditure per head in real terms in Wales on the National Health Service in 1980 and in 1986.

Mr. Grist: Expenditure per head at 1986-87 prices in 1980-81 was £299·52 and in 1986-87 £350·69.

BBC Wales

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he last met the controller of BBC Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: I met him on 2 February on the train from Swansea somewhere between Slough and Paddington.

Hospital Beds

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the number of National Health Service beds in 1979 and in 1986, in Wales and in each Welsh county.

Mr. Grist: The information is given in the following table:

District Health Authority	Average daily available NHS beds during:
	1979	1986
Clwyd	3,053	2,769
East Dyfed	2,098	1,758

Housing Grants

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what his estimate is of the number of outstanding applications for (a) general and repair grants, (b) standard grants and (c) improvement grants for each district authority; and how many of these grants in each category and district have been outstanding for (i) four years, (ii) three years, (iii) two years, (iv) one year and (v) under one year.

Mr. Grist: The numbers of renovation grant applications outstanding at September 1987 and the estimated numbers outstanding since April 1986 or earlier are shown in the following tables. Information is not collected regularly on the period for which grants have been outstanding.

ENVIRONMENT

Housing Waiting Lists

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many households were recorded on local authority housing waiting lists at a convenient date in each of the last five years in (a) Vale Royal and (b) Chester.

Mrs. Roe: The numbers of households on waiting lists at April, and the changes in the previous 12 months, appear in columns B51 and B53, respectively, of the 1986 and 1987 Housing Investment Programme "All items prints", which are available in the Library. Information for earlier years is not available centrally.

The figures reported by Chester district council in their 1986 return included transfer list cases; excluding these cases, the numbers on the waiting list in 1985 and 1986 were, respectively, 4,940 and 2,962.

Local authorities' criteria for inclusion of names on the waiting lists are not uniform and the frequency of reviewing the lists varies.

Rating Reform

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate the number of pensioner couples who will (a) gain and (b) lose as a consequence of the replacement of domestic rates by a community charge.

Mr. Howard: On the basis of data contained in the family expenditure survey, I estimate that 0·8 million pensioner couple households would gain from the introduction of the community charge without safety nets and 1 million would lose. On the other hand 80 per cent. of single pensioner households 2 million would gain. On the basis of the 1988-89 rebate arrangements all pensioner couples reliant entirely on the state retirement pension will qualify for an 80 per cent. community charge rebate.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what additional regulations or advice his Department will produce to ensure that the collection of personal data for use in the community register complies with the terms of the first data protection principle; and whether he will make a statement;

(2) what additional regulations or advice his Department will produce to ensure that the disclosure of personal data from the community charge register complies with the terms of the third data protection principle; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: I am continuing to discuss the implications of the Data Protection Act for the operation of the community charge with the Data Protection Registrar. My right hon. Friend will consider the need for guidance to local authorities and community charge registration officers in due course.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will reproduce the information in the tables in annex F to Cmnd. 9714, "Paying for Local Government" (a) for England only and (b) on the decile basis used in his reply of 16 December 1987 to the hon. Member for Warrington, North (Mr. Hoyle) Official Report, column 522, in the latter case together with information from the equivalent tables in his Department's note on the relationship between local taxes and income and the distributional impact of the community charge.

Mr. Howard: No. I have already given my latest estimates based on 1986-87 information. These replace the estimates based on 1984-85 data as published in Cmnd. 9714 and reflect decisions taken since that time.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the estimated (a) over 18 years and (b) total population in the households and tax units referred to in figures six to 10 of his Department's note on the relationship between local taxes and income and the distributional impact of the community charge.

Mr. Howard: Figures 6 to 10 of the note on 13 January are based on a sample of 24,120 households in England and scaled to an adult population for England of 35·2 million. This is consistent with a total population of 47·2 million.

Pollution Inspectorate

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report the text of the letters sent by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution in December 1987 to all local planning and waste authorities.

Mr. Moynihan: Yes. Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution sent one letter, in December 1987, to all the authorities referred to; which was on the subject of "Licensing and Control of Landfills Evolving Gas." Copies of the letter have been placed in the Library.

Right-to-Buy Applications

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many outstanding right-to-buy applications there are at present in Lambeth, Ealing, Tower Hamlets and Westminster; and what proportion of these have been outstanding for more than one year.

Mrs. Roe: At the end of November 1987, some 4,882 right-to-buy applications were being dealt with by Tower Hamlets borough council. It is not known how long each application had been outstanding. Regular statistics on the handling of applications by the other councils are not collected because their right-to-buy performance is not formally monitored by the Department.

House Condition Survey

Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he plans to publish the initial results of his Department's English house condition survey 1986; and whether this will be before or after he brings forward legislation to reform the current system of grant aid for home improvements, as proposed in his Department's consultation paper of 5 November 1987.

Mr. Waldegrave: We hope to publish the results of the 1986 English house condition survey before the summer recess. This will precede legislation to reform the current system of grant aid for home improvements.

Home Improvements

Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what is his Department's estimate of (a) the number of dwellings which are currently unfit and (b) the number of dwellings which are currently below target under the standards proposed in his Department's consultation paper on home improvement policy, issued on 5 November 1987; and what is his Department's estimate of the proportion of these dwellings which are (i) publicly and (ii) privately owned;

(2) what is his Department's estimate of the number of households who would currently qualify for (1) mandatory assistance (a) with the full cost and (b) with part of the cost of eligible work to bring their homes up to fitness and (2) discretionary assistance (a) with the full cost and (b) with part of the cost of eligible work to bring their home up to target, under the standards and the means test proposed in his Department's consultation paper on a new framework for home improvement grant aid, published on 5 November 1987;

(3) what estimates his Department has prepared of (a) future levels of expenditure and (b) future levels of activity on (i) improvement assistance; (ii) slum clearance; and (iii) group repair of dwellings under the new framework for home improvement policy, proposed in his Department's consultation paper of 5 November 1987.

Mr. Waldegrave: Firm estimates cannot be made before the results of the 1986 English house condition survey are available. Estimates of grant entitlement, and of future levels of expenditure and activity will also depend on other factors, including the eventual form of the test of applicants' resources, on which the consultation paper invited comments.

Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he plans to publish the full results of his Department's distribution of grants inquiry of 1983; and whether this will be before or after he brings forward legislation to reform the current system of grant aid for home improvements, as proposed in his Department's consultation paper of 5 November 1987.

Mr. Waldegrave: We plan to publish a further report on the Department's distribution of grant inquiry before legislation to reform the home improvement grant system is brought forward.

Housing Statistics

Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his Department's latest estimate of (a) the rate of deterioration in the state of repair (i) of the publicly-owned housing stock and (ii) of the privately-owned housing stock and (b) the level of expenditure required to prevent any increase in the rate of deterioration in the state of repair (i) of the publicly-owned housing stock and (ii) of the privately-owned housing stock.

Mr. Waldegrave: The latest estimates of change in the condition of the housing stock are those provided by the 1981 English house condition survey. They show that (i) Between 1976 and 1981 the condition of the publicly-owned housing stock did not change. (ii) Between 1976 and 1981 the proportion of the privately-owned housing stock estimated to require repairs costing more than £7,000 (at 1981 prices) increased from 6·2 per cent. to 7·1 per cent.

Estimates of the expenditure required to maintain the stock in a steady state are not available.

North Sea

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he is now able to issue advice on the action required to follow up the second international conference on the protection of the North sea; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: My Department has today issued a guidance note to explain the implications of the agreements contained in the ministerial declaration of the second international conference on the protection of the North sea held in London last November. This demonstrates that the Government have moved more quickly than any other North sea country in following up that declaration with proposals for action. The guidance note is directed particularly at the water industry, other public utilities and industrial interests. Several aspects of the follow-up action will also be the subject of further detailed guidance following consultation with the bodies directly concerned.

I am arranging for copies of the guidance note to be placed in the Library.

Ordnance Survey (Cash Limit)

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if there are any proposals to change the 1987-88 cash limit and running costs limit for the Ordnance Survey.

Mr. Moynihan: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, the cash limit for class XX, vote 10 will be decreased by £227,000 from £21,420,000 to £21,193,000 and the running costs limit will be increased by £1,035,000 from £52,299,000 to £53,334,000. The increase in running costs is required for payments on surveying contracts and for unavoidable VAT payments. There will be an increase in the VAT refund from Customs and Excise of £245,000. The decrease in the cash limit is due to Ordnance Survey not taking up the end-year flexibility provision of £1,017,000 as announced by my right hon. Friend the Chief Secretary to the Treasury to the House on 23 July 1987, Official Report columns 434-38. The balance will be surrendered to the Reserve.

Rate-capping

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what further developments have taken place since his announcement in December 1987 of the proposed limits for rate-capped authorities in 1988-89.

Mr. Ridley: Of the 17 rate-capped authorities, three —Manchester, Middlesbrough and Kingston upon Hull —accepted the proposed rate limit within the statutory period. I understand that a further authority, Tower Hamlets, also accepts the limit proposed in December.

The remaining 13 authorities have not accepted the proposed limit. After considering the representations made by authorities, including proposals from some of them to agree with me an increase in the limit, and having taken into account any other relevant information, I am proposing

(a) in the case of eight of these authorities — Basildon, Haringey, Lewisham, Waltham Forest, Thamesdown, Newcastle upon Tyne, Lambeth and Liverpool—no increase in the provisional limit;

(b) in the five other cases a higher limit, on which I am seeking agreement, as follows:

Hackney 136·00p (12·20p above the proposed limit)
Southwark 101·00p (2·98p above the proposed limit)
Camden 117·00p (1·59p above the proposed limit)
Greenwich 136·00p (10·28p above the proposed limit)
Ealing 167·00p (41·94p above the proposed limit)

Where I am unable to reach agreement with an authority on a different limit from the one proposed in December, I am required under the Rates Act to specify the maximum by order.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Alternative Land Use

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he is taking to encourage farmers to plant trees as an alternative land use.

Mr. Gummer: We propose to introduce a farm woodland scheme later this year following the passage of the Farm Land and Rural Development Bill and the necessary subordinate legislation.

In addition, the Community set-aside scheme, on which discussions are continuing in the Council of Ministers, is expected to include provision for land taken out of arable crop production to be used for woodland. The consultation document issued by the Agricultural Departments on 8 December 1987 contained suggestions as to how this option might be put into practice in the United Kingdom and linked with the new farm woodland scheme. I and my colleagues will wish to consider the matter further in the light of the Community's final decisions and of views expressed during our own consultation exercise.

Fishing Industry

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what arrangements he has made regularly to assess the financial state of the fishing industry.

Mr. Gummer: The financial state of the industry is kept under regular review through the collection of data on the value and volume of fish landings, imports and exports, vessel numbers, levels of investment and numbers of fishermen. The results of these surveys are published annually by Fisheries Departments in the form of sea fisheries statistical tables.

"An Extensification Scheme"

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what he considers will be the environmental consequences of his recent proposals contained in the consultation document, "An Extensification Scheme".

Mr. Gummer: The consultation document suggests that one of the objectives of the scheme should be to foster a changed pattern of land use in the countryside so as to improve conditions for wildlife and to enhance the landscape and the environment generally. My colleagues and I are considering the views expressed on this and other points.

Farm Effluents

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received seeking the extension of the 60 per cent. grant for farm effluent control and disposal to lowland areas not in less-favoured areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I received some representations from the Farmers Unions, the County Landowners' Association and the Scottish Landowners' Federation during last year's annual review discussions about the need to increase grants for effluent facilities outside the less favoured areas.

Grants for effluent facilities, which are kept under regular review, are now at the highest level available under the agriculture improvement scheme.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the number of grants and amounts paid under the agriculture improvement scheme for effluent disposal systems since 1985.

Mr. Gummer: Estimated expenditure on effluent handling facilities in the United Kingdom in 1986 was £7·7 million and 1987 £14·2 million. I regret that a detailed breakdown of this expenditure on the lines requested is not yet available.

Pig Industry

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the current level of profitability in the pig industry in (a) England and (b) Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The pigmeat market is weak thoughout the European Community and the United Kingdom. The EC Pigmeat Management Committee, responding to pressure from the United Kingdom and other member states, has recently decided to reintroduce a scheme of aids for private storage. I hope this decision will help to strengthen the market.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list in the Official Report the changes that have occurred in United Kingdom pig prices since October 1987.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Monthly average all pigs prices in the United Kingdom since October 1987 have been as follows:

	p/kg deadweight
October	97·63
November	96·10
December	94·11
January	[1]90·47

[1] To 23 January only.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will consider immediate introduction of a low cost private storage scheme for pig producers.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The Pigmeat Management Committee has decided to reintroduce aids for private storage as from 15 February. This decision was taken as a result of pressure from the United Kingdom and some other member states.

Pork Processing Units

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will list in the Official Report any port processing units in (a) England and (b) Wales which have been closed since 1979, indicating, the location of the unit and the date of closure in each case;

(2) if he will list in the Official Report every existing pork processing unit currently in operation in (a) England and (b) Wales.

Mr. Donald Thompson: This information is not available.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Resources (Allocation)

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to announce the results of his review of the resources allocation working party; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: We expect the review's programme of analysis and research to be completed shortly. Any recommendations will then be carefully considered.

Mentally Disordered Prisoners

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what measures have been taken by his Department to implement the recommendations of the joint Home Office-Department of Health and Social Security working group of officials chaired by the director of prison medical services on the problems presented by mentally disordered offenders in the prison system in England and Wales;

(2) what steps have been taken to implement the recommendation in the report of the director of prison medical services on the problems presented by mentally disordered offenders in the prison system in England and Wales that further encouragement should be given to regional health authorities to develop a comprehensive network of provisions to meet mental health care needs in their regions.

Mr. Newton: The report has been sent to regional general managers, asking them to bring it to the attention of those in charge of their regions' strategies for mental health. The report was also circulated to the royal colleges and other professional organisations.

Whenever the opportunity arises, regional health authorities are reminded of the need to provide the comprehensive mental health service referred to in the report, including provision for both those chronically mentally ill people and those mentally handicapped people who may need longer-term secure facilities as described in the then Minister's letter of October 1986 to regional chairmen. This comprehensive service is also a topic which features often in the regional reviews held annually between Ministers and regional health authorities.

The recommendations in the report aimed at increasing the extent to which mentally disordered offenders are detained other than in prison custody are being taken forward in discussion between Home Office and DHSS officials.

AIDS

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make it his policy to encourage regular testing for HIV antibody status amongst laboratory workers handling the virus; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The Department with the Health and Safety Executive has already issued guidance that local arrangements should be made to test, or store for future testing, serum from those laboratory staff who request this in connection with their work. The take-up of this facility is entirely voluntary.

Regular testing would not play any part in further reducing the extremely remote risk of HIV infection by laboratory workers through occupational exposure.

Waiting Lists

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services by how much National Health Service waiting lists have changed in percentage terms between 1979 and the latest available year in (a) the Mersey regional health authority and (b) England.

Mr. Newton: The information requested is given in the table.

Number of cases on in-patient waiting list at 31 March.

	1979	1987	Percentage change 1979-87
Mersey Region	41,103	29,147	−29·1
England	752,422	687,945	−8·6

Dentists (AIDS)

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what guidance has been issued to dentists on the sterilisation of drills, brushes, mouth suctions and other equipment, in view of the AIDS epidemic.

Mr. Newton: The chief dental officer issued guidance to dentists in April 1986 on the precautions to be exercised when treating HIV positive patients. The guidance indicated simple procedures to ensure that exposure to the virus during the course of dental treatment would be minimised.

The need for further guidance is kept under regular review.

NHS Patients (Statistics)

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people died as a result of operations in National Health Service hospitals in 1986; and how many of these deaths resulted from (a) surgical error and (b) unnecessary operations.

Mrs. Currie: This information is not held centrally. The recent report of the confidential inquiry into peri-operative deaths (CEPOD) looked at deaths in 1986 within 30 days operations. In three regions (Northern, South Western and North East Thames) it was found that the proportion of deaths which were attributable to avoidable surgical or anaesthetic factors was small. The overall death rate following half a million operations was found to be 0·7 per cent. Most of those who died were elderly and death was due to the progression of their illness or to other co-existing disease. One one in 25,000 operations resulted in death which was thought to be due solely to "avoidable surgical or anaesthetic factors", although there were "avoidable elements" in 0·14 per cent. which could have contributed to death. A copy of the CEPOD report has been placed in the Library.

Private Health Care

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the average amount currently being paid by an average family of four by way of the annual subscription to private health care schemes; and what are the comparable figures in terms of taxes and charges payable in respect of the National Health Service.

Mr. Newton: In 1986, the latest year for which United Kingdom data are available, the annual average subscription to private health care schemes per family of four was £468. Gross NHS expenditure for the same year was £1,380 per family of four. However, these figures are not directly comparable. Health Service expenditure includes the family practitioner service as well as care for the mentally ill, mentally handicapped and frail elderly, services not generally covered by private health insurance.

Macclesfield District Health Authority

Mr. Neil Hamilton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will tabulate the number of cases dealt with by the Macclesfield district health authority for the years 1981 to 1986, in (a) general medicine, (b) paediatrics, (c) geriatric medicine, (d) general surgery, (e) trauma and orthopaedics, (f) neurosurgery,

(h) gynaecology, (i) obstetrics, (j) special care baby unit, (k) mental handicap, (l) mental illness, (m) general practice other and (n) other specialties.

Mrs. Currie: The information requested is given in the table.

Birth Statistics

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what proportion of babies are born at home in each health authority.

Mrs. Currie: The information requested has been placed in the Library.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the lightest and lowest cost for deliveries of babies and what is the average cost of deliveries of babies for each health authority in England and Wales.

Mrs. Currie: I regret the information requested is not available centrally. I expect information about the hospital costs of obstetric cases to become available in 1989.

North East Thames Regional Health Authority

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he next intends to meet the chairman of the North East Thames regional health authority; and what matters he expects to discuss.

Mrs. Currie: Ministers will next meet the chairman of North East Thames regional health authority, together with all regional chairmen, on 16 March. This is one of a series of regular meetings Ministers have with regional chairmen at which current topics affecting the NHS are discussed.

Single Payments

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will provide a breakdown for each of the last four years for which figures are available of single payments made from his Department's Blyth and Cramlington office to (a) pensioners, (b) single parents, and (c) long-term unemployed.

Mr. Scott: The information requested regarding single payments made to single parents and long-term unemployed during the last four years is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

However, information on the yearly totals of numbers and amounts of payments made to claimants of pension age, to claimants registered as unemployed and to those neither registered unemployed nor of pension age for the years April 1983 to April 1987 by the Department's Blyth local office is given in the table:

	Year April to April
	1983-84	1984-85	1985-86	[1]1986-87
Claimants of pension age
Number	266	369	588	572

Amount (£)	120,237	170,575	250,401	185,882

[1] The figures for April 1986 to April 1987 are provisional and subject to amendment.

Accident and Emergency Services

Mrs. Rosie Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what procedures are followed when a decision is made to transfer excess accident and emergency services from one district health authority to a neighbouring one.

Mrs. Currie: The Community Health Councils Regulations 1985 (SI 1985 No. 304) require a district health authority to consult a community health council on proposals to make any substantial variation in the provision of the health service in the council's district. Provision is made for urgent temporary closures to be implemented without consultation. If the hon. Member has a particular instance in mind, perhaps she would like to write to the chairman of the health authority concerned.

Cervical Cancer

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to improve the provision of cervical cancer screening in the Lewisham and North Southwark health district; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: As a response to our development of screening services, the existing recall system operated by Lewisham and North Southwark health authority will be improved from April 1988 by the implementation of a fully computerised call and recall system for all local women aged between 20 and 65. With a view to reducing waiting times, the health authority is now reviewing its colposcopy service and will consider if extra sessions at Guy's hospital and Lewisham hospital would be helpful.

National Insurance

Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the total sum collected in national insurance contributions for the year 1986-87 and that anticipated for 1987-88; and if he will show it broken down with employees, employers and self-employed contributions.

Mr. Scott: The information is as follows:

Estimated receipts from National Insurance Contributions
£ million

	Great Britain
	1986-87	1987-88
Class 1
Employees	11,750	12,550
Employers[1]	12,450	13,500
Self-employed (classes 2 and 4)	700	750
Total	24,900	26,800

[1] Net of SSP deductions of £750 million in 1986-87, and of SSP and SMP deductions of £950 million in 1987-88.

The total excludes voluntary class 3 contributions, which yielded £30 million in 1986-87, and an estimated £25 million in 1987-88.

Bassetlaw Area Health Authority

Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) whether he will make extra money available to the Bassetlaw health authority for the underfunding of pay awards to staff, the additional cost of hiring junior medical locum staff from agencies, new and additional consultant staff posts, an increase of stock levels in certain areas and increased levels of activity in a number of services;

(2) whether he will make an extra allocation of £700,000 to Bassetlaw area health authority to prevent the closure of wards in Retford and Worksop hospitals .

Mrs. Currie: Trent regional health authority is responsible for allocating funds to its districts, including Bassetlaw. In December, The Government made available a further £5·8 million to Trent RHA for this financial year. For 1988-89, Trent RHA's revenue allocation will be £1,050 million, an increase of 6·3 per cent. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman of the regional health authority for details of how these additional sums are to be allocated.

Earnings Rule

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services at what level of income the earnings rule has operated in respect of retirement pensions in each year from 1984-85.

Mr. Scott: The retirement pension earnings rule applies for the first five years after minimum pension age (60 for women and 65 for men). In November 1984 the specified level of earnings net of certain expenses was £70, rising to £75 in November 1985. Pension is reduced on a sliding scale for earnings over the specified level. Entitlement to full basic retirement pension would generally be extinguished when the level of earnings net of expenses reached the amounts shown:

November 1984	107·80
November 1985	115·30
July 1986	115·70
April 1987	116·50
April 1988	118·14

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the value of the earnings rule for retirement pensions as a percentage of (a) gross and (b) net average earnings for each year since 1984.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is shown in the table.

Average weekly earnings: Male manual workers

(1) Date	(2) Earnings rule	(3) Gross	(4) Net	(5) Column (2) as a percentage of column (3)	(6) Column (2) as a percentage of column (4)
	£	£	£	Per cent.	Per cent.
November 1984	70·00	159·60	108·90	43·9	64·3
November 1985	75·00	168·70	115·60	44·5	64·9
July 1986	75·00	176·20	122·30	42·6	61·3
April 1987	75·00	185·50	131·30	40·4	57·1

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to abolish the earnings rule for retirement pensions.

Mr. Scott: We do not feel able at present to give this issue priority over other claims on resources.

Pensioners

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many couples of pensionable age share a pension book and are not eligible to receive £8 each as an adjustment to their pension following the miscalculation in the retail prices index.

Mr. Scott: It is not possible for a retired couple to have both of their pensions paid on the same order book. In all cases, therefore, each will receive an £8 payment. It is possible for a pensioner to receive an increase to his or her pension in respect of a spouse who has not retired. However, this increase was unaffected by the error in the retail prices index. Such a pensioner's single £8 payment will accordingly fully compensate him or her.

Health Authorities (Fire Regulations)

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list for each district health authority the money spent over the previous five years on meeting fire regulations.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that the information is not available.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what advice he gives to health authorities about fire regulations; and what information he has about the way in which decisions are made about the amount of money to be spent for this purpose.

Mrs. Currie: The Department in November 1987 published new and updated guidance to health authorities in "FIRECODE", a comprehensive suite of documents which advise on fire precautions regulations, policy and management as well as giving technical guidance on various building, engineering and equipment fire precautions matters. Health authorities are expected to discuss fire precautions with local fire authorities and to meet the cost of compliance with statutory and other regulations and guidance from within their normal allocations.

London Ambulance Service

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps his Department has taken to test the electronic or mechanical efficiency of the telecommunications equipment at the headquarters of the London ambulance service; if he is satisfied with the arrangements made with British Telecom plc; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: Arrangements for the testing of electronic and mechanical efficiency of the telecommunications equipment at the headquarters of the London ambulance service are the responsibility of the South West Thames regional health authority as managers of the service.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what specific allocation of funds he makes to the South West Thames regional health authority in respect of the London ambulance service.

Mrs. Currie: No specific figure is identified for the London ambulance service in the allocation of funds made by the Department to the South West Thames regional health authority. However, I understand that the regional health authority has set aside £45 million from its 1988-89 budget for this purpose.

Leukaemia

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to receive the formal report by the Committee on Medical Aspects of Radiation in the Environment into the incidence of leukaemia clusters.

Mrs. Currie: COMARE reports from time to time on individual topics within its terms of reference. Its next report will cover the incidence of childhood leukaemia in the vicinity of Dounreay, and is expected to be available before the summer.

Meningitis

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the number of cases of meningitis recorded in the past 12 months (a) in the Wirral as a whole and (b) by individual hospitals in the Wirral; and if he will list the number of deaths from meningitis (i) in the Wirral and (ii) by individual hospitals in the Wirral.

Mrs. Currie: Mortality data for 1987 are still being processed: during 1986, meningococcal infection (ICD 9 036) was mentioned on the death certificates of four usual residents of Wirral county district. Of these one was meningococcal meningitis (ICD 036.0). Mortality data at hospital level are not released for reasons of confidentiality.

In 1986, there were 30 notifications of acute meningitis from Wirral county district. Of these, 17 were meningococcal meningitis. The figures for 1987 were 28 and 21, respectively. Hospital data are not collected on the infectious disease notification form.

Infant Mortality

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he is taking to investigate possible reasons for the rise in infant mortality in England and Wales in 1986.

Mrs. Currie: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Provan (Mr. Wray) on 26 January 1988 at column 219.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many post neonatal deaths there have been in the United Kingdom; and what are the comparable figures for (a) France, (b) Holland, (c) the Federal Republic of Germany and (d) Denmark, in each year since 1975.

Mrs. Currie: The latest available data are shown in the table.

DEFENCE

British Army Equipment Exhibition

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if, to show his support for the work of the third United Nations special session on disarmament due to be held in June, he will cancel the British Army equipment exhibition planned for Aldershot from 27 June to 1 July.

Mr. Sainsbury: No. The British Army equipment exhibition has no relevance to the United Nations special session on disarmament. The United Kingdom remains firmly committed to seeking arms control agreements which are both balanced and verifiable.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if the implementation of decisions or recommendations taken at Montebello in November 1983 or Luxembourg in March 1985 by the NATO planning group will lead to an increase in (a) the number of nuclear warheads available for use by NATO from western Europe, (b) the total nuclear fire power of NATO available for use from locations in western Europe, (c) the number of air-launched or sea-launched or similar nuclear weapons available for use from western Europe, to a level in excess of that available (i) before and (ii) after implementation of the intermediate nuclear forces agreement 1987;

(2) whether the implementations of improvements submitted by SACEUR and approved for implementation at th nuclear planning group meetings in 1985 will lead to any increase in the number of air or sea-launched missiles deployed in western Europe, including the United Kingdom, to a level greater than that which existed prior to the recent intermediate nuclear forces agreement;

(3) whether he will make a statement as to the effect of the Montebello 1983 NATO planning group's recommendation and decisions on the modernisation of nuclear weapons on the present numbers of nuclear weapons deployed.

Mr. Ian Stewart: At their meeting in Montebello in 1983, NATO Defence Ministers agreed both to a reduction by 1,400 warheads of the Alliance's land-based nuclear stockpile in Europe and on the need for possible improvements to ensure the continuing effectiveness, responsiveness and survivability of remaining systems. SACEUR's detailed proposals for implementing the Montebello decision, which he submitted to the nuclear planning group in 1985, are confidential. The INF agreement, when implemented, will lead to a further reduction in the stockpile.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what reductions and increases in nuclear deployment in the report of the NATO high level group were approved by NATO Ministers prior to the publication of the 1984 Defence Estimates;

(2) which proposals from the NATO high level group were endorsed at the Montebello NATO planning group conference in 1983.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I refer the hon. Member to the communiqué issued following the ministerial meeting of the nuclear planning group at Montebello in 1983, a copy of which is in the Library.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether all the decisions and recommendations taken at the 1983 Montebello NATO planning group conference, as they affect the United Kingdom, were known to all the parties during the course of the recent intermediate nuclear forces negotiations, which led to an agreement on a reduction in nuclear weapons.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The proceedings of NATO's nuclear planning group are confidential. However, a very full official communiqué was issued at the end of the ministerial meeting of the group at Montebello in 1983. I assume the contents of this were known to the parties involved in the INF negotiations.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will name those British officials who are members of the NATO nuclear high level planning group.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Member for Tonbridge and Malling (Mr. Stanley) to the hon. Members for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) and for Merionnydd Nant Conwy (Mr. Thomas) on 8 May 1987 at column 556. It is not our practice to name individual officials involved in specific activities of this kind.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recommendations or decisions taken by the Montebello NATO planning group conference he does not intend to implement in relation to the modernisation of nuclear weapons.

Mr. Ian Stewart: SACEUR's recommendations for implementing the agreement by NATO Defence Ministers at Montebello in 1983 to a reduction in the Alliance's land-based nuclear stockpile in Europe and on the need for improvements in its effectiveness were submitted to the meeting of the nuclear planning group in Luxembourg in 1985. As regards the modernisation recommendations addressed to the United Kingdom, no decisions have been taken.

RAF Stornoway

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the calculation of the current noise contour maps around RAF Stornoway took into account run-and-break manoeuvres by incoming aircraft.

Mr. Freeman: No. However, run-and-break manoeuvres will be taken into account in the forthcoming noise survey at RAF Stornoway if this is practicable.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the calculation of the current noise contour maps around RAF Stornoway took into account the noise of aircraft on the ground.

Mr. Freeman: Yes. The current noise contours for RAF Stornoway take into account all noise from aircraft operations, including noise emitted by aircraft prior to take-off and after landing. Noise from ground engine running is not included, but the forthcoming noise survey will take this into account if practicable.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what modifications to the Airnoise I aircraft noise model were made in mapping the noise contours around RAF Stornoway.

Mr. Freeman: Two major modifications have been made to the original Airnoise I computer model which formed the basis of the predicted noise contour used for the 1981 public inquiry at Stornoway. The current contour based on the Airnoise II model incorporates a bend to the north-east of the airfield reflecting the fact that militry aircraft taking-off fly over the sea in order to avoid the villages of Tong and Coll. The current contour is also slightly narrower because more reliable source data, derived from actual measurements of the RAF Phantom and Tornado aircraft, and more sophisticated computation methods, incorporating allowances for sound transmission through the atmosphere and close to the ground surface, have been used. These modifications are in line with internationally agreed criteria.

Aircraft Noise

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the aircraft types whose source noise and operational flight profiles are held in the data bank for (a) the Airnoise I aircraft noise model and (b) the Airnoise II aircraft noise model.

Mr. Freeman: All the aircraft types used for the Airnoise computer models are listed in a report called "External noise of MOD military aircraft", a copy of which is in the Library. At RAF Stornoway, the noise source data and operational flight profiles for the Phantom and Tornado aircraft have been used to produce the predicted noise contours.

Royal Artillery Range, Hebrides

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, what is the purpose of the volumatic disintegrator to be installed on the royal artillery range, Hebrides.

Mr. Freeman: A "volumatic disintegrator"—a large paper shredding machine—has been installed on the Royal Artillery ranges Hebrides since 1981.

Nimrod (Search and Rescue)

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will consider the privatisation of Nimrod aircraft tasked in the SAR role.

Mr. Freeman: No.

Pilots

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many pilots left the Royal Air Force in 1987 without completing their engagements.

Mr. Freeman: The numbers of pilots who left the RAF in 1987 without completing their engagements are as follows:

	Number
Through premature voluntary retirement	74
At a recognised optional exit point	65
Other exits (medical, death, disciplinary etc.)	11
Total	150

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many pilots left the Royal Air Force in 1987 or have expressed a desire to leave the service.

Mr. Freeman: The number of pilots who left the RAF in 1987 was 224. The number of pilots who in 1987 expressed a desire to leave the service was 232.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many pilots have expressed a desire to leave the Royal Air Force without completing their engagement.

Mr. Freeman: The numbers of pilots who in 1987 expressed a desire to leave the RAF without completing their engagements are as follows:

	Number
Through premature voluntary retirement	88
At a recognised optional exit point	119
Total	207

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current cost of training a fast jet pilot for the Royal Air Force.

Mr. Freeman: The average cost to the Ministry of Defence of training a student pilot to the point when he joins an operational fast jet squadron is approximately £3 million at current prices.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many servicemen entered the Royal Air Force college Cranwell to train as pilots in 1987.

Mr. Freeman: Two hundred and forty-eight.

Navigators

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current cost of training a fast jet navigator for the Royal Air Force.

Mr. Freeman: The average cost to the Ministry of Defence of training a student navigator to the point when he joins an operational fast jet squadron is approximately £1 million at current prices.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many servicemen entered the Royal Air Force college Cranwell to train as navigators in 1987.

Mr. Freeman: Eighty-five.

RAF Brawdy (Rescues)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list by category the number of rescue sorties carried out by the search and rescue detachment at RAF Brawdy, Pembrokeshire, in 1987.

Mr. Freeman: In 1987, a total of 70 search and rescue sorties were carried out by helicopters based at RAF Brawdy, resulting in the following numbers of persons being recovered:

Military	Civilian		Total
3	[1]9	[2]62	74

[1] Category includes merchant seamen and civilians on passenger vessels for example, ferries.
[2] Other civilians, including fishermen, pleasure craft and those rescued on land.

Cash Limits

Mrs. Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he proposes to make any changes to the defence cash limits for 1987-88.

Mr. Younger: Yes. The following changes are being made, subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary spring Supplementary Estimates.

£'000s

Class and vote	Current cash limit	Increase/ decrease		Revised cash limit
I, 1	7,257,411	+162,048	transferred from I, 2	7,419,459
I, 2	9,152,897	−259,048	transferred to I, 1 and to I, 4	8,893,849
I, 4	1,478,330	+97,000	transferred from I, 2	1,575,330

These changes allow for transfers within the Ministry of Defence's block cash limit, to reflect the expected pattern of expenditure. The changes have no net effect on public expenditure.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Blood

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is his estimate of the proportion and number of adults in Northern Ireland that would be suitable for blood donation.

Mr. Needham: About 75 per cent. of adults eligible (only adults in the 18 to 64 age group are considered eligible for blood donation); some 670,500 people.

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proportion and number of suitable adults give blood in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: The information is not available in the form requested. Approximately 65,000 donations are collected each year which represents roughly one in 10 from suitable adults.

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proportion and number of suitable adults are needed to give blood to make Northern Ireland self-sufficient in blood-derived products.

Mr. Needham: Northern Ireland is self-sufficient apart from the blood product albumen. An increase in blood donations of about 10 per cent. — 6,500 — would be required to attain total self-sufficiency.

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will consider reducing the period between permitted donations of blood to four months from six, to ease the shortage of blood and blood-derived products, and to make Northern Ireland self-sufficient; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: The Northern Ireland blood transfusion service already collects blood at four-monthly intervals from male donors. The service is striving to achieve total self-sufficiency through its programmes to increase both the number of donations and the plasma yield from donations.

Cervical Cancer

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what guidance he has issued to health and social services boards to ensure that the current backlog of cervical cancer tests is cleared; whether he intends to issue to boards in Northern Ireland DHSS Health Circular HC (88)I on health services management of cervical cancer screening; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: The Department of Health and Social Services is in regular contact with the health and social services boards over ways of increasing the rate of processing cervical smear tests. The backlog of tests has been reduced by 30 per cent. over the past two months. A Northern Ireland circular comparable to HC (88)I is being prepared and will be issued shortly.

Cash Limits

Dr. Hampson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the cash limits for the Northern Ireland Office and for Northern Ireland Departmental Services for 1987-88.

Mr. Stanley: Subject to parliamentary approval to the necessary Supplementary Estimate, the cash limit for the Northern Ireland Office — class XVIII, vote 1 — for 1987-88 is being increased by £32,203,000 from £512,405,000 to £544,608,000 to cover increased requirements for expenditure on law, order, protective and miscellaneous services. The increase is mainly due to higher than anticipated police activity levels, prison officers' overtime costs, and rent allowance payments for police and prison officers, expansion of the police capital works programme and an increase in the level of criminal damage compensation claim settlements, partly offset by savings arising from slippage in various capital works programmes.

This increase is partly covered by a decrease of £22·6 million in the cash limit for Northern Ireland departmental services, NID1, from £2,447·8 million to £2,425·2 million: this reflects emerging savings in that sector. The balance of £9·6 million is being met from the Reserve and there is therefore no increase in total public expenditure.

In addition, the Northern Ireland public expenditure total for 1987-88 has been increased by £2·1 million for health and personal social services, as announced by my right hon. Friend the Minister for Health on 16 December, at columns 1093-1106, and by £1·7 million in respect of the costs to Northern Ireland Departments of the weather damage in October. These are also being met from the Reserve and do not increase total public expenditure, I do not propose to increase NID1 correspondingly.

Hospital Beds

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Belfast, South on 22 January, Official Report, column 875, whether he will instruct health boards to collect information about beds available at both 12 noon and 12 midnight; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: It is considered that the recording of bed availability by the midnight count is sufficient to meet all planning requirements. It is not proposed to introduce an additional daily bed count at noon.

Glaucoma

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people in Northern Ireland in the last three years for which figures are available have been given free eyesight tests and free dental examinations; and how many cases of glaucoma have been diagnosed in Northern Ireland over that period.

Mr. Needham: Figures are not kept which identify the number of people who receive free sight tests and dental examinations but the number of tests carried out in Northern Ireland in each category over the last three years was:

	Sight tests	Dental examinations
1985	219,259	780,463
1986	226,080	801,202
1987	240,660	817,723

The number of glaucoma cases diagnosed is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Cost Limits

Mr. Charles Wardle: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about the 1987-88 running cost limit for the Northern Ireland Office and the Northern Ireland Departments.

Mr. Stanley: I have reviewed the running cost requirements for Northern Ireland Departments and the Northern Ireland Office for 1987-88 and I have agreed that the running cost limit should be increased by £4·187 million from £476·762 million, which I announced on 23 July 1987, to £480·949 million. This mainly reflects additional requirements for prisons and social security. It includes also provision for additional costs to Northern Ireland Departments of administering certain programmes on behalf of the International Fund for Ireland, and a transfer of £80,000 from the Department of Transport to the Department of the Environment (NI) in respect of vehicle licensing. The necessary resources will be found from within existing public expenditure provision or, in the case of the international fund, receipts.

Republic of Ireland (Extradition)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he expects further applications for extradition to be made in respect of persons believed living in the Irish Republic where the persons sought are wanted in respect of (a) terrorist offences and (b) other offences.

Mr. Stanley: The Royal Ulster Constabulary continues to give consideration to possible extradition cases involving both terrorist and non-terrorist offences. As I said in my reply to the hon. Gentleman on 10 November, at column 166, it is not the practice to give details of possible individual extradition cases.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many of the applications for extradition from the Irish Republic made between 1 December 1987 and 14 December 1987 were for terrorist offences.

Mr. Stanley: All three.

Dog-licensing Law

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he has any plans to bring Northern Ireland dog-licensing law into line with the law in Great Britain; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Viggers: No. Requirement for dog control in Northern Ireland are separate from those which exist in Great Britain. The present dog-licensing arrangements in Northern Ireland are part of control measures introduced after extensive discussion with local interests to meet Northern Ireland requirements.

Salmon (Tagging)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether the proposals by the Government of the Irish Republic to introduce a system of tagging salmon will apply in any part of the area covered by the Foyle Fisheries Commission.

Mr. Viggers: The Government of the Republic of Ireland have not made any proposals to introduce a salmon-tagging scheme and speculation on the application of a salmon-tagging scheme in any part of the Foyle area would be premature.

Housing Executive (Contracts)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if he will publish a table in the Official Report to show what sums have been paid to date in respect of loss and expense claims by contractors made in respect of Housing Executive contracts let in the financial years 1978-79 to 1987-88, relating to (a) legal costs, *(b)*professional advisers costs, (c) Housing Executive staff time costs, (d) interest charges and (e) capital sums; and if he will show under each heading what sums relate to measurable and evaluated items, and which sums arose under contractual claims;

(2) if he will publish a table in the Official Report to show the sums recovered from and the claims outstanding against contractors by the Housing Executive in respect of contracts having been let in the financial years from 1978-79 to 1987-88;

(3) if he will publish a table in the Official Report showing what sums have been paid to date for loss and expense by contractors and how many claims and for what sums are still not settled, in respect of Housing Executive contracts let in each financial year 1978-79 to 1987-88, for (a) new build, (b) rehabilitation work and (c) other capital expenditure.

Mr. Needham: These are matters for the chairman of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive who has informed me that the information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table showing, for each district of the Eastern Health and Social Services Board, the number of people on waiting lists for each specialty for the last five years for which figures are available, giving a breakdown of the total waiting list by time spent on list.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 28 January 1988]: Since the answer is in lengthy tabular form, I will arrange for a copy to be placed in the Library.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Punishment Attacks

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what figures are available to indicate the known numbers of punishment attacks for each year since 1975, indicating if possible the nature of the attacks, the areas in which they took place and the organisations who admitted or are suspected of responsibility.

Mr. Stanley [holding answer 29 January 1988]: The information is as follows:

Punishment attacks[1]

Year	Loyalist	Republican	Total
1975	50	139	189
1976	36	62	98
1977	28	98	126
1978	17	50	67
1979	25	51	76
1980	26	51	77
1981	14	66	80
1982	25	64	89
1983	10	24	34
1984	7	63	70
1985	15	47	62
1986	36	46	82
1987	94	90	184

[1] Paramilitary organisations believed to be responsible.

Details of the areas where these attacks took place are not readily available for earlier years but, since 1983, the following information is available:

	1983	1984	1985	1986	1987
Greater Belfast	24	53	49	66	158
Other areas	10	17	13	16	26

Details of the nature of these attacks, broken down between punishment shootings and punishment assaults, are available from 1982 and are as follows:

Year	Punishment shootings (see note 1) (Paramilitary organisations believed to be responsible)			Punishment assaults (see note 2) (Paramilitary organisations believed to be responsible)
	Loyalist	Republican	Total	Loyalist	Republican	Total
1982	22	58	80	3	6	9
1983	9	22	31	1	2	3
1984	6	20	26	1	43	44
1985	11	21	32	4	26	30
1986	24	17	41	12	29	41
1987	67	57	124	27	33	60

Note 1: Punishment shootings are primarily kneecappings.
Note 2: Punishment assaults are primarily with sticks, metal bars, breeze blocks and electric drills.

Farm Effluents

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many applications for grant aid in respect of disposal of farm effluents were received from 4 November 1987 until closure of applications; how many applications were accepted and how many refused; and what are the sums involved in respect of applications accepted and acknowledged.

Mr. Viggers [holding answer 3 February 1988]: In the period 4 November 1987 to 31 December 1987 the Department of Agriculture received 2,934 prior notifications from farmers intending to undertake the provision of farm effluent disposal facilities. All prior notifications continue to be acknowledged. No prior notifications have been refused by the Department.

It will not be possible to indicate the amount of money involved until claims in respect of completed work have been received by the Department.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will reintroduce grants for the provision of effluent disposal on farms in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Viggers [holding answer 3 February 1988]: My noble Friend Lord Lyell announced on 31 December 1987 that a decision about the future of the agriculture improvement scheme (national scheme) would be made as soon as possible after 29 February 1988. This remains the position.

Grants for effluent disposal facilities continue to be available to farmers who include such works in farm improvement plans submitted under the agriculture improvement scheme which is reimbursable by FEOGA.

Potato Cyst Nematode

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he has any plans to remove potato cyst nematode from the list of notifiable diseases of farm crops.

Mr. Viggers [holding answer 3 February 1988]: A proposal to remove potato cyst nematode from the list of notifiable pests in Northern Ireland is presently the subject of consultation with industry interests.

Potatoes

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland for what reasons his Department requires that potatoes shall not be grown more than once in five years on the same land; and if he now has any plans to remove this requirement.

Mr. Viggers [holding answer 3 February 1988]: Limitations on the growing of ware potatoes to once in five years on the same land were introduced with the intention of preventing the build up of potato cyst nematode. A proposal in light of current circumstances to remove the frequency of planting restriction in respect of ware potatoes in Northern Ireland is at present the subject of consultation with industry interests.

Agricultural and Horticultural Stocks

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he intends to take and what measures are at present in force to maintain the present standards of health in agricultural and horticultural stocks and crops in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Viggers [holding answer 3 February 1988]: Arrangements to maintain the standards of plant health in agriculture and horticultural stocks and crops in Northern Ireland have been established under the Plant Health Act (Northern Ireland) 1967. They provide for restrictions and prohibitions on imports of plant material and for measures to eradicate outbreaks of diseases and pests in Northern Ireland and to prevent the spread of certain serious pests and diseases already established there.

Industry interests are being consulted about proposals to consolidate and update present arrangements in line with current circumstances.

WALES

Rents

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many cases referred to the rent assessment committees in each county in Wales resulted in a reduced rent in each of the last five years.

Mr. Grist: Information relating to the numbers of reductions in rent as a result of all referrals to the rent assessment committee is not held centrally. However, an analysis of a sample of cases[1] shows that the committee's determination was lower in percentage terms than the rent officer's assessment as follows:

Rent registration area	1982[2] Per cent.	1983[3] Per cent.	1984[3] Per cent.	1985[3] Per cent.	1986[3] Per cent.
Clwyd	—	6 (50)	3 (40)	7 (30)	3 (34)
Dyfed	—	22 (18)	13 (18)	0 (20)	8 (12)
Gwent	—	29 (14)	29 (7)	8 (12)	6 (16)
Gwynedd	—	100 (5)	— (0)	6 (17)	0 (11)
Mid Glamorgan	—	64 (11)	69 (52)	17 (29)	67 (94)
Powys	—	14 (7)	0 (28)	14 (7)	25 (4)
South Glamorgan	—	7 (214)	4 (235)	3 (74)	11 (171)
West Glamorgan	—	15 (52)	5 (39)	0 (38)	0 (57)

[1] Including regulated and housing association cases.
[2] Data not available.
[3] Figures in brackets indicate the total number of cases in sample.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many appeals have been taken to the rent assessment committee in each county in Wales in each of the last five years.

Mr. Grist: The information is as follows:

Rent Act 1977: Total number of reference of fair rent cases to rent assessment committees, Wales 1983-87

Rent Registration Area	1983	1984	1985	1986	1987
Clwyd	44	59	32	51	28
Dyfed	24	11	37	18	38
Gwent	26	53	15	59	83
Gwynedd	21	15	23	15	36
Mid Glamorgan	30	53	114	70	61
Powys	8	34	10	5	11
South Glamorgan	164	188	105	196	254
West Glamorgan	70	73	32	66	49

This includes regulated and housing association cases.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many applications there have been for registered fair rents in each of the last five years in each county in Wales.

Mr. Grist: The number of applications received for Registered Fair Rents between 1983 and 1987 are as follows:

County	1983	1984	1985	1986	1987
Clwyd	2,028	1,820	2,078	2,672	2,482
Dyfed	854	1,060	1,083	1,554	1,421
Gwent	2,945	2,359	3,408	3,600	3,596
Gwynedd	729	605	854	925	1,073

West Glamorgan	2,193	2,056	2,637	2,274	2,862

This includes regulated and housing association cases.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the percentage change in the number of applications for fair rents in Wales over the past five years.

Mr. Grist: The total number of applications for fair rent for regulated and housing association tenancies in Wales in 1982 was 13,790. The total in 1987 was 23,083. This represents an increase of 67 per cent.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many properties have been assessed for fair rent in Wales in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Grist: In 1987 the total number of registrations for fair rents in Wales was 22,677. This includes regulated and housing association cases.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the level of fair rent in the private sector in Wales in each county, in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Grist: The following information shows the mean rent for registrations in 1986:

Rent Act 1977: Mean registered Rents, Wales 1986

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many applications have been made for fair rent by local authorities in Wales in each county in each of the last five years.

Mr. Grist: Information on the number of applications by local authorities for review of a fair rent is not held centrally. However, the total number of first registrations of fair rents where the application has been made by the local authority is as follows:

Rent Act 1977: First registrations only, resulting from application from local authorities, Wales 1982-86

Alyn and Deeside (Industry)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what is the total amount of resources earmarked by his Department for the Welsh Development Agency for rural initiatives in Clwyd for traditional factories, bespoke projects and new development sites in market centres; and if he will make a statement;

(2) in which areas in Alyn and Deeside he proposes to provide small industrial estates and workshops; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what is his estimate of the demand for starter units in Alyn and Deeside; how many he has so far allocated; how many he will allocate for 1988-89; what land he will make available for starter units in Alyn and Deeside; what partnerships he envisages with the private sector and local authorities concerning starter units; and if he will make a statement;

(4) what is his estimate of the increase in the square footage, expressed also as a percentage of factory working space on (a) Deeside industrial park and (b) other named industrial locations in Alyn and Deeside for the year 1988-89 compared with the previous year;

(5) what plans he has for the Alyn and Deeside district for the new property development initiative; and if he will make a statement;

(6) what plans he has to upgrade Deeside industrial park, Engineer park and other industrial locations in Alyn and Deeside; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: The Welsh Development Agency is still developing its detailed plans for all elements of its 1988-89 budget. Its property development programme for the year was published on 28 January and is available in the Library of the House. Other information on the agency's programmes is not yet available on a district basis.

Demand for starter units in Alyn and Deeside is strong and the agency's latest factory programme and property development initiative are aimed at meeting it.

Present estimates suggest that in 1988-89 agency-related factory floor space will increase by nearly 140,000 sq ft or 17 per cent. at Deeside industrial park. It is too early to forecast the outcome of the property development initiative on accommodation at Engineer park.

The Welsh Development Agency plans to spend up to £1 million on infrastructure at Deeside industrial park in order to pave the way for futher development.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Conveyancing

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Attorney-General when he expects the scheme prepared by the Council for Licensed Conveyancers in accordance with paragraph 4 of Schedule 3 to the Administration of Justice Act 1985 to be made available to hon. Members for comment before it receives the Lord Chancellor's approval.

The Attorney-General: The draft scheme was placed in the Library last month.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Attorney-General what representations have been made to the Lord Chancellor relating to postponing the effective date for implementing the scheme provided for in paragraph 4 of schedule 3 to the Administration of Justice Act 1985.

The Attorney-General: The Lord Chancellor has received no representations about the timetable for the implementation of the scheme for the next council. The Council for Licensed Conveyancers has intimated that its aim is that the new council should assume office on 1 March 1989.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Attorney-General, further to his answer given on 9 November 1987, Official Report, column 16, why the Council for Licensed Conveyancers' recognised bodies rules and the Council for Licensed Conveyncers' recognised bodies practice rules have not yet been made; and when the Lord Chancellor expects to give them his approval.

The Attorney-General: I understand the Lord Chancellor wrote to the hon. Member on 1 February.

Judiciary

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Attorney-General if he will give under appropriate headings the total number of members of the judiciary in post at the latest convenient date, giving under each heading the numbers born in or before 1920.

The Attorney-General: Excluding the Lord Chancellor, the total number of members of the judiciary in post on 1 February 1988 is set out in the table:

Post	Total	Post holders born in or before 1920
Lord of Appeal in Ordinary	9	4
Heads of Divisions	4	2
Lords Justices	27	5
High Court Judges	77	17
Circuit Judges	392	63
	509	91

Mr. John Stalker

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Attorney-General what consideration he is giving to the prosecution of Mr. John Stalker, under the Official Secrets Acts, in relation to information contained in his book "Stalker", published by Tiptreee Book Series; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: I shall not be able to complete consideration of this matter until after the book has been published and examined.

Social Security Commissioners

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Attorney-General during 1988 how many oral hearings have been held by the social security commissioners in (a) London, (b) Edinburgh and (c) Northern Ireland; and how many non-resident commissions conducted hearings in Cardiff.

The Attorney-General: The information requested, which relates to the period 1 January to 1 February 1988, is given in the table:

Location	Oral hearings of appeals
London	28
Edinburgh	6
Northern Ireland	5

In the same period, a Commissioner sat in Cardiff for three days to deal with five oral hearings.

DNA Tests (Legal Aid)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make arrangements to ensure legal aid is made available throughout the United Kingdom to those eligible to pay for DNA tests; which area legal aid committees already accept legal aid applications for DNA costs; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: I assume that the hon. Member is referring to the use of DNA tests in immigration cases. In England and Wales, such tests may be paid for under the legal advice and assistance scheme if the area office concerned extends the normal limit for expenditure under the scheme. Extensions are normally granted for this purpose where the validity of a claimed relationship is the decisive factor in an immigration decision and DNA tests are needed to resolve any doubts about the relationship. The legal aid head office of the Law Society has issued guidance to area offices in order to promote a consistent approach. The same principles apply in Northern Ireland.

PRIME MINISTER

Official Information

Q8. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what is her policy towards setting up formal internal inquiries into the improper leaking of official information in cases where the salient facts appear to be known in advance of such an inquiry; what criteria she uses in such cases in deciding what fresh evidence an inquiry might produce and how effective a use of public funds and officials' time such an exercise is likely to prove; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The hon. Gentleman's question is based on a premise which I do not accept.

EC Budget

Q107. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if she has now finalised proposals to be put to the forthcoming meeting of the European Council on the budgetary crisis facing the EEC; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I refer my hon. Friend to the statement I made on 8 December on the outcome of the Copenhagen European Council.

Retford Hospital

Q134. Mr. Ashton: To ask the Prime Minister whether she will pay an official visit to Retford hospital.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Governor-General of New Zealand

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Prime Minister on how many occasions in the past two years Her Majesty's Government has corresponded with the Governor-General of New Zealand; and on what subjects.

The Prime Minister: None.

Economic League

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Prime Minister whether any Government Department has used the services of the Economic League since 1979, when considering applications for jobs; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I am advised by the Civil Service Commissioners who are responsible for recruitment to the higher levels of the Civil Service that they have not used the services of the Economic League. Recruitment to the more junior levels is the responsibility of Government Departments individually and details are not held centrally of recruitment schemes they operate. I am not aware, however, that any Department has used the League's services when considering applications for jobs. Civil Service recruitment at all levels is governed by the principle of fair and open competition and selection on merit.

Engagements

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 4 February.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 4 February.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 4 February.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 4 February.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 4 February.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 4 February.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 4 February.

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 4 February.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

TRANSPORT

M1 (Congestion)

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has for relieving congestion at the southern end of the M1 from Luton to junction 1.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A scheme for the improvement of junction 1 was included in the trunk road programme last year. In addition, climbing lanes are to be provided between the A41 overbridge and junction 4 and at junction 9. The M40 extension between London and Birmingham is expected substantially to relieve the M1.

Cargo Reservation

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which countries enforce cargo reservation policies that are detrimental to British shipping interests; what type, tonnage and percentage of cargoes are affected; and what remedial measures he intends to take.

Mr. David Mitchell: A wide variety of cargo reservation measures have been introduced, largely, but not exclusively, by developing countries. However these are applied with varying degrees of severity and it is impossible to quantify their impact. The most comprehensive statement of these measures is produced by the OECD maritime transport committee and its latest report is in the Commons Library.

The United Kingdom plays a major part in tackling these restrictionist policies in collaboration with our partners in the Community and through our chairmanship of the consultative shipping group.

Air Traffic

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make plans to move air traffic from the London area to regional airports.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We support the growth of air services to and from regional airports to meet demand in the regions concerned. It is not our policy that traffic wishing to fly to and from the London area should be redirected to the regions.

National Bus Company

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish a list of further disposals of National Bus Company subsidiaries since his answer to the hon. Member for Burnley of 18 December 1987, Official Report, columns 777-78.

Mr. David Mitchell: The following National Bus Company subsidiaries have been sold since 18 December 1987:

Management/employee buy out
Crosville Wales Ltd.
London Country (North West) Ltd.

Third Party Purchases
Midland Red North Ltd.
Lincolnshire Road Car Company.

In all, 59 subsidiaries have now been sold, 33 to management or employee teams.

Heavy Goods Vehicles

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how many vehicles registered within the private sector have been tested under the Department of Transport heavy goods vehicle annual test, in (a) Scotland and (b) the United Kingdom in each year since 1979; and how many vehicles have failed the test;

(2) how many vehicles registered for each public body within Scotland and the United Kingdom have been tested under the Department of Transport heavy goods vehicle annual test, in (a) Scotland and (b) the United Kingdom in each year since 1979; and how many registered public sector vehicles have failed the test.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: This information is not available. The vehicle inspectorate does not keep separate records distinguishing between private and public sectors.

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how many vehicles have failed the Department of Transport heavy goods vehicle annual test, in (a) Scotland and (b) the United Kingdom in each year since 1979;

(2) how many vehicles have been tested under the Department of Transport heavy goods vehicle annual test, in (a) Scotland and (b) the United Kingdom in each year since 1979.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The tables give the number of heavy goods vehicles first and annual tests in Great Britain and Scotland for the years 1980-81 to 1986-87 for motor vehicles and trailers. Figures prior to this date are not available.

Statistics for Northern Ireland are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Breeches Buoy Equipment

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how often the coastguard service has used breeches buoy equipment in the last five years to save life.

Mr. David Mitchell: During the five-year period, 1983-1987 inclusive, throughout the coastguard service, rescue was effected by breeches buoy equipment on two occasions.

Preston Station (Accident)

Mr. Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he proposes to take consequent upon the report on the rail accident at Preston station on 18 January 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: The Inspecting Officer of Railways concluded that the accident was caused by an error on the part of the train driver. Any further action is a matter for the British Railways Board.

Mr. Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received concerning the report of the accident at Preston station on 18 January 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: I have had no representations, but one of my hon. Friend's constituents has corresponded with the Inspecting Officer of Railways.

Mr. Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recommendations of the report on the accident at Preston station on 18 January 1986 have been implemented; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: The report made no firm recommendations, but did suggest that consideration be given to installing an audible alarm, which would sound in the signal box, if a train passes a signal at danger at the entrance to complex station or junction areas. The British Railways Board has considered this suggestion but has concluded that the work to reduce the number of signals passed at Danger that it is already undertaking will be more beneficial.

Train Drivers' Cabs

Mr. Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what advice his Department gives regarding the carriage of passengers in the driver's cab of a moving train; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: The carriage of unescorted passengers in the driving cabs of trains is prohibited under the British Railways Board's own rules. My Department fully endorses this policy.

Mr. Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to how widespread is the carrying of passengers in the driving cab of a moving train; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: Carrying of passengers in driving cabs of trains is known to occur on rare occasions. The British Railways Board takes appropriate action on these.

Double Decker Buses

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the minimum lateral stability angle required for a double decker bus.

Mr. David Mitchell: Twenty-eight degrees.

Abnormal Loads

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has made any progress in the study of the track costs and vehicle excise duty rates of vehicles used to move abnormal loads.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A report "Goods Vehicles in Restricted Tax Classes: 1986" covering the work of vehicles involved in the movement of abnormal loads has been published by the Department today. A copy has been placed in the House of Commons Library. The report shows that there are about 400 "special type" motor vehicles (generally with specialised trailers) which are used to move abnormal indivisible loads—very heavy, wide, or long. On average these vehicles cover about 16,000 miles (26,000 km) per year and have an average axle weight of over 9 tonnes when loaded. We estimate that this means they impose, on average, at least the same wear and tear on the roads as a standard 38 tonne articulated vehicle. However, the vehicle excise duty for a "special type" is £130 per year, compared with £3,100 for a five-axle 38-tonne vehicle. We are looking at how this new evidence might affect the allocation of road tract costs, with a view to ensuring that all vehicles are treated in the same way.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Standard Passport

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is the date for the introduction of the EEC standard passport; and if he will make a statement; (2) if he will estimate the total cost of replacing existing British passports with the EEC standard format passport.

Mr. Renton: Work is well advanced on plans for the introduction of a computerised system to enable British passports to be issued in the format adopted by the EEC and to be machine-readable internationally.

It is planned to commence operation of the system in the Glasgow passport office from July this year. Its phased implementation in other passport offices should be complete by the end of 1989. The cost of producing a British passport in the new format will not be greater than that of producing the existing passport. In preparing passport offices to receive and operate a computer-based system for the issue of machine-readable British passports in the format adopted by member states of the EEC, we estimate that the Home Office will incur capital expenditure of about £7 million. The overall aim of computerisation is to achieve greater efficiency in the passport-issuing process.

Juvenile Crime

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he is willing to finance to combat juvenile crime in the Easington district.

Mr. John Patten: The availability of central Government funding for measures to combat juvenile crime depends on the exact nature of the measures proposed. The report of the Home Office standing conference on crime prevention working group on juvenile crime, a copy of which is in the Library, emphasises the need for juvenile crime prevention initiatives to have a local focus and local support. It also stresses the importance of an inter-agency approach. We believe that a great deal can be achieved at local level through this approach.

Refugees

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to adopt a code of practice as proposed by Amnesty International for fair treatment of refugees in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: I shall shortly be meeting Amnesty International to discuss its proposals in detail. I have already confirmed to it that many of the proposals in the code of practice represent existing Home Office practice. The Government cannot, however, accept the principal proposal that there should be an in-country right of appeal for all applicants: as the evidence of other countries demonstrates, such a right would be likely to encourage abuse of our asylum procedures.

Interception of Communications

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number if warrants reviewed by category under the Interception of Communications Act 1985 in each year since 1985.

Mr. Hurd: The figures for the number of interception warrants issued by the Home Secretary and Secretary of State for Scotland in force on 31 December 1985 and 1986 are recorded in the table. The information was given in an annex to the report of the commissioner, the right hon. Lord Justice Lloyd, on the first year of operation of the Interception of Communications Act 1985 which was presented to Parliament in March 1987 (Cmnd. 108). I understand that the corresponding figures for 31 December 1987 are to be given in a annex to the commissioner's next annual report, which I expect my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister to present to the House shortly. I do not propose to publish statistics additional to those in the commissioner's reports.

Amusement Arcades

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to complete his assessment of the findings of the review of the present laws governing jackpot gaming machine arcades; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Our aim is to take this work forward as quickly as possible. We expect the results of this analysis to be available within the next few weeks.

Police (Leicestershire)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from the chief constable of Leicestershire concerning the level of police requirements in the county; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to his question on 2 February at column 527. I have received no separate representations from the chief constable.

Radio

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what frequency separation he anticipates will be imposed by the new Radio Authority on (a) FM and (b) AM.

Mr. Renton: This will be a matter for the radio authority to determine in assigning the frequencies allocated to it to stations which it licenses.

Demonstrations

Mr. Dicks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will institute legislation to enable the police to charge organisers of demonstrations the full cost of policing those demonstrations; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will introduce legislation to protect members of the public going about their lawful business from being inconvenienced by demonstrations on the streets of the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will introduce legislation to prohibit demonstrations on the streets of the United Kingdom by foreign nationals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The question whether organisers of demonstrations should be charged for the cost of policing them and whether demonstrations by foreign nationals should be subject to special controls, were among matters which were considered in the Government's review of public order law published in May 1985 (Cmnd. 9510). We concluded that it was neither feasible nor desirable to do so. We are satisfied that the Public Order Act 1986, which stemmed from the review, strikes the right balance between the rights of the peaceful protester and those of the wider community.

Mr. Dicks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to how many police officers, vehicles and motor cycles were needed to police the demonstration held in London on Saturday 30 January by Iraqi nationals, and as to the cost to the public purse.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the commissioner that 300 officers, 21 vehicles and 15 motor cycles were deployed in policing this demonstration at an additional cost of around £6,960.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Pen Tops

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has received any representations regarding the danger to children of asphyxiation and death from accidentally swallowing a pen top; and whether he has considered steps to seek to ban pen tops from schools.

Mrs. Rumbold: I have not received any representations on this matter, but the media coverage of one recent tragic accident will have served to alert both parents and teachers to the risks involved when pen tops or other objects are put in the mouth.

Medical Students

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list in the Official Report the number of (a) women and (b) men students recruited by all medical schools in the United Kingdom in 1984, 1985, 1986 and 1987.

Mr. Jackson: The intake of pre-clinical medical students to United Kingdom medical schools was as follows:

	Academic year starting in 1984	1985	1986	[1]1987
Men	2,311	2,224	2,258	2,246

ILEA (Education Costs)

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much it cost the Inner London education authority in 1986-87 and each of the preceding five years to educate (a) a primary school pupil and (b) a secondary school pupil for one year, broken down into (1) teaching costs, (ii) administration costs and (iii) other costs,; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Detailed figures for actual expenditure by ILEA in 1986-87 are not yet available. The table gives net recurrent institutional expenditure per primary and secondary pupil in ILEA broken down between teaching and non-teaching costs for the years 1981-82 to 1985-86. ILEA's central administration and inspection costs over the same period are shown separately per head of population.

School Leavers

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what percentage of school leavers during the academic years 1985-86 and 1986-87 had no graded examination results in (a) England, (b) the Inner London education authority, (c) Birmingham, (d) Croydon, (e) Leeds, (f) Manchester, (g) Liverpool, (h) Kingston, (i) Barnet and (j) Harrow;

(2) what percentage of all school leavers in the academic years 1985-86 and 1986-87 had at least five exam passes at grades A, B or C in O-level or grade one in CSE in (a) England, (b) the Inner London education authority, (c) Birmingham, (d) Croydon, (e) Leeds, (f) Manchester, (g) Liverpool, (h) Kingston, (i) Barnet and (j) Harrow.

Mr. Dunn: Information for the authorities requested is given in the table.

Mode 3 Examinations

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give the annual rate of increase over the last three years for the utilisation of mode 3 examinations in (a) England and Wales and (b) the Inner London education authority.

Mrs. Rumbold: This information is not held centrally.

Education Reform

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what discussions have taken place between local education authorities, voluntary bodies and business communities on the training of school governors to help them discharge their duties under the Education Reform Bill.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend is aware of a number of discussions and initiatives, which he welcomes. For its part the Department is considering with all those interested, partly through the forum of an informal working group, what steps can usefully be taken on a national basis.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether, under the provisions of the Education Reform Bill, local education authorities will be financially responsible towards teachers who have been made redundant by the governors; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: LEAs will be responsible for making redundancy payments to teachers who have been made redundant following the decision of the governing body of a school with financial delegation. It will be for governors to decide whether to offer compensation in excess of that provided for by statute or by contractual rights acquired on or before 20 November 1987. The LEA will bear the costs of the redundancy payments outside the school's delegated budget unless it has good reason to deduct them from that budget.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether, under the provisions of the Education Reform Bill, governors who, acting in good faith incur debts, will be able to ask the local education authorities to relieve them of their duties; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: In preparing their schemes of financial delegation LEAs will have to establish systems for the monitoring and audit of school budgets handled by governing bodies. LEAs should therefore be aware at an early stage of any difficulties governors may be experiencing and will be able to step in to give advice, or where appropriate, to withdraw the delegation until such time as the governors could take it on again.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether, under the provisions of the Education Reform Bill, local education authorities will be financially liable if an industrial tribunal decides that a teacher has been unfairly dismissed but that the governing body acted in good faith; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The LEA would be liable to pay compensation and costs awarded by the industrial tribunal. Where a school had financial delegation, the LEA would meet those costs outside the school's delegated budget unless it had good reason for deducting the costs from that budget. What would be a good reason would fall to be determined in the circumstances of the case.

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement about the level of parental contributions to the fees of pupils in the assisted places scheme 1988-89.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Subject to the usual consultations and to parliamentary approval, the parental contribution scales will be adjusted upwards for the school year 1988-89 as follows:

Part of relevant income to which specified percentage applies	One assisted pupil Per cent.	Each of two assisted pupils Per cent.	Each of three assisted pupils Per cent.
That part which exceeds £7,092 but does not exceed £7,711	9·00	6·75	5·25
That part (if any) which exceeds £7,711 but does not exceed £8,341	12·00	9·00	7·00
That part (if any) which exceeds £8,341 but does not exceed £9,591	15·00	11·25	8·75
That part (if any) which exceeds £9,591 but does not exceed £11,513	21·00	15·75	12·25
That part (if any) which exceeds £11,513 but does not exceed £14,023	24·00	18·00	14·00
That part (if any) which exceeds £14,023	33·00	24·75	19·25

SCOTLAND

Pig Industry

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the current level of profitability in the pig industry in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Overproduction in pigmeat within the European Community, coupled with certain difficulties on third country markets, is currently having an adverse effect on the profitability of the Scottish pig industry. The Government have taken, and will continue to seek to take, steps to improve the situation within the context of the EC pigmeat regime and the CAP generally.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report any pork processing units in Scotland which have been closed since 1979 indicating, the location of the unit and the date of closure in each case;

(2) if he will list in the Official Report every existing pork processing unit currently in operation in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Pork processing units range from large, single species plants to very small enterprises processing pork and other meats. Lists of these units are not maintained by my Department.

Pigs

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total importation to Scotland in each of the past five years of cereal replacer-substitutes for the use of pig producers.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My Department does not maintain records on the importation of cereal substitutes for incorporation in pig feed. Cereals remain the main component in Scottish pig feed rations and manioc is not currently being used in substitution.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many recent representations he has received about current difficulties being faced by pig producers in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The National Farmers Union of Scotland has recently made representations to my noble Friend the Minister of State about the overproduction of pigmeat within the European Community, which coupled with certain problems on third country markets, is currently presenting difficulties for the Scottish pig industry.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total number of people employed in pig production in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information is not available in the form requested. The table sets out the labour force (which need not be employed on pig production) on units returning pigs at the June 1987 agricultural census.

Pig size groups	Units	Total labour
1 - 2	124	312
3 - 9	99	246
10 - 19	60	159
20 - 29	44	103

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the total number of pig producers in Scotland in each of the past five years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is set out in the table.

	Total producers[1]	Total pigs
1983	1,169	442,238
1984	960	405,483
1985	933	418,465
1986	906	413,736
1987	822	425,745

Meat Production (Subsidies)

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total level of subsidy paid to on (a) red meat, (b) pig meat and (c) poultry to producers in Scotland in 1987.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The European Community operates "light" regimes in the pigmeat and poultrymeat sectors involving protection of the Community market from third country imports, but little direct support. In contrast, under the Community arrangements for supporting beef and sheep production it is estimated that in Scotland in the 1987-88 financial year £151 million will be paid.

Gaming Machines

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the latest information he has on the level of abuse of gambling or gaming machines by minors in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The findings of a research project on this issue carried out on behalf of my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary and extending to Scotland are currently being assessed.

Mr. A. Graeme Adam

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when the report on investigations into alleged fraud by Mr. A. Graeme Adam was given by Strathclyde police to the procurator fiscal; whether the report has been referred to the Lord Advocate; and when he expects action to be taken on the report.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: A report on investigations to date was made to the procurator fiscal by the police on 3 February 1988. Investigations will continue under the direction of the procurator fiscal.

Surgery (Private Sector)

Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will place in the Library a copy of the recent letter sent to Fife health board concerning financial allocations for surgical procedures to be carried out in the private sector.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I have placed a copy of the recent letter to Fife health board, concerning the additional allocations, in the House of Commons Library. Following further consideration by the board of its proposal to treat NHS patients in private hospitals, I have agreed that the board may use the resources set aside for this purpose in its own facilities.

Media (Meeting)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland for what purpose Mr. Ian Dean, the Crown Agent, was present at the meeting with representatives of broadcasting and the press in Scotland on 4 December 1987 in Edinburgh.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The meeting in question was one of the periodic dinners which my right hon. and learned Friend has, accompanied by a number of ministerial colleagues and senior civil servants, with senior broadcasting executives. The purpose of the meeting was informal discussion on a broad range of Scottish affairs.

Ophthalmology

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the waiting time for an ophthalmology out-patient appointment for every hospital in each health board.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information available is given in the table. The waiting times relate to routine cases, that is, cases where there is no indication of special urgency.

Mentally Handicapped People

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what are the numbers of mentally handicapped people in Scotland;

(2) what are the numbers of profoundly mentally handicapped people in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: It is not possible to give exact figures or reliable estimates for the numbers of people with mental handicap in Scotland since reported prevalence rates for milder degrees of mental handicap show wide variation.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Regional Aid

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what representations he has received concerning his Department's recently announced changes in regional aid to industry.

Mr. Atkins: Since the publication of the DTI White Paper on 12 January we have received several representations on aspects of regional policy which refer, amongst other things, to the changes we have made.

Schools (Industry Links)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what plans he has to strengthen schools-industry links.

Mr. Butcher: A number of measures to strengthen school-industry links were announced as part of the enterprise initiative in the White Paper "DTI — the department for Enterprise" published on 12 January 1988. Three new targets were set:

— every year, 10 per cent. of teachers should have the opportunity to gain some personal experience of the world of business

— every young person should have two or more weeks of work experience, suited to his or her ability and needs, before leaving school

— every trainee teacher should gain an appreciation of the needs of employers and the importance of links between schools and employers

The DTI will also continue to support a wide range of innovative school-employer link activities, courses and projects which promote better understanding between employers and education and the development of practical, adaptable and enterprising attitudes in young people.

Origin Marks (Harmonisation)

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he intends to have further early discussions with equivalent Ministers in the European Economic Community Council of Trade and Industry Ministers' Committee about harmonising origin marks, brand name designation, and trade marks policy in the Community.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Council of Ministers (Internal Market) discussed trade marks both in December and most recently on 2 February. Some outstanding technical problems need more consideration. I expect colleagues to be involved in further policy discussions with Community colleagues on this subject.

Debt

Mr. Stern: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he has any policy to encourage the availability of free advice on debt.

Mr. Maude: A great deal of advice and help on debt problems is already provided free of charge by citizens advice bureaux. I have encouraged the National Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux, which is funded by central Government, to seek additional funding for this specialised service from the finance industry. Two money advice support projects, one in the south-east and one in the north-west of England, are already under way as a result of private sector funding and I understand that agreement has been reached on a third major scheme which will be announced soon.

Private Nursing Homes

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the number, name and location of private nursing homes in the northern region which have received regional selective assistance or regional development grant over the last five years, together with the amount of grant payable in each case and the date upon which payment was made.

Mr. Atkins: Private nursing homes do not qualify for regional development grant. There were five offers of regional selective assistance in the northern region — Tyne and Wear, Northumberland, Durham, Cleveland and Cumbria in the five years to 31 December 1987. Details of offers made are as follows:

Name and location	Amount offered £
R. Harrison—Whitley Bay	25,000
Burnside Lodge Ltd.—Whitley Bay	40,000
Mr. and Mrs. P. Smith—Whitley Bay	10,000
Redezeus—Sunderland	25,000
John Lisle—Whitley Bay	20,000

Mergers

Mr. Darling: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list any information he has as to the major industrialised countries with mandatory pre-notification procedures for mergers; and if he will indicate above what size these procedures come into effect.

Mr. Maude: Countries with merger prenotification requirements include the United States of America, Canada, Japan and the Federal Republic of Germany. the rules are complicated but in general the requirement to prenotify applies:

in the USA, if one party has annual sales or assets of $100 million, the other party has annual sales or assets of $10 million, and as a result of the transaction the acquiring firm would hold at least $15 million or 15 per cent. of the stock of the acquired firm; in Canada, if the combined annual sales or assets of the parties exceed Can $400 million and if the value of the assets acquired exceeds $35 million; in Japan, to all pure mergers and transfers of a substantial part of a business (through a simplified procedure applies to certain small mergers where the assets of each party are less than 5 billion yen);

in the FRG, if one party to the transaction has annual sales of at least DM 2,000 million, or if both parties have annual sales of at least DM 1,000 million.

Trading Standards

Mr. Darling: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what extra resources he proposes to provide to trading standards departments to inspect equipment for use in trade.

Mr. Butcher: The rate support grant settlements for England, Scotland and Wales, approved by Parliament on 9 and 15 December 1987, make adequate provision for trading standards—consumer protection in 1988-89. It is for each local weights and measures authority to provide from the rate support grant for its trading standard department to give effect to the purposes of the Weights and Measures Act.

Trade Statistics

Mr. Darling: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list United Kingdom trade with, (a) the European Community, (b) the United States of America, and (c) the rest of the world in 1975 and 1987 at real and constant prices.

Mr. Alan Clark: Details of United Kingdom trade in current prices are as follows. Information on constant prices by geographical area is not available.

United Kingdom Trade with the European Community, the United States of America and the Rest of the World in 1975 and 1987
£ million, OTS basis

	1975		1987
	Exports	Imports	Exports	Imports
European Community	6,844	9,352	39,417	49,557
United States of America	1,810	2,362	11,014	9,136
Rest of the World	10,953	12,332	29,420	35,322

Charter Group Initiative

Mr. Darling: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the cost to his Department of becoming a full member of the Charter Group initiative; and if he will list the other members of the initiative.

Mr. Butcher: It is not possible to give the cost of the DTI becoming a full member of the Charter Group initiative since the terms for participation have not yet been agreed. More than 150 organisations have so far indicated their interest in, and intended support for, the initiative.

Enterprise Initiative

Mr. Darling: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps he intends to take to ensure that private consultants appointed using grants under the enterprise initiative are professionally competent.

Mr. Atkins: Before a consultancy practice can undertake assignments under the terms of the enterprise initiative, it must satisfy two basic criteria. First, the practice must have been established for at least two years. Second, it must provide four satisfactory business references for work undertaken on its own account. In addition, every assignment undertaken by a consultancy is closely monitored by the organisations contracted to administer the consultancy schemes. A consultancy practice that fails to deliver quality and value for money will not be used again.

Single Company Projects

Mr. Darling: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the projected budget for providing assistance to exceptional cases of single company projects offering significant national benefits.

Mr. Atkins: Assistance is available under this facility for a limited number of investment projects and research and development projects that meet the demanding criteria for support. The budget envisaged for 1988-89 is £4 million.

Government Policies (Impact on Business)

Mr. Darling: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps he intends to take to ensure that in assessing the impact on business of all of the Government's policies, he receives the views of a wide range of companies.

Mr. Atkins: Ministers and officials receive the views of companies through numerous contacts with trade organisations and individual firms. I expect these to continue, and to be helped by the steps we are taking to strengthen and extend my Department's regional office network.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps he intends to take to ensure that in assessing the impact on business of all of the Government's policies, he receives the views of the workers in small businesses.

Mr. Atkins: It is the Government's practice to consult fully on proposals for change.

Small Businesses (Employees)

Mr. Darling: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he has any plans to consult the employees of small businesses about the effect of deregulation on their working conditions.

Mr. Atkins: It is the Government's practice to consult fully on proposals for change.

Contracting-out

Mr. Darling: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list his Department's services which he is currently examining with a view to contracting-out to the private sector.

Mr. Butcher: In recent years the Department of Trade and Industry has contracted-out the majority of cleaning, laundry, catering, maintenance and security-guarding, and the position in the few examples which remain in-house is currently under review. Some financial appraisal casework and company accounts analysis has recently been market-tested; the export marketing research scheme is currently undergoing such testing; and the possibility of market testing some messengerial work is under examination.

Enterprise Counsellors

Mr. Darling: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether individuals from the private sector to be used by his Department as part of the organisation of teams of enterprise counsellors will be paid according to Civil Service pay scales; and to whom they will be responsible.

Mr. Atkins: No. Enterprise counsellors will be contracted to the Department of Trade and Industry at £70 per day plus reasonable expenses. They will be responsible directly to the DTI through its regional office network.

Manufactures

Mr. Darling: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the United Kingdom share of world trade in manufactures by value for each year since 1979.

Mr. Alan Clark: I refer the hon. Member to table E2 in the "Monthly Review of External Trade Statistics", a copy of which is in the Library.

Small Firms (Exemption from Regulations)

Mr. Darling: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster which regulations he proposes to exempt small firms from complying with as indicated in the White Paper "DTI—the department for Enterprise".

Mr. Atkins: It is the Government's policy to examine all areas of regulation to ensure that any compliance costs for business, including small businesses, are reduced to the minimum. As stated in "DTI — the department for Enterprise" further proposals for deregulation will be included in a White Paper to be published in the summer.

Consumer Protection

Mr. Darling: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what plans he has to seek to amend consumer protection legislation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: I refer the hon. Member to the replies given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Corporate Affairs to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Pollok (Mr. Dunnachie) on 18 November, at column 552 to my hon. Friend the Member for Hertfordshire, South-West (Mr. Page) on 16 December at column 540 and to the hon. Member for Cardiff, South and Penarth (Mr. Michael) on 13 January at column 315.

We are also considering proposals for revised regulations on pyramid selling and for amending the Unsolicited Goods and Services Acts. The Government intend to repeal the Trade Descriptions Act 1972 by replacing it with a new order under the Trade Descriptions Act 1968 in order to introduce new requirements on the origin marking of goods.

Regulations made under the Consumer Protection Act 1987 (which includes a general safety requirement for consumer goods) and its predecessors will be kept under continuous review with the aim of revising, revoking or adding to them where this is necessary, to provide specific protection to consumers. In particular, the House will be aware of my hon. Friend's statement on 11 January about regulations on the flammability of domestic upholstered furniture.

Microgravity Research

Mr. Stott: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he intends to increase the funding of microgravity research in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Atkins: The Government have no intention at present to increase the funding of microgravity research in the United Kingdom. Any proposals for research in this field will be considered on their merits in competition with other demands on resources.

Earth Observation

Mr. Stott: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the Government's interest in Earth observation, whether by means of the polar platform or a number of smaller satellites.

Mr. Atkins: Proposals for developing earth observation satellites such as the polar platform in the earth observation field are under consideration.

Space Policy

Mr. Stott: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the recommendations contained in the House of Lords Select Committee on Science and Technology's report on a United Kingdom space policy.

Mr. Atkins: The Government are considering the report and a reply will be given to the House of Lords Select Committee in due course.

RADARSAT

Mr. Stott: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what plans he has for bilateral collaboration with (a) the United States of America and (b) Canada in space development of RADARSAT.

Mr. Atkins: Proposals for bilateral collaboration on RADARSAT are under consideration.

Radio and Electronic Equipment

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, what has been the level of exports of radio and electronic equipment suitable for military use to (a) Israeli and (b) Palestinian destinations over each of the last four years.

Mr. Alan Clark: Information on such exports to countries in the middle east could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Proofing of Guns

Mr. Key: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he has any plans to regulate the arrangements for the proofing of guns; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: Gun barrel proofing is already closely regulated by legislation dating back to the Gun Barrel Proof Act 1868, and I do not consider further regulation necessary. On the contrary, I am currently consulting on a modest measure of deregulation, to enable the proof houses to set their own charges independently of Government.

Information Technology

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will give the balance of trade figures for information technology for each year from 1979.

Mr. Butcher: The available information is given in the table.

Information Technology and Electronics Industries[1]

Airbus

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the nature and extent of Her Majesty's Government's commitment to the Airbus project; and what is the total sum so far committed to the project by way of grants or loans to (a) British Aerospace plc and (b) other companies and bodies.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 1 February 1988]: Her Majesty's Government are committed to promote the success of Airbus Industrie projects which are the subject of its arrangements with those Governments. Under principles of co-operation established in 1978 with the Governments of France and Germany, Her Majesty's Government fully support British Aerospace's participation in Airbus Industrie and stand behind the discharge by British Aerospace of its financial obligations to Airbus Industrie.

The Government will provide up to £700 million in launch aid to enable British Aerospace to participate in the A320 and A330-A340 projects.

In addition, £60 million launch aid has been paid to Rolls-Royce in connection with the development of the V2500 engine, which is intended for use with Airbus aircraft: and a total of approximately £4·25 million has been made available in selective financial assistance to suppliers of equipment to the Airbus programme.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Fiji

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has had any recent representations from groups in Britain about the situation in Fiji; and if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's present attitude to the Fijian Government.

Mr. Eggar: We have received virtually no such representations recently. We welcome the move from a military Government to a predominantly civilian Government in Fiji, which we hope will be a step towards a return to parliamentary democracy and constitutional government.

India ("Panorama" Programme)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has received any representations from the High Commissioner for India concerning the recent "Panorama" programme about the Indian Government, shown on BBC1 on 18 January; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tim Eggar: No. The BBC has full editorial responsibility for the programmes it broadcasts.

Royal Prerogative

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if pursuant to his answer of 1 February, he will provide the information on the exercise of the royal prerogative requested in respect of Hong Kong.

Mr. Eggar: The constitutional arrangements for Hong Kong are set out in letters patent and royal instructions, which are issued from time to time in exercise of the royal prerogative. The Governor of Hong Kong exercises his powers in accordance with letters patent and royal instruction and any other laws in force in the colony.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, pursuant to his answer of 1 February, he will provide the information on the exercise of the royal prerogative requested in respect of the Falkland Islands.

Mr. Eggar: Under the Falkland Islands Constitution Order 1985, the executive authority of the Falkland Islands is, subject to the constitution and any other law, exercised on behalf of Her Majesty by the governor either directly or through officers subordinate to him. The governor is obliged by the terms of the constitution to act in accordance with any instructions which Her Majesty may from time to time give him through a Secretary of State.

THE ARTS

Library Services

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Minister for the Arts what plans he has for the privatisation of local authority library services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: I have no plans for the privatisation of these services. However, I hope to provide new opportunities to help public libraries to find additional resources for improving their services by allowing them to charge for a wider range of additional and specialised services, perhaps in partnership with the private sector, and by encouraging them to contract-out parts of their operations. I shall shortly be issuing a consultative paper on how this might best be done.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Smoke Detectors

Ms. Walley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether, in the light of recent announcements about the dangers of foam in domestic furniture, he will consider zero-rating smoke detectors for value added tax purposes.

Mr. Lilley: No. The case for zero-rating smoke detectors cannot be considered in isolation from many other equally deserving candidates for special treatment. To grant relief from VAT in all these cases would be unacceptably expensive in revenue terms and would in the long run undermine the broad-based nature of the tax.

Inflation

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which are his latest prospects for the inflation rate in 1988.

Mr. Lilley: The forecast in the Autumn Statement was that inflation would be 4½ per cent. in the fourth quarter of 1988. My right hon. Friend will present a new forecast at Budget time in the usual way.

"Adjustment With a Human Face"

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what consideration he has given to the United Nations Children's Fund's recent study entitled "Adjustment With a Human Face", a copy of which has been forwarded to him; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: The IMF recognises the need to take full account of the effect of structural adjustment on the poor and we shall continue to encourage this both at the policy design stage and when new programmes are implemented. It is important to recognise that in many cases adjustment policies are in fact of direct benefit to the very poorest groups in developing countries — the rural poor. One important example of this is increasing the artificially low prices farmers receive for their crops—which often both directly improves income distribution and encourages more domestic food production. Structural adjustment measures such as this are essential in the poorest countries if they are to achieve better economic growth, and thus better living conditions for all, including the poorest.

EMPLOYMENT

MSC (London Docklands)

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what have been the main activities and projects of the Manpower Services Commission in London docklands over the last six years; and what have been the practical results.

Mr. Cope: In London docklands over the last six years, the Manpower Services Commission has made available its full range of programmes, including YTS, adult training schemes and the community programme. Practical results through specific activities have included an integrated recruitment and training package for fire officers at the new airport; provision of literacy-numeracy, language and job preparation courses to help develop basic skills and community programme projects including environmental improvements, house insulation, and work to benefit leisure activities and the development of tourism.

Childcare Payment System

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the latest total amount paid out under the job training service childcare payment system.

Mr. Cope: Child care payments for single parents who participate in the new job training scheme were introduced, on a pilot basis, in 10 areas on 1 September 1987. Up to the end of January 1988, £4,000 had been paid under these arrangements.

ENERGY

British Coal

Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on British Coal's external financing limit for 1987-88.

Mr. Michael Spicer: British Coal's external financing limit for 1987-88 has been increased from £842 million to £920 million to reflect higher redundancy costs. This reflects a higher rate of colliery closure and manpower rundown than originally envisaged. These costs will increase the corporation's deficit. A Supplementary Estimate to enable the Government to contribute towards the additional deficit and restructuring costs will be submitted to Parliament shortly.

The increase in external financing limit is being charged to the reserve and will not add to the public expenditure planning total.

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if he will give the expenditure plans for British Coal for the purchase of mining machinery for each of the next three years;

(2) if he will give the breakdown of mining machinery purchased from (a) British and (b) foreign companies by British Coal in each of the last three years and in the current year and, where known, planned to be purchased over each of the next three years.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is a management matter for British Coal. I am asking the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

ENVIRONMENT

Nature Reserves

76. Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many farmers presently farm in national nature reserves.

Mr. Moynihan: No detailed record is kept of the number of farmers within national nature reserves and this information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, I shall shortly be able to let the hon. Member have the details of tenure requested in his question of 19 January at column 602.

Water Boards (Bonuses)

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will introduce as a criteria for determining bonus payments to water authority boards a measurement of success in improving the quality of the water supply;

(2) what are the criteria used to determine bonus payments to water authority chairmen;

(3) what is his policy on bonus payments to water authority chairmen; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: A performance bonus scheme for water authority chairmen and executive board members was introduced in 1986-87 to provide a financial incentive for the participants to achieve exceptional corporate results in relation to targets agreed with Government. Bonuses from 5 to 15 per cent. were paid for meeting or exceeding the authorities' agreed performance aims. I will be considering what form the scheme should take in 1988-89.

Low-cost Housing

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to improve the supply of low-cost housing in rural and in rural development areas.

Mrs. Roe: The White Paper published last September (Housing: The Government's Proposals, Cm. 214) set out the Government's proposals for housing generally including proposals to expand the housing association programme which provides low-cost homes for rent and other tenure in rural and urban areas.

We are currently considering whether any further measures, designed specifically to help rural areas, are needed.

Water Authority Employees

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what information he has on how many hours per week and days per year water authority chairmen and executives have worked on average, for each of the last 10 years;

(2) what information he has on how many hours per week and days per year on average the chairmen have worked in each water authority in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Moynihan: All executive members of regional water authorities hold full-time appointments. The basis on which chairmen have held office over the last 10 years, as a percentage of full time, is as follows:

Anglian—1979-80: 70 per cent., 1983-88:[1] 80 per cent.
Northumbrian—1979-88: 50 per cent.
North West—1979-88: 80 per cent.
Severn Trent—1979-88: 80 per cent.
Southern—1979-84: 70 per cent., 1985-88: 80 per cent.
South West — 1979-80: 50 per cent., 1981-86: 70 per cent., 1987-88:[2] 100 per cent.
Thames—1979-88: 80 per cent.
Wessex — 1979-82: 50 per cent., 1983-84: 70 per cent., 1985-88: 80 per cent.
Yorkshire—1979-84: 70 per cent., 1985-88: 90 per cent.

[1] Between June 1986 and March 1987, 100 per cent.
[2] Since 1987 also acts as chief executive.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many hours per week a water authority (a) employee, (b) chairman and (c) executive must work to be classified as part-time.

Mr. Moynihan: Water authority board appointments are considered to be part-time when the duties can be discharged satisfactorily for a normal input of less than an average working week. The terms of appointment by water authorities are a matter for the authorities themselves.

Exmoor National Park Committee

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to announce the names of those appointed or reappointed to the Exmoor national park committee.

Mr. Moynihan: I shall be writing to the individuals concerned shortly. I will thereafter, in accordance with normal practice, be announcing the names of those appointed or reappointed and at that stage I will write to my hon. Friend — and other hon. Members with a constituency interest in national parks—with details of the outcome of the appointments round.

Harecastle Tunnel

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about the legality of work proposed to be carried out by the British Waterways Board at Harecastle tunnel, near Stoke-on-Trent; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: I have received a letter about the Harecastle tunnel from another hon. Member, to whom I shall be replying shortly. It is for the board to satisfy itself as to the legality of its actions.

Mineral Workings and Derelict Land

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects the next surveys of mineral workings and of derelict land in England to be carried out.

Mr. Trippier: These two surveys will be undertaken in 1988, with a base date of 1 April. The survey forms were sent out early in January. Local authorities will have up to nine months, from January to September, in which to complete the survey tables for their respective areas. We hope the results of the surveys will be published in summer 1989.

Estate Agents

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will implement the proposal made in his Department's consultation paper of July 1986 to limit the maximum permitted size of estate agents' boards to 0·2 sq m; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: The consultation paper of July 1986 invited comment on a proposal to limit the maximum permitted area of estate agents' boards on residential property to 0·2 sq m. Subsequently, my right hon. Friend concluded that the maximum permitted area should be 0·5 sq m, for a single board advertising the sale or letting of residential property—a reduction of 75 per cent. in the present maximum permitted area (2 sq m). My right hon. Friend laid amending regulations (The Town and Country Planning (Control of Advertisements) (Amendment No. 2) Regulations 1987, SI 1987/2227) on 8 January, subject to the negative resolution procedure. The main provisions relating to estate agents' boards are to take effect on 28 October.

Water Supplies (Disconnections)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what notice is given to householders when a water supply is disconnected; what authority water authorities have to obtain prior to such disconnection; and what is the average delay in securing reconnections.

Mr. Moynihan: The water industry operates a code of practice designed to ensure that customers in financial difficulties are not cut off if an alternative solution can be found. If disconnection is unavoidable, the general statutory authority (section 38 of the Water Act 1945), empowers water undertakers to cut off supplies if charges have not been paid within seven days of being demanded unless the customer has disputed the bill or the supply is to a tenant whose landlord is in default. Undertakers must notify the local authority within 48 hours of cutting off the supply to an inhabited house. When the householder requests disconnections, he must give the undertaker 24 hours notice. Section 80 of the third schedule to the Water Act 1945 requires undertakers, before they begin works which will interfere with the supply of water (except in emergencies), to give reasonable notice to consumers.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many households in the United Kingdom in each of the last five years have had water supplies disconnected; and how many of those households included (a) retirement pensioners, (b) the unemployed, (c) young children, (d) invalidity benefit recipients and (e) single parents with young children;

(2) what have been the main reasons causing water to be disconnected from households over the last five years; and what charge is made to householders to reconnect water supplies.

Mr. Moynihan: The numbers of households in England disconnected by water authorities for reasons of non-payment in each of the last five years is as set out:

	Number
1983-84	2,521
1984-85	2,052
1985-86	4,212
1986-87	6,450

Information for 1982-83 or details of the type of household involved is not available centrally. Water authority charges for reconnection in such cases ranges from £24 to £42 in 1987-88. Disconnection in other parts of the United Kingdom are matters for the Secretaries of State for Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland.

Crown Suppliers

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent representations he has received about the future of the Crown Suppliers within the public sector; what his response has been; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: I refer the hon. Member to my statement on 3 February.

Town and Country Planning

Mr. Kirkhope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the Town and Country Planning General Development Order 1977 and its various amendments are to be consolidated.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have already published consultation papers on the amendment and consolidation of the minerals classes of the general development order on 30 July 1986 and of class I (Householders' development) on 6 January 1987. My right hon. Friend and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales are issuing today a further consultation paper with drafts of provisions amending and consolidating the remaining classes and articles of the order. The new order and planning applications regulations would also incorporate the provisions of the related special development orders which govern development in national parks, areas of outstanding natural beauty, and conservation areas.

Our main objective is to provide a clearer, simpler text which will be more easily understood. The order and regulations would replace 13 existing orders and amendments. We are also publishing a draft guide which consolidates material in eight extant circulars about the order.

We are also taking the opportunity to make a number of changes to the provisions of the order, including:

—removal of the power enabling local highway authorities to direct local planning authorities how to decide planning applications which would affect classified roads. Instead, the local highway authority would have the right to be consulted by the planning authority before the decision is made.

— introduction of control over the development of livestock units within 400 metres of non-agricultural buildings.

— general permission for certain changes of use, in particular, to allow premises now used for the financial and professional services class of the Use Classes Order 1987 and which have a display window at ground level to be used within the shops class.

—restriction of the requirement to consult the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (or, in Wales, the Welsh Office) to applications involving 20 hectares or more of agricultural land of grades 1, 2 and 3a.

Copies of the consultation paper and annexes have been placed in the Library. There is a two-month period for comment, after which we hope it will be possible to proceed within a short time to lay the new order and regulations.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales will be issuing a similar consultation paper.

Rates (Summonses)

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what figures he has on the numbers of the issue of summonses for the alleged non-payment of rates to households which have already paid their rates in London boroughs over the most recent period for which figures are available, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope [pursuant to his answer, 28 January 1988, c. 375]: The figure given for the number of summonses for non-payment of rates issued by Greater London boroughs in 1986-87 was incorrect. The correct figure is 183,962.

Rating Reform

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will reproduce the figures in figure four of his Department's note on the relationship between local taxes and income and the distributional impact of the community charge on the basis that 1986-87 is year one and including the net safety net effect.

Mr. Howard: The figures asked for are set out in the table. For ease of reference, the comparable table for the present system (figure 1 of the published note) is reprinted below.

[1] The transitional safety net arrangements were announced on 17 November 1987.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment to what factors he attributes the variations in increases in gross and net rates for each income band between 1984-85, as in annex F of "Paying for Local Government", and 1986-87, as in his Department's note on the relationship between local taxes and income and the distributional impact of the community charge.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 3 February 1988]: In general, the increases in net and gross domestic rate bills are much as expected in the light of the average increases in rates between 1984-85 and 1987-88. Rate increases have not been uniform over the period, however. Outside London rates have increased by nearly 40 per cent. while in inner London, mainly as a result of the successful application of rate capping, rates have reduced by 7 per cent. This variation might explain in part the small differences in rate increases for bands of household income over £250 per week. Average incomes in the Greater London area are about 20 per cent. higher than the national average.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Perry Barr (Mr. Rooker), Official Report, 25 January, columns 37-38, (a) which equivalent income scale was used to derive the tables on the relationship between charges and income (b) how many (i) over-18's and (ii) people in total he estimates to be in each income band, (c) what margin of error applies to the figures, (d) whether the poll-tax figures include the safety net effect and (e) if he will reproduce the tables on the decile basis used in his reply to the hon. Member for Warrington, North (Mr. Hoyle) on 16 December 1987, Official Report, column 522.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 3 February 1988]: The basis for adjusting household incomes to equivalent incomes is that described in paragraph F14 of the Green Paper "Paying for Local Government," Cmnd. 9714. The estimated total population and numbers of adults in each equivalent income band is shown in the table. The community charge estimates used for the purpose of my answer of 25 January were those for the full implementation of the community charge published on 29 June, and therefore exclude the effect of the transitional safety net proposals. I have repeatedly pointed out that the estimates of the impact of our proposals are based on a sample survey and are subject to sampling errors. The confidence intervals attaching to these estimates will vary with each estimate. The estimates of the relative contributions of those in the top and bottom deciles of household income to local services were not produced from the tax benefit model. The note of 25 January could be produced from the model on a decile basis only at disproportionate cost.

DEFENCE

Exercise Bonnie Dundee

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the purpose of Exercise Bonnie Dundee; on what dates and in what locations it is scheduled to take place; what units are involved; and how many troops will participate.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Exercise Bonnie Dundee is a home defence exercise to be held in Scotland between 22 October and 2 November 1988. It is designed to test progress in military home defence planning since Exercise Brave Defender which took place in 1985. It is too early to provide further details of the exercise since plans have not yet been settled.

RAF Stornoway

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) whether any plans exist to alter his Department's commitment to limit the peacetime use of RAF Stornoway for military exercises to six weeks per year; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many weeks of military air exercises it is planned to conduct at RAF Stornoway in 1988.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him by my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces on 24 July 1987 at column 595. There are no plans to alter my Department's commitment to limit the peacetime use of RAF Stornoway for military exercises to six weeks per year.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what use will be made of RAF Stornoway in Exercise JMC 88-1.

Mr. Ian Stewart: None is planned.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if flying operations from RAF Stornoway by Falcon aircraft of Flight Refuelling Ltd. and Hunter aircraft from the fleet requirements and air direction unit will count towards the permitted maximum six weeks of military exercises each year at RAF Stornoway.

Mr. Ian Stewart: No.

Exercise ASWEX 1-88

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what use will be made of RAF Stornoway in Exercise ASWEX 1-88.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Routine use, amounting to a small number of daylight transfers of stores and personnel by military helicopters, will be made of the civil facilities at Stornoway airport during Exercise ASWEX 1-88.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what use will be made of Benbecula airport during Exercise ASWEX 1-88.

Mr. Ian Stewart: During Exercise ASWEX 1-88 Benbecula airport will perform its usual functon as an air traffic control point. In addition, there may be one daylight transfer of personnel, involving military aircraft.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what naval activity will be conducted in the Minch and the waters around the Western Isles during Exercise ASWEX 1-88; and what consultations have taken place with fishermen's organisations.

Mr. Ian Stewart: ASWEX 1-88 is a routine naval exercise involving a small number of units. There will be little activity in the Minches and the waters around the Western Isles during the exercise. It is not our normal practice to consult fishermen's organisations about relatively minor exercises of this nature, and we did not do so on this occasion.

RAF Aird Uig, Lewis

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the function of the ship-to-shore and shore-to-ship communication systems being installed at RAF Aird Uig, Lewis; and what increase in (a) Royal Air Force, (b) Royal Navy, (c) United States and (d) civilian personnel working at the station will result from their introduction.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The communications system to be installed at RAF Aird Uig will form part of the improved United Kingdom air defence ground environment system. Up to a maximum of six additional RAF technicians will be required at RAF Stornoway to maintain the facility. No other personnel will be involved.

Air-sea Rescue

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Royal Navy or Royal Air Force air-sea rescue sorties were carried out in 1987 to assist (a) foreign merchant ships, (b) foreign military vessels including NATO forces, and (c) foreign trawlers, sailcraft and other vessels.

Mr. Freeman: The following sorties were flown in 1987 by United Kingdom-based Royal Navy and Royal Air Force search and rescue helicopters to assist:

	Number
(a) Foreign merchant ships	38
(b) Foreign military vessels including NATO forces	4
(c) Foreign fishing vessels	37
(d) Foreign pleasure craft	5

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Royal Navy or Royal Air Force air-sea rescue sorties were flown in 1987 to assist (a) Royal Navy ships, (b) British merchant ships and ferries and (c) British trawlers, sailcraft or other vessels.

Mr. Freeman: The following sorties were flown in 1987 by United Kingdom based Royal Navy and Royal Air Force search and rescue helicopters to assist:

	Number
(a) Royal Navy shipping	11
(b) British merchant shipping, including ferries	57
(c) British fishing vessels	83
(d) British pleasure craft	127

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Royal Navy or Royal Air Force air-sea rescue operations were flown in 1987 to rescue (a) British military aircrew, (b) NATO aircrew, (c) British civilian aircrew and (d) other foreign military or civilian aircrew.

Mr. Freeman: Information is not held in the precise form requested. Assistance was provided in 1987 by United Kingdom-based Royal Navy and Royal Air Force search and rescue helicopters as follows:

	Incidents
(a) British military aircraft	97
(b) United States Military aircraft	6
(c) British civilian aircraft	19

There were an additional 49 call-outs to assist aircraft in distress in which the nationality of the aircraft was not recorded.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Royal Navy or Royal Air Force air-sea rescue sorties were carried out to rescue mountaineers or were in support of other domestic civilian emergency operations.

Mr. Freeman: A total of 418 sorties were flown in 1987 by United Kingdom based Royal Navy and Air Force search and rescue helicopters to assist civilian personnel on land.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many rescue sorties were carried out by Royal Navy and Royal Air Force air-sea rescue service outside British territorial waters in 1987.

Mr. Freeman: The United Kingdom's responsibility for search and rescue extends well beyond territorial waters, and separate figures are not held for incidents outside those waters. International co-operation is an important feature of search and rescue and from time to time assistance is given by United Kingdom-based Royal Navy and Royal Air Force search and rescue aircraft in areas which are the responsibility of other nations, but, again, these are not recorded centrally.

A total of 93 search and rescue sorties were flown in 1987 by Royal Air Force search and rescue helicopters based overseas, of which 51 were to military incidents and 42 to civilian incidents. Records are not kept centrally of rescue sorties carried out by aircraft embarked in Royal Navy ships.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many rescue sorties were carried out by the Royal Navy air-sea rescue service in 1987.

Mr. Freeman: In 1987, a total of 349 search and rescue sorties were flown by United Kingdom-based Royal Navy search and rescue helicopters.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many training, rescue or other sorties were carried out by Royal Navy and Royal Air Force air-sea rescue services in 1987.

Mr. Freeman: In 1987 the United Kingdom-based Royal Navy and Royal Air Force search and rescue helicopters flew 1,494 search and rescue sorties. Information on training sorties is not held centrally.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many civilian personnel have been rescued by Royal Navy and Royal Air Force air-sea rescue services in 1987.

Mr. Freeman: In 1987, a total of 903 civilian personnel were rescued by United Kingdom-based Royal Navy and Royal Air Force search and rescue helicopters.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many military personnel have been rescued by Royal Navy and Royal Air Force air-sea rescue services in 1987.

Mr. Freeman: In 1987 a total of 54 military personnel were rescued by United Kingdom-based Royal Navy and Royal Air Force search and rescue helicopters.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many rescue sorties were carried out by the Royal Air Force air-sea rescue service in 1987.

Mr. Freeman: In 1987, a total of 1,145 search and rescue sorties were flown by United Kingdom-based Royal Air Force search and rescue helicopters.

Weather Satellites

Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans to transfer weather satellites to the private sector.

Mr. Sainsbury: No. The Ministry of Defence has no weather satellites of its own. The United Kingdom is one of 19 participating nations in the European Organisation for the Exploitation of Meteorological Satellites (EUMETSAT). Each nation is represented by its national meteorological service. In addition, the Meteorological Office is involved with United States Government agencies in research, development and provision of certain types of sounding instruments for installation on United States polar-orbiting satellites, the data from which are beneficial to Meterological Office forecasting. Private industry is making some contribution to this instrument development programme in the expectation of industrial benefits from the production of further units. Basic satellite and other global weather observations are collected and exchanged internationally free of charge under the auspices of the World Meteorological Organisation; direct private sector participation would therefore not be appropriate.

Exercise Purple Warrior

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many weapons were lost during Exercise Purple Warrior and remain unaccounted for; and where they were lost.

Mr. Ian Stewart: No weapons were reported as having been lost during Exercise Purple Warrior.

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many ferries used in Exercise Purple Warrior were chartered from (a) Denmark and (b) West Germany.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Four ferries were chartered from Denmark and two from West Germany.

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost of the arrangement to charter ferries from (a) Denmark and (b) West Germany for use in Exercise Purple Warrior.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Clackmannan (Mr. O'Neill) on 16 November 1987 at column 458.

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many ferries were chartered for Exercise Purple Warrior.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Nine.

Women's Royal Voluntary Service

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Women's Royal Voluntary Service personnel have been assisting the Army for each year since 1979.

Mr. Freeman: The number of Women's Royal Voluntary Service personnel who have been employed in work assisting the Army in each year from 1979 to 1987 is as follows:

	Number
1979	32
1980	35
1981	38
1982	36
1983	34
1984	32
1985	32
1986	26
1987	21

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what funding has been provided by his Department for Women's Royal Voluntary Service personnel attached to Army units for each year since 1979.

Mr. Freeman: The amount of funding provided by the Ministry of Defence to the Women's Royal Voluntary Service in the years from 1979 to 1987 has been as follows:

1979	59,250
1980	67,575
1981	67,200
1982	76,218
1983	85,000
1984	96,000
1985	130,944
1986	92,204
1987	100,717

Army Barracks (Food and Accommodation Costs)

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on how many occasions food and accommodation charges for soldiers living in barracks have risen since 1979.

Mr. Freeman: Eight. Food and accommodation charges are included in the Armed Forces Pay Review Body's annual recommendations on pay and allowances for the services. However, in 1979 the Government imposed a standstill on accommodation charges pending further examination of the basis of the charges by the review body.

Royal Naval Chaplains

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence why Royal Naval chaplains do not wear badges of rank.

Mr. Freeman: Naval chaplains are commissioned as such rather than as naval officers, and hence do not wear badges of rank.

DROPS

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence why the Scammell (Leyland/DAF) DROPS was chosen by his Department.

Mr. Sainsbury: The vehicle was selected as a result of a competitive exercise from 1982 to 1985 involving detailed engineering and other assessments together with extended troop and associated trials by the Army and the Department's research and development authorities.

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what different tyre sizes were tried on the original DROPS trailer vehicle 18 months ago.

Mr. Sainsbury: None.

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the Scammell (Leyland/DAF) DROPS achieved a lateral stability of 28 degrees plus in trials.

Mr. Sainsbury: No.

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether DROPS is air portable.

Mr. Sainsbury: No.

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he intends to review the decision to procure the Scammell (Leyland/DAF) DROPS.

Mr. Sainsbury: No. Like all major equipment projects, the DROPS programme as a whole will continue to be subject to regular review in the normal way.

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what design changes have been made to the chassis of the original DROPS trailer equipment; and by how much this has raised the vehicle's centre of gravity.

Mr. Sainsbury: None.

Royal Navy Ships

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list by year of construction each ship in the Royal Navy 20 or more years old, giving both name and type of vessel.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The following Royal Naval ships, listed by the year their construction was completed, are 20 or more years old.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Free Food

14. Mr. Litherland: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the latest situation regarding the operation of the European Community free food scheme.

Mr. Gummer: My right hon. Friend announced on 12 January that butter and beef would be made available, subject to Commission authorisation, in response to applications from charitable or non-profit-making organisations meeting appropriate conditions. Agriculture Departments have invited applications by a closing date of 29 February. These will be considered together, and scaled down if necessary to fit the finance available.

28. Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what consultations he has had with organisations eligible for operating the EC free food scheme.

Mr. Gummer: I and my Department have kept in close touch with the main charitable organisations at every stage in the evolution of the scheme.

When it became clear that organisations other than charities would be eligible to participate in this scheme, although they had been excluded by the European Community from the previous scheme, I made sure that they, too, were informed.

75. Mr. Ashton: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will make a further statement on the distribution of surplus Common Market food.

Mr. Gummer: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer given earlier today to the hon. Member for Manchester, Central (Mr. Litherland).

EC Agricultural Commissioner

15. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the European Economic Community's Agricultural Commissioner; and what was discussed.

Mr. MacGregor: I last met the Commissioner for Agriculture, Mr. Andriessen, at the Agriculture Council on 23-24 January, the outcome of which I reported to the House in reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Wansdyke (Mr. Aspinwall).

Inshore Fishing

16. Mr. McKelvey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent representations he has received from sea anglers' associations about inshore fishing undertaken by commercial fishing vessels.

Mr. Gummer: I have received no recent representations from sea anglers' associations about inshore fishing undertaken by commercial fishing vessels, although sea anglers' associations have raised other issues such as the management of the bass fishery.

Intervention Stocks

20. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will estimate the subsequent effect on intervention stocks of the agreement of the Council of Agriculture Ministers in December 1986.

Mr. MacGregor: Largely as a result of the reforms to the EC dairy regime agreed under the United Kingdom presidency in December 1986, and the associated accelerated disposal programme for existing stocks, EC stocks of butter at the end of November 1987 were 974,000 tonnes, 31 per cent. down on their level in December 1986. Stocks of skimmed milk powder at the end of November 1987 were 592,000 tonnes, 34 per cent. down on those in December 1986. United Kingdom intervention stocks of butter were down 36 per cent. and stocks of skimmed milk powder down 88 per cent. over the same period.

In the period from 6 April 1987, when the reforms to the beef regime came into effect, to the end of 1987, EC purchases were 396,500 tonnes, 19 per cent. down on the same period in 1986. Broadly proportionate reductions occurred in the United Kingdom. EC intervention stocks in 1987, however, built up to higher levels than those obtaining in 1986 because of substantially lower sales from intervention for export.

Pesticides

21. Mr. Vaz: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he will take to ensure that there is an increase in the scope of monitoring to test foodstuffs for pesticides residues.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Existing monitoring, consisting of surveys targeted at potential problem areas, and the examination of residues in the average national diet, has been supplemented since last year by regular surveys of the dietary staples — milk, bread and potatoes. Later this year we shall be introducing statutory maximum residue limits for the most important primary food components of the United Kingdom diet in addition to implementing obligatory EC limits in and on cereals and animal products. Financial provision will be sought in the Supply Estimates for 1988-89 to increase resources to allow for extra monitoring arising from this legislation.

29. Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make available for public scrutiny the evaluations of pesticides still in use, and those no longer marketed but prepared under the former voluntary pesticides safety and precautions scheme.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The arrangements under the Control of Pesticides Regulations 1986 for making evaluations on pesticides publicly available apply to those evaluations produced for newly approved pesticides and for reviews of existing ones.

My Department responds to specific queries about pesticides registered under the pesticides safety precautions scheme. However a large number of active ingredients were involved over nearly 30 years, and many are of limited current interest. The priority given to this activity depends both on the availability of data and the nature of the concern expressed.

54. Mr. Michael: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he hopes to respond to the Select Committee on Agriculture's report on the effect of pesticides on health.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The agreed report of the Agriculture Committee dealt, in very brief terms, with the reason why, because of the general election, it had been unable to complete its inquiry. In these circumstances, the Government believe that it would be inappropriate to offer any formal response to the agreed report.

Departments are, however, considering the individual conclusions and recommendations contained in the draft report of my hon. Friend the Member for Holland with Boston (Sir R. Body), which, although not agreed by the Agriculture Committee, was published as an appendix to the main report. The independent Advisory Committee on Pesticides (ACP) has already seen the draft report and certain points raised in it will be considered in the first instance by the relevant panels supporting the ACP.

63. Mr. Moss: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress has been made in controlling the supply and use of pesticides.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Dumfries (Sir H. Monro) on 28 January as regards the controls on use, introduced under the Control of Pesticides Regulations 1986.

As far as supply is concerned, the following controls have been implemented with effect from 6 October 1986.

only approved pesticides may be sold or supplied;

suppliers must take all reasonable precautions to protect human health, animals, plants and the environment;

suppliers must be competent for the duties they are to perform;

pesticides may only be supplied to the end user in approved containers and under approved labels.

As from I January 1988, anyone selling or supplying a pesticide approved for use in agriculture, horticulture or forestry must hold a recognised certificate of competence or be supervised by a certificate holder.

72. Mr. Morgan: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures he has taken to ensure that there is increased public awareness of the legal controls on the use of pesticides and of individuals' responsibilities.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Since the introduction of the Control of Pesticides Regulations 1986, a series of press releases have been issued drawing attention to particular aspects of the new controls. In addition, my Department has to date distributed some 200,000 copies of the leaflet "Pesticides — Guide to the new controls" which will continue to be made available.

The Ministry's publicity efforts have not been carried out in isolation. Many sections of the industry are helping to get the message across.

Water Quality (Intensive Farming)

22. Ms. Walley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what initiatives he proposes to ensure water quality is not harmed in areas of intensive farming.

Mr. Gummer: As well as a wide range of other activities through which my Department aims to reduce farm pollution, I have this week launched a campaign to increase awareness among farmers of the problem of nitrate pollution and how they can help to reduce it.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has held recently with farmers' representatives concerning water quality in areas of intensive farming.

Mr. Gummer: I am in frequent contact with farmers' representatives to discuss a wide range of issues, including the possible effect of intensive farming on water quality.

Eastern Bloc Klondykers

23. Mr. Graham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions his Department has held regarding the location of eastern bloc Klondykers in, or close to, United Kingdom fishing ports in the current year.

Mr. Gummer: Other Departments, relevant sections of the fishing industry and other local interests have been consulted where appropriate.

Nutrition Labelling

24. Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether there have been any developments in the European Commission's plan for a Community system of voluntary nutrition labelling.

Mr. Donald Thompson: We still await the Commission's proposals on nutrition labelling of foods, which were due to be issued by the end of 1987. In the meantime we have issued our own guidelines and we are pressing for widespread adoption as a result of the revise circulated on 21 January.

46. Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he expects to introduce further proposals for the declaration of nutritional information on food products.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Revised guidelines for a standard approach to voluntary nutrition declarations were issued on 21 January, Official Report, column 836. I am pressing for widespread adoption by food manufacturers and retailers. Proposals for legislation to set out the form in which voluntary declarations must be given will be considered once we have experience of the operation of the system and European Community intentions on nutrition labelling are clearer. We are looking at the need for simple graphical or representational systems to supplement numerical declarations, and at the need for controls to prevent misleading claims for nutrient content undermining the value of nutrition declarations provided in accordance with the guidelines.

Monetary Compensatory Amounts

25. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he is satisfied with the current method of calculation of monetary compensatory amounts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: MCAs generally are calculated in an objective manner in order to avoid trade distortions. However, technical improvements which can usefully be made are discussed with the Commission and other member states from time to time.

40. Mr. Speller: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will seek the phasing out of monetary compensatory amounts in the pigmeat industry.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I would refer my hon. Friend to the answer which I gave to the hon. Member for Glanford and Scunthorpe (Mr. Morley) on 28 January.

Cereals Surplus

26. Mr. Marland: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the current level of the cereals surplus in the United Kingdom and the European Community.

Mr. MacGregor: For the current cereals marketing year, Community consumption of home-produced-grain is provisionally estimated at 133 million tonnes and production at 153 million tonnes. Intervention stocks at the beginning of the year stood at 14·3 million tonnes.

For the same period United Kingdom consumption of home-produced grain is estimated at 16·7 million tonnes and production at 21·5 million tonnes. Intervention stocks at the beginning of the marketing year stood at 2·3 million tonnes.

44. Mr. Curry: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will estimate the size of the cereals surplus in the United Kingdom and the European Community in five years' time.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Consumption in the Community of home-produced grain is around 130 million tonnes and forecast to remain stable.

The latest estimates of production trends produced by European Statistical Office are as follows:

	Million tonnes
1988	168
1989	171
1990	174
1991	178

These figures are based on an extrapolation of current trends. Intervention stocks of grain in the Community at the beginning of the current marketing year stood at 14·3 million tonnes.

No such forecasts are available separately for the United Kingdom.

Milk Marketing Board

27. Mr. Knox: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he next intends to have discussions about the dairy industry with the chairman of the Milk Marketing Board.

Mr. MacGregor: My colleagues and I have regular contacts with the chairman of the Milk Marketing Board to discuss various issues affecting the dairy industry.

Less-favoured Areas

30. Mr. Stevens: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the current value of the support provided by the Government for farmers in the less-favoured areas.

Mr. MacGregor: The current forecast of additional support in the less-favoured areas for 1987-88 is £143·9 million comprising

	£ million
Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowances:
Sheep	64·5
Cattle	50·3
Additional benefits under Agricultural Capital Grants, including the Northern Ireland Agricultural Development Programme	25·3
Other grants including forage groups, special assistance to the Scottish Island and crofters	3·8

Set-aside Scheme

31. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the adequacy of present or proposed arrangements for the setting aside of arable land to be used for forestry to secure a sufficiently positive response.

Mr. MacGregor: In November we announced significant increases in the rates proposed for the annual payments under the farm woodland scheme which will now focus primarily on arable and improved land. The new rates were generally welcomed by interested parties.

I expect there to be provision for the planting of woodland in the Community set-aside scheme, on which discussions are continuing in the Council of Ministers. I and my colleagues will be considering the appropriate United Kingdom arrangements in the light of the Community's final decisions and of responses to the consultation document issued on 8 December.

59. Mr. Livsey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received concerning the European Community cereal set-aside policy.

Mr. MacGregor: I have received a large number of representations, most of them in response to the consultation document on extensification issued on 8 December.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether agreement has been reached on the level of premium to compensate for the European Community scheme of setting land aside.

Mr. MacGregor: The consultation document issued by the Agricultural Departments on 8 December suggested a rate in the range of £150-£200 per hectare of cereals land set-aside. No decisions will be taken until current discussions on a wider set-aside scheme in the Council of Agriculture Ministers reach a conclusion and I have considered with my colleagues the views expressed to us on this and other features of the scheme.

Severe Weather Damage

32. Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has received any requests from coastal authorities for grant aid towards the cost of repairing damage caused by gales in early January.

Mr. Gummer: Bournemouth borough council has advised me of the need for emergency coast protection work following the January gales. This will be considered for grant aid in the normal way. No other coastal authority has made such an approach.

Carry-Over Premium Scheme

33. Mr. Wilson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent representations he has received about the incorporation of herring and mackerel in the carry-over premium scheme.

Mr. Gummer: I received a number of representations about the incorporation of herring and mackerel in the carry-over premium scheme during 1987. They were mainly from fish producer organisations in Scotland who felt that the change would provide additional flexibility in marketing the species.

Food Research

34. Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received regarding the Government's review of funding for public sector basic food research.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The review is an internal exercise which does not involve formal consultation outside Government. But we are receiving views from a number of interested parties which are bing taken into account.

Cereal Policy

35. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the paper entitled, "Cereal — A Positive Policy", recently published by the Grasshoppers Club, a copy of which has been sent to him.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I have read this paper with interest. For cereals I continue to believe that a tough price policy should be accompanied by a voluntary set-aside scheme designed to encourage producers to reduce levels of production and to cushion the impact of lower prices on those least able to cope.

Conservation

36. Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures have been undertaken since 1979 to improve the balance between farming and conservation.

Mr. Gummer: The Government have introduced a wide range of measures since 1979 in order to improve the balance between farming and conservation. In particular, the agricultural improvements scheme has since 1985 encouraged farmers to invest in environmentally beneficial projects, 10 areas of England have been designated environmentally-sensitive areas following agreement in the Agriculture Council of Ministers to proposals first put forward by the United Kingdom, and the farm and countryside initiative provides work of benefit to the rural environment for the long-term unemployed under the community programme of the Manpower Services Commission.

Farm Incomes

37. Mr. MacDonald: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how farm incomes presently compare with figures for 1986 and 1987, respectively.

Mr. MacGregor: United Kingdom income in 1987 is forecast at £1,404 million, about 1¼ per cent. lower than the 1986 total of £1,427 million. More detailed data on farm incomes is given in the "Annual Review of Agriculture 1988" (Cm 299).

Food Intolerance

39. Mr. Shersby: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement regarding his Department's support for research into the prevalence of food intolerance.

Mr. Donald Thompson: If I consider "food" to include "food additives" then between 1984 and 1987 my Department funded a multicentre study of food additive intolerance at three major clinical centres. The principal project assessed the prevalence of food additive intolerance in a large population by rigorous (double-blind) challenge.

The prevalence estimated from the clinical data, using two methods of calculation, was 0·01 to 0·23 per cent. suggesting that the problem of food additive intolerance in the large population group studied was small.

Other complementary work my Department funded during this same period has indicated that food additive intolerance in many children is mainly a transient phenomenon, and it has thrown some light on the mechanisms of intolerance reactions in the human body.

My Department is continuing to fund further research in this area and during 1987-90 a project designed to examine the prevalence of food intolerance per se for comparison purposes and to extend our knowledge of the mechanisms by which intolerance is mediated, has been commissioned at the same clinical centres.

Tree Planting

41. Mr. Chapman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received concerning his proposals to encourage tree planting on surplus agricultural land.

Mr. MacGregor: I announced the revised proposals for the farm woodland scheme in November following a consultation exercise earlier last year. Since then, the revised scheme has been discussed with representatives of the main interested organisations. Most of the changes I made have been welcomed on all sides.

Rural Economy

42. Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what policies he is promoting to diversify and strengthen the economy in rural areas.

68. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he is taking to help sustain the rural economy.

Mr. MacGregor: We are introducing a variety of measures designed to encourage changes in land use and contribute to the vitality of the rural economy.

The farm diversification grant scheme was introduced on 1 January. This offers 25 per cent. grants on on-farm investments worth up to £35,000 in a wide range of non-agricultural profit-making activities. These include farm tourism and crafts, farm shops, the value-added processing of food, agricultural products and timber, sports facilities, livery and, in less-favoured areas, pony trekking.

The Farm Land and Rural Development Bill, which is now before the House, contains the powers under which the farm woodland scheme, providing incentives for the planting of woodlands on farms, will be introduced. It also provides enabling powers for the introduction later this year of complementary grants for feasibility studies and marketing costs for diversification enterprises.

In addition, 14 environmentally sensitive areas have now been designated in the United Kingdom and four more are being designated. In these areas farmers will receive payment for following farming practices designed to conserve their landscape and wildlife value.

Finally, my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Environment and for Wales have issued revised guidance on development involving agricultural land which emphasises the need to foster the diversification of the rural economy.

Rating Reform

43. Mr. Cox: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what meetings he has had with the National Farmers Union to discuss the proposed community charge.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I have had no formal meeting with the National Farmers' Union on the proposed community charge.

EC-Israel Protocol

45. Mr. Ashby: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will provide details on the progress of the EEC-Israel protocol; and what concessions have been granted to Israel concerning food and drink products.

Mr. Gummer: The protocols to the EC-Israel agreement were signed by the Community and Israel on 13 December 1987. They await the assent of the European Parliament which is required before they can enter into force.

The protocols provide in particular for duties to be removed progressively from a range of food and drink products, and for tariff quotas to be opened for certain products, most notably cut flowers. Whilst the United Kingdom has shown itself supportive of freer trade in Mediterranean products, we have insisted upon proper access to the European market being provided for Arab producers from the occupied territories. Details are contained in EC document 4280/87 (explanatory memorandum submitted by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office on 10 April 1987) a copy of which is available in the Library of the House.

Council of Fisheries Ministers

47. Mr. Worthington: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met members of the European Community's Council of Fisheries Ministers; and what subjects they discussed.

Mr. Gummer: The last meeting of the Council of Fisheries Ministers was on 14 to 16 December 1987; my right hon. Friend the Minister reported on discussion at this meeting in a written reply of 16 December to my hon. Friend the Member for Daventry (Mr. Boswell), Official Report column 585.

Potato Imports (Hungary)

48. Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received expressing concern at the possible lifting of all embargos and related quantitative restrictions regarding potato products from Hungary.

Mr. Donald Thompson: One, from the Potato Processors' Association.

Breeding Ewes

49. Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his estimate of the present number of breeding ewes in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Provisional figures from the June 1987 agricultural census show 18·056 million ewes and shearlings in the United Kingdom (Source: "Annual Review of Agriculture 1988" (Cmnd. 299)).

Pig Producers

50. Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he has taken to ensure that British pig producers are not subject to unfair competition from imported meat.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Denmark and Holland are the major exporters of pigmeat to our market. A major study carried out by the food and drink manufacturing economic development council in 1986 concluded that there was no proof that the pig industries in those countries gained any substantial advantage over United Kingdom producers as a result of state subsidies. I am always ready to consider referring to the European Commission for action any firm evidence that national Governments are paying illegal aid to their producers.

Food Surpluses

51. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his latest estimate of the amount which the EEC is spending per week on the storage, destruction and dumping of food surpluses; what was the comparable sum actually spent per week, five and 10 years previously, respectively; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: Weekly community expenditure on technical and financing costs of public intervention and on export refunds and internal disposal subsidies (including loss on sale out of intervention) for commodities now in structural surplus (cereals, sugar, olive oil, wine, beef, milk and milk products) was £28 million in 1977, £80 million in 1982 and £233 million in 1987. In some circumstances withdrawn produce finds no end use and may be assumed to be spoiled or wasted, but the relevant expenditure is not separately identifiable.

Fishing Industry (Support)

52. Mr. Doran: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he intends to change his policy on financial support for the fishing industry, in the light of the report by the Comptroller and Auditor General, entitled "Financial Support for the Fishing Industry in Great Britain"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Fisheries Ministers thoroughly reviewed their objectives and policies with regard to both financial support for the United Kingdom fishing fleet and the restrictive licensing arrangements as recently as the winter of 1986-87 and one of the results of that review was our decision to withdraw the decommissioning grants which attracted particular attention in the report by the Comptroller and Auditor General. I announced our conclusions on 30 April, 1987, Official Report, columns 217-19. We continue to keep our policies for the fishing industry under regular review.

Milk Quotas

53. Mr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received about the loss of cheese-making capacity in the United Kingdom as a result of the European Commission milk quotas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I have received no such representations. The shortage of milk for cheese production last autumn was in large part the result of a greater than usual seasonal reduction in milk production. The answer to this problem is not to increase milk quotas, since the Community is not short of milk, but rather to encourage a more even supply of milk throughout the year.

Fishing Industry

55. Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the present state of the fishing industry.

Mr. Gummer: Thanks to this Government's policies, including the negotiation in January 1983 of a satisfactory common fisheries policy, the United Kingdom fishing industry is in better heart than for many years. Although figures for 1987 are not yet complete, it is clear that landings were up over the previous year both in volume and in value terms, implying a significant increase in real earnings.

Common Agricultural Policy

56. Mr. Patrick McLoughlin (West Derbyshire): To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, what progress was made towards reforming the common agricultural policy at the recent meeting of Ministers in Brussels.

Mr. MacGregor: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply which I gave today to the hon. Member for St. Helens, North (Mr. Evans).

Chernobyl

57. Mr. Rogers: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has had with the Country Landowners Association about his Department's handling of the Chernobyl accident in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Chernobyl was one of a number of topics discussed when I met representatives of the Country Landowners Association on 28 September 1987. My officials have, of course, been in frequent contact with the associaton on action taken following the Chernobyl accident.

Agriculture Industry

58. Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he is satisfied with the present state of the agriculture industry.

Mr. MacGregor: Although overall farming income as a whole in England is forecast to have fallen somewhat, largely because of the effects of adverse weather on the arable sector, there have been increases in England in the dairy and less-favoured areas livestock sectors, and there was a good recovery in forecast farming income for 1987 for Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland.

British Sherry

60. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on his response to recent representations by the British Wine Producers' spokesmen on product description usage for British sherry and related matters.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Article 129 of the Act of Accession of Spain and Portugal to the European Communities authorises the use of the description "British Sherry" until 1995 when the matter will be reviewed by the Council of Ministers. This is a clear provision, welcomed by the British wine industry and one which the Government continue fully to support.

Grain Surpluses

61. Mr. Coombs: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the current stabiliser regulations for grain surpluses.

Mr. MacGregor: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Wansdyke (Mr. Aspinwall) on 25 January, columns 52-3.

Extensification (Report)

62. Mr. Martlew: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research has been carried out by his Department on the effects of the proposals outlined in the consultation document "An Extensification Scheme on Employment".

Mr. Donald Thompson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given on 18 December to his hon. Friend the Member for Caerphilly (Mr. Davies).

Agricultural Tenancies

64. Dr. Marek: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received concerning the effects of Government legislation on agricultural tenancies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: From time to time, I receive comments from individuals and interested organisations about the current arrangements. The existing agricultural holdings legislation, revised in 1984 after lengthy consultation, represents a careful balance of interest between landlord and tenant and any proposals for change must have the support of the industry.

I am always, of course, ready to consider any ideas the industry puts to me on an agreed basis.

Sheepmeat

65. Dr. Twinn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps his Department has taken to promote exports of British sheepmeat.

Mr. Gummer: We set up Food From Britain in 1983 with the aim of encouraging and developing the marketing of British food and drink. British lamb and mutton is one of the many products which FFB actively promotes in overseas markets, in close collaboration with the extensive export services of the Meat and Livestock Commission. The Government have fought to maintain free and fair terms of trade under the EC sheepmeat regime. Since the regime was negotiated in 1980, our exports to the Community have risen from 36,829 tonnes to 63,611 tonnes in 1986 with a further increase expected in the final figures for 1987. In 1986 our total exports of sheepmeat, to all destinations were worth some £134 million.

Farming Methods

66. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research his Department is conducting into the extent to which less intensive farming methods will reduce food production.

Mr. Donald Thompson: My Department is conducting and funding a wide range of research and developments on less intensive farming methods which may help farmers maintain a reasonable income whilst reducing their output of crops in surplus.

Nature Reserves

67. Mr. Pendry: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has had recently with farmers' representatives concerning the problems of farming in national nature reserves.

Mr. Gummer: I have received no representations suggesting that problems exist relating specifically to farming in national nature reserves.

Value Added Tax

69. Sir Michael Shaw: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received concerning the imposition of value added tax on confectionery products and chocolate biscuits.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I have seen a copy of the submission which the Biscuit, Cake, Chocolate and Confectionery Alliance sent on 18 December to my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer. This was among the matters discussed when my noble Friend the Parliamentary Secretary met the president of the alliance on 13 January.

Research and Development

70. Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to make an announcement about the future of research and development in agriculture, fisheries and food.

Mr. MacGregor: The Government are looking at the issues of better targeting of Government expenditure on science and technology R and D and the reappraisal of priorities to achieve the most effective exploitation of results. In MAFF we are currently reviewing the balance of our own programmes against this background and the Government's general view that industry should fund more of the work of benefit to it. I will inform the House of any developments.

Woodland Scheme

71. Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he is satisfied with the take-up of the woodland scheme announced in the ALURE package.

Mr. Gummer: As we made clear at the time, legislation is required before the farm woodland scheme can be introduced.

The Farm Land and Rural Development Bill, which has been considered in another place and received its Second Reading in this House on 1 February, will provide the enabling powers. Subordinate legislation will be introduced following the passage of the Bill and we hope that the scheme will come into operation this autumn, in time for the main tree planting season.

Clyde Herring

73. Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he is in a position to give the approximate date at which an increase could be considered to the total allowable catch for the current year of Clyde herring.

Mr. Gummer: As I explained to the House during the debate on 9 December last, the reduction in the total allowable catch (TAC) for Clyde herring for 1988 is based on firm scientific advice from the advisory committee on fisheries management of the International Council for the Exploration of the Sea. This committee is due to hold its next meeting to review the state of stocks from 16-26 May. I have, however, no reason to believe that the report of this meeting will provide any basis for increasing the current year's TAC for Clyde herring, which would of course be a decision for the Council of Fisheries Ministers of the European Community.

Fishing Vessels (Decommissioning)

74. Mr. McFall: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any plans to reactivate the scheme for the decommissioning of fishing vessels in the current year.

Mr. Gummer: No.

Weil's Disease

Mr. Burns: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) how many rivers in the Chelmsford constituency are contaminated with Weil's disease;

(2) what action his Department is taking to minimise the dangers to human life caused by Weil's disease; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 18 January 1988]: I have been asked to reply.

The organism which causes Weil's disease (leptospirosis) is carried in the kidneys of wild rodents and can, therefore, be passed by those animals into rivers and inland waters.

As the organism can enter the human body when cuts and abrasions or the membrane of nose, mouth or eye come into contact with contaminated water, members of inland sailing and canoeing clubs are issued with warning leaflets. Early diagnosis and treatment of Weil's disease are important, but it responds readily to antibiotics.

Arable land

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the European Community's proposals for taking arable land out of production and the implications for United Kingdom farming of such a scheme.

Mr. MacGregor: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Caerphilly (Mr. Davies).

Green Pound

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received concerning the devaluation of the green pound; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Suffolk, South (Mr. Yeo) earlier today.

Potato Marketing Board

Mr. Butler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he is satisfied with the operations of the Potato Marketing Board; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: The Potato Marketing Board is a producers' organisation and it is for them to decide whether or not they are satisfied with its operations. The board administers the Government's potato guarantee arrangements and it has performed this task satisfactorily.

Agricultural Support

Mr. Cash: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the total level of support provided to the British agricultural industry (a) in 1979 and (b) in the latest year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: The public expenditure on agriculture grants and subsidies in 1979-80 was £677 million. The "Annual Review of Agriculture" just published gives the figure for 1986-87 as £1,444 million. The Government also support the industry in a number of other ways, such as research and development, advisory, veterinary and administrative services.

Agriculture Council Meeting

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the discussions at the Agriculture Council meeting held in January.

Mr. MacGregor: The Agriculture Council met on 18-19 and 23-24 January. Proposals for stabiliser mechanisms for agricultural commodities and for a set-aside were the main issues discussed. I emphasised the essential need for effective stabilisation of agricultural expenditure if there is to be agreement at the next European Council.

Blue-marked Sheep

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what instructions were issued following the Chernobyl accident to environmental health officers and meat inspectors relating to blue-marked sheep presented for slaughter; and if he will place copies of these instructions in the Library.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 2 February 1988]: Throughout the period of the operation of the "mark and release" scheme for sheep, including the periods when blue-marking was used, my officials have been in communication with the appropriate personnel in local authorities to advise on the nature of the restrictions and enforcement action. The advice has had to take account of the differing organisation for enforcement that exists within the various local authorities. Copies of all the communications could be obtained only with disproportionate effort and cost.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Spending Power

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will publish tables, similar to those in his Department's tax/benefit model table, showing net weekly spending power for each of a single wage married couple (i) with two children aged four and six years and (ii) with three children aged three, eight and 11 years; earning (1) £60, (2) £70, (3) £80, (4) £90, (5) £100, (6) £110, (7) £120, (8) £130, (9) £140, (10) £150, (11) £160 and (12) £170 (a) under the existing tax and benefit systems and (b) under the benefit system which will be implemented in April 1988;

(2) if he will publish figures, similar to those in his Department's tax/benefit model tables, comparing net weekly spending power for a lone mother with two children aged four and six years, under the existing tax and benefit systems and under the benefit system which will be implemented in April 1988 and in each of following circumstances (a) not working, after one year on benefits, (b) earning £20 a week from part-time work, (c) earning £40 a week from part-time working and (d) working full-time and earning (i) £60, (ii) £70, (iii) £80, (iv) £90, (v) £100, (vi) £110 and (vii) £120 per week.

Mr. Nicholas Scott: The information requested is set out in the tables. It should be noted that the results are hypothetical in two senses. First, the results are based on average local authority housing charges and do not reflect the wide variety of rents and domestic rates that people actually pay. Secondly, the other assumptions used are those set out in "Impact of the Reformed Structure of Income-Related Benefits," October 1987.

X-ray Apparatus

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans and resources exist to phase out old X-ray apparatus in National Health Service hospitals in (a) Waltham Forest and (b) nationally; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that this information is not held centrally. It is for health authorities individually to take account of radiological equipment needs when determining their priorities for capital expenditure. The safety of such equipment is governed by the Ionising Radiations Regulations 1985, and the Heath and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 empowers health and safety inspectors to order that defective equipment is taken out of service or dismantled and removed from the installation entirely. Records show that no particular category or age group of X-ray equipment has a high incidence of safety problems.

There is considerable investment in new X-ray facilities. Information is available centrally only on capital schemes costing over £1 million, but between 1980 and 1987 more than 260 such schemes were completed that included new X-ray rooms; 82 in 1987. In addition there have been many smaller schemes which included X-ray facilities. We estimate, for example, that in 1987 between £30 million and £35 million was spent on X-ray equipment by health authorities.

Health Authorities (Outer London)

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the total expenditure of each of the district health authorities in outer London; and if he will express this in per capita terms, based upon the number of persons resident in each district.

Mrs. Currie: Following is the information requested for 1986-87 (the latest year available):

District Health Authority	Total Expenditure £000	Total Expenditure per capita £
Barking, Havering and Brentwood	82,474	180

Voluntary Organisations (Grants)

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list in the Official Report those organisations in the current financial year in receipt of grants under section 64 of the Health Services and Public Health Act 1968, including the amount of the grant in each case and the work for which the grant has been made available.

Mrs. Currie: Our general scheme of grants to voluntary organisations under section 64 falls into two parts—core grants, to assist national organisations with their administration costs, and project grants, to support projects which are experimental or innovative for a specific period. The scheme also provides a small number of capital grants.

Listed are those organisations for which a grant award in 1987-88 has been approved. The total picture will not be available until 31 March 1988.

Mentally Ill People

Mr. Irving: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will commission research into the provision and funding of private residential care for the mentally ill financed by supplementary benefit.

Mr. Scott: The following research projects on supplementary benefit and residential care, including residential care for mentally ill people, are already under way:

(a.) Kent university's personal social services research unit and York university's centre for health economic—a national survey of private and voluntary residential care and nursing homes.

(b.) The Office of Population Censuses and Surveys—a survey of small unregistered residential care homes and other establishments such as supported lodgings.

(c.) The Office of Population Censuses and Surveys—a study of the characteristics of residential care and nursing homes.

(d.) York university's social policy research unit—a study on the impact of charges in supplementary benefit legislation on private and voluntary residential care and nursing homes.

In addition, information on costs and charges in homes, including homes for mentally ill people, has been collected from a wide range of sources for our reviews of the supplementary benefit limits. In particular, in 1985 we commissioned Ernst and Whinney, a firm of independent management consultants, to examine the operation of the market in voluntary and private provision of residential care and nursing homes.

Any further research will need to be considered in the light of Sir Roy Griffiths' report on the funding of community care.

Single Payments

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will provide details for the last four years for which figures are available of the number of single payments made by his Department's Blyth and Cramlington office for (a) household furniture, (b) clothing, (c) bedding, (d) replacement household equipment and (e) as a result of urgent payments made to replace domestic and household goods affected by natural disasters.

Mr. Scott: I regret that the information requested is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Cancer Screening

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to introduce a comprehensive scheme of screening for breast cancer among women aged below 50 years in Northumberland.

Mrs. Currie: No. The nationwide breast cancer screening service which we are introducing over the next three years is based on the conclusions in the report of a Government-appointed working group, chaired by Professor Sir Patrick Forrest. The report concluded that the effectiveness of screening by mammography has so far been demonstrated only for women aged 50 and over and recommended that the priority for any screening programme should be to offer an initial screen to as many women as possible aged 50 to 64 years.

Hospital Developments

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many hospital beds in new hospital developments in England and in each of the National Health Service regions are currently empty because there was insufficient money for the whole development of parts or it to be opened on the planned date; and if he will relate the figures to the population of each region.

(2) how many new hospital developments in England and in each of the National Health Service regions are currently either unopened or partially open because there was insufficient money for the full opening on the planned date or for their continued operation.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that this information is not collected centrally. The right hon. Member may wish to inquire of regional health authorities for this information.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the estimated wasted cost to the National Health Service, in terms of the interest on the capital expenditure, of leaving completed hospital developments unopened or partially open.

Mrs. Currie: The information on completed hospital developments that are unopened or only partially open is not collected centrally. It is not therefore possible to estimate the cost to the National Health Service in terms of the interest on capital expenditure incurred on these schemes. The right hon. Member may wish to inquire of regional health authorities for this information.

Surgical Beds (West Midlands)

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list for the west midlands region the number of current acute surgical beds per hundred thousand population in each of the region's districts.

Mrs. Currie: The information requested is given in the table.

RAWP Ratings

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the current resource allocation working party ratings for each of the National Health Service regions and for each of the districts in the west midlands region.

Mr. Newton: The allocations which I announced on 16 December 1987 for the financial year 1988-89 result in the distances from RAWP target set out in the following table.

Regional Health Authority	1988-89 percentage distance from RAWP target allocation
Northern	−1·6
Yorkshire	−1·4
Trent	−2·7
East Anglian	−4·0
North West Thames	+4·5
North East Thames	+7·3
South East Thames	+1·7

Regional Health Authority	1988-89 percentage distance from RAWP target allocation
South West Thames	+1·0
Wessex	−1·8
Oxford	−2·6
South Western	−1·4
West Midlands	−1·3
Mersey	+1·5
North Western	−1·4

The distribution of resources to districts, including the assessment of distances from target, is a matter for regions. The process reflects the same aims as national RAWP, but at this level annual allocations need to be closely related to service plans and to allow for a manageable pace of change.

Health Districts (Resources)

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if, when considering invitations to visit health districts, he will make it his policy to give priority to those that are the most deprived on the resources allocation working party criteria.

Mrs. Currie: No, that would not be a sensible criterion on which to decide. Invitations are made and accepted for a variety of reasons.

Special Payments

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how much money the Government estimate will be saved by only making one special payment per benefit book rather than making one payment per eligible benefit; and how many people will lose money as a result.

Mr. Scott: There will be no resultant benefit savings, because that amount of the social security underspend caused by the error in the retail prices index which is not disbursed in the form of special payments is to be donated to charities. The additional administrative complexities and costs of attempting to make one payment per eligible benefit would have been considerable. About 1·75 million people whose benefits are combined will receive a special payment; of these about 175,000 will be undercompensated.

Health Screening

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has to require district health authorities to request quotations for health screening from private hospitals before investing in their own capital equipment.

Mrs. Currie: Health authorities are encouraged to give careful consideration to all means of securing greater cost-effectiveness in the provision of services to maximise resources available for patient care. In particular, when planning and implementing their breast cancer screening services, regional health authorities have been advised to consider the scope for collaboration with private sector providers and voluntary organisations.

Retail Prices Index (Error)

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if each appropriate category of social security benefits will be separately accorded the £8 ex gratia payment made by his Department as a result of an error in calculation of the retail prices index.

Mr. Scott: In the interests of combining as far as possible fairness with speed of payment, an £8 ex gratia payment (or £5 in the case of mobility allowance) will be made in respect of each instrument of payment which contains payment of qualifying benefit for the week commencing 1 February. This means that we have been able to ensure that 12 million people will receive special payments from this week. The additional administrative complexities and costs of attempting to make one payment per eligible benefit would have been considerable.

Elderly People (Care)

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has to alter the responsibility for the care of the elderly.

Mrs. Currie: We shall be considering any relevant recommendations made by Sir Roy Griffiths in his report on community care, which we expect to receive shortly.

Health Authorities (Efficiency)

Mr. Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what assessment he has made of the adequacy of the CIPFA TARI index in measuring the comparative efficiency of district health authorities; and how he plans to ensure that performance indicators are used more reliably by health authorities.

Mrs. Currie: The total acute revenue indicator, quoted in the CIPFA report on health trends, shows approximately how much money is spent per head on providing acute care for a district's resident population wherever the residents are treated. It is an indicator of the extent to which people in different parts of the country have access to acute hospital care and on this basis is included in the performance indicator package. It is not an indicator of efficiency nor is there any one indicator of efficiency.

This package has been sent direct to every health authority annually for the last three years and the latest indicators will be issued this month. District health authorities are expected to identify areas where improvements in services to patients and in overall efficiency might be possible as a matter of good management. The indicators are developed for use with other information as an aid to this process. Regional health authorities will be expected to examine differences in performance between their districts as suggested by the indicators and other information.

Social Fund Applicants

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how adjudication officers will ascertain the amount of income or capital that would become available to a claimant on application to the social fund, for the purposes of regulations 42(2) and 51(2) of the Income Support (General) Regulations 1987.

Mr. Scott: Payments from the social fund are disregarded when calculating a claimant's weekly entitlement to income support. Therefore, adjudication officers need not consider the provisions of regulations 42(2) and 51(2) of the Income Support (General) Regulations 1987 in relation to such payments. Repayments of social fund payments, however, may be made by deductions from the claimant's weekly income support entitlement.

Retirement (Earnings Rule)

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the latest estimates of (a) the number of people deferring retirement and earning increments to their retirement pensions, (b) the number of people whose pensions are reduced by the earnings rule and (c) the cost of abolishing (i) the retirement condition and (ii) the earnings rule.

Mr. Scott: It is estimated that about 125,000 people over minimum pension age are currently deferring retirement and earning increments to their pensions. There are just over 2,000 people whose pensions are reduced by the earnings rule. This figure does not include adult dependants for whom the dependency addition is reduced on account of their earnings. The latest estimates show that it would cost about £250 million gross to abolish the earnings rule. It is not possible to provide separate costings for the abolition of the retirement condition and the earnings rule.

Retford Hospital

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) whether he will receive a deputation from the Retford hospital action committee to discuss keeping open Retford hospital;

(2) whether he will issue a directive to the Trent regional health authority to keep open Retford hospital;

(3) whether he will provide additional funds to the Trent regional health authority for the retention of Retford hospital;

(4) what steps he is taking to save Retford hospital from closure; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: The management of local services is the responsibility of the district health authority concerned (in this case Bassetlaw). I understand that Bassetlaw DHA has temporarily closed two units within Retford hospital. This is a matter for local decision. Any proposal for permanent closure would need to be the subject of formal consultation and, if opposed by the community health council, would need to be submitted to Ministers for a final decision. My colleagues and I are always prepared to meet local deputations at that stage.

Trent regional health authority was allocated an additional £5·8 million in December for the financial year 1987-88. For 1988-89, the region's revenue allocation will be £1,050 million, an increase of 6·3 per cent. The hon. Member may wish to contact the regional chairman for details of the RHA's allocation to Bassetlaw.

Meningitis

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many (a) cases of and (b) deaths attributable to meningitis have been notified in each of the last 24 months.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that the data are not available in exactly the form requested: notification data for infectious diseases are compiled on a weekly basis; the table shows totals by weekly group for 1986 and 1987.

[1] Provisional.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the regional incidence of meningitis in the past five years.

Mrs. Currie: The number of notifications of all forms of meningitis and meningococcal meningitis for the years requested is shown in the table.

Ministerial Speech

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether the speech of the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Derbyshire, South (Mrs. Currie) on the National Health Service, made on Friday 29 January, represents the policies of Her Majesty's Government; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moore: Yes. In particular I welcome my hon. Friend's comments on the rise in living standards under this Government and the increased consumer choice this offers families including, if they wish, the purchase of private health care.

Dartford and Gravesham District Health Authority

Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has received adequate and acceptable assurances from the Dartford and Gravesham district health authority concerning the standard of medical care to be provided in support of the in-patient and casualty services at Gravesend and North Kent hospital under the recently approved rationalisation plan; and if he will give details of that supporting medical care.

Mrs. Currie: The Gravesend and North Kent hospital presently accommodates obstetric and gynaecology patients, a special care baby unit, general surgical and orthopaedic patients. A daytime casualty service is also provided.

The health authority has informed me that the medical cover provided is as follows:

Obstetrics and Gynaecology
Constant resident cover
General Surgery
Constant resident cover
Orthopaedics
Constant resident cover
Paediatrics
Constant resident cover

Anaesthetics
Constant resident cover
General Medicine
There are no general medical beds remaining but if an in-patient requires to be seen by a physician then a consultant attending a general medical out-patients' clinic at the hospital could attend or a doctor would attend from Joyce Green or West Hill Hospital.
Casualty
A 9 am to 9 pm casualty service is provided for 'walk-in' cases.

Emergency ambulance cases are taken direct to West Hill hospital. The casualty doctor at Gravesend and North Kent hospital provides initial treatment and has the support of other specialist doctors on site if required.

Should a patient with a medical condition attend, advice is available, if required, from physicians at West Hill or Joyce Green hospital.

If admission to a medical bed is considered appropriate arrangements have been made with the ambulance service for rapid transport of patients to Joyce Green hospital, with a nurse escort if necessary.

District Health Authorities (Staff)

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list in respect of each district health authority (a) the total number of full-time equivalent employees and (b) the total number of full-time equivalent management employees above the level of department head or ward sister.

Mrs. Currie: I shall let my hon. Friend have such information as can be obtained without incurring disproportionate cost as soon as possible.

Residential Care Allowances

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the present level of, and what are the criteria for, allocation of Department of Health and Social Security residential care allowances for community care in Scotland.

Mr. Scott: I assume the hon. Member is referring to supplementary benefit allowances for people in private and voluntary residential care and nursing homes. People in these homes can claim supplementary benefit to help meet their fees but there are limits to the levels of fees with which help can be given. A list of the current limits is given in the table. The limits apply nationally, other than for a special provision for London.

The purpose of the supplementary benefits scheme is to provide help for people who are not in full-time work, whose capital is not more than £3,000 and whose income, from all sources, is below a minimum level. The terms and conditions of entitlement are set out in the supplementary benefit Acts and regulations.

Supplementary Benefit: Residential Care and Nursing Home Limits

Category	Residential care homes £	Nursing homes £
Elderly	130	175
Very Dependent or Blind Elderly	145	—
Mentally Ill	130	180
Drug/Alcohol	130	180
Mentally Handicapped	150	200
Physically Disabled under Pension Age	190	230
Terminal Illness	—	230
Other	130	175

Note: The limits for all homes in the Greater London area can be extended by up to £17·50.

Cash Limits

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether any changes will be made to the cash limits and gross running costs for his Department.

Mr. Scott: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimates, the cash limit for Class XIV, Vote 1 (Hospital and Community Health Services) will be increased by £109,461,000 (from £10,339,619,000 to £10,449,080,000) following the announcements on 23 October 1987 and 16 December 1987, and including £44 million to reflect a change in health authoritis' carry forward arrangements. The cash limit for Class XIV, Vote 3 (Miscellaneous Health Services and and Personal Social Services, England) will be increased by £13,803,000 (from £403,152,000 to £416,955,000). This increase comprises an increased allocation of £2,500,000 to maintain services following the rising number of AIDS cases as announced on 23 October 1987; an additional £10 million for a grant to the Haemophilia Society of Great Britain as announced on 16 November 1987; and the transfer of £2,223,000 from Class XV, Vote 5, for DHSS staff made available to the Disablement Services Authority with effect from the authority's creation on 1 July 1987. These increases are partly offset by a reduction of £920,000 in respect of the repayment of a grant which had been made to a voluntary organisation in respect of a community home. The provision for running costs on Class XIV, Vote 3, is increased by £3,318,000. This increase will not result in an increase in the overall DHSS running costs limit.

The cash limit for Class XV, Vote 5, (Administration and Miscellaneous Services) has been increased by £2.777 million from £1,339.919 million to £1,342.696 million. The revision takes account of the additional administrative costs associated with the special payment exercise to compensate for the error in the RPI, namely £5 million, and the transfer of £2.223 million, provision for the Disablement Services Authority, to the Vote for miscellaneous health services and personal social services, Class XIV, Vote 3.

As a result of the above-mentioned transfer to health and personal social services and the additional requirement, the gross running costs limit of the Department of Health and Social Security is increased by £5 million from £1,700.678 million to £1,705.678.

The additional £5 million costs are not being met from the "savings" that accrued because of the RPI error. The public expenditure costs of these changes have been charged to the reserve and do not add to the public expenditure planning total.

Diabetic Blindness

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement about his policy towards charges for eyesight tests for the monitoring of diabetic blindness.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 17 December 1987]: The proposal in the White Paper on primary health care is that free NHS sight tests should in future be confined to children, students under 19, those on low incomes, and the registered blind and partially sighted.

The Government's action last year to make disposable syringes and needles available free to insulin-dependent diabetics on general practitioner prescription, and the decision announced in the White Paper to make blood-glucose testing strips available in the same way as soon as the necessary arrangements can be made, are intended to assist in enhancing the role of GPs in the regular care of diabetics. GPs will be aware of the need to look for symptoms of eye disease in diabetics, and where such disease is suspected the patient would be referred to the hospital eye service for the necessary tests.

My hon. Friend may like to know that we are currently funding a research project at Exeter, Oxford and Sheffield into methods of screening for diabetic retinopathy; and are making available a further £100,000 for the continuation of this work in 1988-89. We shall carefully consider the results, which are due next year.

Income Support

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his estimate of the number of claimants of (a) income support, (b) housing benefit and (c) family credit who will be liable for a rates contribution which (i) exceeds or (ii) is less than the amount of compensation allowed for in the income support personal allowances.

Mr. Scott [holding answer 21 January 1988]: Using the assumptions set out in the "Impact of the Reformed Structure of Income Related Benefits", October 1987, 1·7 million income support recipients would be liable for rates contributions smaller than the compensation in their benefit entitlement. For 1·8 million recipients their rates liability would exceed it. These figures assume that non-dependant deductions are not made.

For the balance of those on housing benefit (that is, those not also on income support) and for those on family credit these calculations are of limited importance and precise figures are not available. The operation of the rate taper under housing benefit means that liability for a contribution to rates increases above the minimum 20 per cent. as income rises. Family credit is treated as income for housing benefit purposes and the contribution to rates made by family credit recipients will reflect this.

Advisory Committee on Irradiated and Novel Foods

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to publish the second report of the Advisory Committee on Irradiated and Novel Foods; and if he will make a statement.

77. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to make an announcement about the future of irradiation of foodstuffs.

78. Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to be able to make an announcement concerning Government proposals for the irradiation of food; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to make his response to the consultative report from the Advisory Committee on Irradiated and Novel Foods: and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 22 January 1988]: In April 1986 the Government published the report of the Advisory Committee on Irradiated and Novel Foods (ACINF) on the safety and wholesomeness of irradiated foods and sought comments on it. Some 6,000 letters have been received from members of the public, interested organisations and hon. Members. In the light of these, further advice was sought from the ACINF which reaffirmed its earlier advice that, under the conditions prescribed, irradiated food is safe and wholesome. Having carefully considered the arguments, Ministers for Health and Agriculture have accepted this advice. Copies of ACINF's further advice to Ministers have been placed in the Library and it is our intention to make copies publicly available.

The committee drew attention to certain practical issues relating to the monitoring and control of irradiated foods and enforcement. The Government have therefore decided to maintain the present general prohibition on irradiated foods until they are satisfied that effective regulatory controls can be drawn up for the irradiation of specific foods in order to bring about good industrial and marketing practices and ensure informed consumer choice. Such controls should include assurances on the quality of the particular foods to be irradiated, requirements as to the maintenance of documentary records, the licensing of premises and inspection of operations. The availability of detection tests will be one of the factors to be taken into consideration and there would also be statutory provision for the labelling of irradiated foods and food ingredients.

My right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food will now arrange for further work to be carried out to examine the scope and format of any controls. Consultations under the Food Acts will not be initiated until Ministers are satisfied that there is adequate provision to ensure the prevention of abuse and the protection of consumer choice. At the same time, working with our European partners we will endeavour to achieve a common approach to the irradiation of food throughout the European Community.

Social Fund

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the expected amount to be spent in (a) Scotland, (b) England, (c) Wales and (d) Northern Ireland on (i) loans and (ii) grants from the social fund in each year to 1991; and what is his estimate of (1) the number of payments and (2) the number of claimants in each year.

Mr. Scott [holding answer 1 February 1988]: Social fund budget allocations for 1988/89 are shown in the table. Allocations for future years have not yet been decided.

The number of payments that will be made from the loans and grants budgets will depend upon the size of individual payments. This will be determined by the amounts applied for, and the decisions of individual social fund officers in accordance with the law and directions and in the light of guidance. The number of applicants will depend upon a number of factors, including any take-up campaigns. No firm estimates can therefore be given until the new scheme is in operation.

WALES

Rents

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the average time taken in each county in Wales from the day of application for a fair rent to the actual registration of rent, in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Grist: The following table contains information on the median interval between date of application to registration by the rent officer. The intervals include a period of not less than seven and not more than 14 days in which both landlord and tenant have the right to request a consultation. Where a consultation is requested at least seven days' notice must be given by the rent officer, except where a landlord application involves service charges in which case 14 days notice must be given.

Modern Languages

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list (a) those secondary schools in each local education authority in Wales in which a second modern language, besides Welsh, is taught between the ages of 11 and 16 years and (b) those schools and other educational institutions catering for 16 to 18-year-olds, in which two, or more, modern languages are taught, other than the Welsh language, post 16 years old.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Information from the 1984 secondary school staffing survey indicates that a modern langage other than Welsh and English was undertaken within year groups I to V in virtually all maintained secondary schools in Wales. Comparable information for schools in which two or more modern languages other than Welsh and English were taught to pupils aged 16 and over is not available.

The colleges of further and higher education offering identifiable examinable courses in two or more modern langages other than Welsh and English in 1987-88 are as follows:

North East Wales Institute of Higher Education, Clwyd
Llandrillo Techincal College, Clwyd
Newport College of Further Education, Gwent
Crosskeys College, Gwent
Pontypool College, Gwent
Gwynedd Technical College, Gwynedd
Merthyr Tydfil Technical College, Mid Glamorgan
The Polytechnic of Wales, Mid Glamorgan
Bredgend Technical College, Mid Glamorgan
South Glamorgan Institute, South Glamorgan
Rumney College, South Glamorgan
West Glamorgan Institute, West Glamorgan
Swansea College of Further Education, West Glamorgan
Gorseinon College of Further Education, West Glamorgan
Neath College, West Glamorgan
Afan College, West Glamorgan

Consultant Rheumatologists

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many consultant rheumatologists there are in Gwent; what is the size of the population served; what is the ratio recommended by the Royal College of Physicians; and what action he intends to take to remedy the situation in Gwent.

Mr. Peter Walker: There is currently one whole-time equivalent consultant rheumatologist employed by Gwent district health authority, although patients with rheumatic conditions are also treated by consultants in other specialties.

Precise estimates of the population served are not available. The population of the area covered by the Gwent district health authority is 441,800. The majority of Gwent and some residents of other districts requiring rheumatological treatment are treated within Gwent. Likewise, some Gwent residents are treated in other health authorities.

I understand that the Royal College of Physicians/ regional advisers' guidelines refer to a recommended ratio of one whole-time equivalent consultant rheumatologist per 150,000 population.

The level of staff and resources for rheumatology services in Gwent is an operational matter for the Gwent health authority to determine.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people were (a) employed and (b) unemployed in (i) Wales and (ii) Clwyd for each year since 1979.

Mr. Peter Walker [holding answer 3 February 1988]: The information available is given in the following table:

[1] For Clwyd, the figures exclude self-employed—the only available figure, from the April 1981 Census of Population, which shows 17,800. Employees in Employment Statistics come from Censuses of Employment and relate to September.

[3] Department of Employment quarterly estimate series and Labour Force Survey estimates of self-employed.
[3] Unadjusted figures (including school leavers); Figures for June 1983 are affected by the 1983 Budget measures whereby some men, mainly aged 60 or over, were no longer required to sign on at unemployment offices to receive benefit. There is discontinuity in data from March 1986, owning to a change in the compilation of unemployment statistics.

ENERGY

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what has been the total value of goods and services provided to increase energy efficiency in each of the last 15 years, expressed as constant prices.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Energy efficiency goods and services are provided by a large number of bodies including central and local government, industry and professional organisations. Assessment of their value could only be undertaken at disproportionate cost.

Pin-ups

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he will issue instructions for the removal of all offensive pin-ups in all his departmental premises.

Mr. Parkinson: Item 69 of the programme of action to achieve equality of opportunity for women states that no form of sexual harassment at work will be tolerated in the Civil Service. The programme of action was published by the Cabinet Office (MPO) in 1984.

Guidance has already been issued to all Department of Energy staff that the display of sexually offensive material in the office amounts to sexual harassment, and that such behaviour is not acceptable.

Plutonium

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to his reply of 15 January, Official Report, column 421, in what form the figures for plutonium production are recorded.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I have nothing to add to the answers I gave the hon. Member on 15 January 1988 at column 421 and 2 February 1988 at column 532.

Oil

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what share of current oil production from the United Kingdom North sea is accounted for by (a) BP and (b) Britoil;

(2) what share of proven and probable oil reserves in the United Kingdom North sea is owned by (a) BP and (b) Britoil.

Mr. Peter Morrison: My annual report to Parliament on the development of the oil and gas resources of the United Kingdom, available in the Library of the House, contains tables showing operating companies' oil reserve estimates, company shares in oil fields, and output levels from those fields.

PRIME MINISTER

Sexual Harassment

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Prime Minister what is the Cabinet Office policy on sexual harassment at work; whether guidance has been issued to staff on reporting complaints; what is the number of complaints which have been reported in the past five years; and what disciplinary action has been taken.

The Prime Minister: The Cabinet Office is totally opposed to sexual harassment at work. No specific guidance has been issued on reporting these matters. Complaints should go to the personnel manager or welfare officer. None has been reported in the past five years.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister (1) if, during her recent discussions with Chancellor Kohl, she raised questions of the modernisation programme for NATO nuclear weapons, in terms of the re-deployment of the nuclear warheads of Pershings I and II and cruise missiles within the context of the Montebello agreement of 1983;

(2) if, during her recent meeting with Chancellor Kohl, the issue of possible United Kingdom-France joint nuclear weapons development and deployment was raised, in the context of the responsibilities discharged by Her Majesty's Government under the nuclear non-proliferation treaty.

The Prime Minister: No.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister if, in her recent meetings with President Mitterrand and Ministers in the French Government, she discussed the implications of article I of the non-proliferation treaty of 1968 in future Anglo-French nuclear weapons collaboration.

The Prime Minister: No.

Mr. John Stalker

Mr. Rees: To ask the Prime Minister which of her Ministers has the duty of asking the Attorney-General to consider whether the former deputy chief constable of Greater Manchester is to be prosecuted under the Official Secrets Act or, in view of the income derived from the publication, to be proceeded against under the civil law.

The Prime Minister: As to the question of possible criminal proceedings, I refer the right hon. Gentleman to the answer given by my right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General to the hon. Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) on 4 February, at column 681. The question whether to institute civil proceedings against Mr. Stalker is a matter for Ministers collectively.

Civil Nuclear Installations

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make it her policy at the next European Council of Ministers meeting to raise the matter of the bribery and corruption allegations involving European Economic Community civil nuclear installations; and what initiatives she expects to take to strengthen Euratom safeguards provisions in the European Economic Community.

The Prime Minister: No. The allegations surrounding the transfer of nuclear material between Belgium and the Federal Republic of Germany are matters for those Governments. Judicial inquiries into them have been set up in both countries and the question is also to be considered by a committee of inquiry of the Federal Germany Parliament. Investigations by the European Commission and the International Atomic Energy Agency have found no evidence of any breach of Euratom safeguards provisions.

Northern Ireland

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what assessment she has made of the implications for security in Northern Ireland, with particular reference to the safety of British troops, of the recently announced decision not to prosecute officers of the Royal Ulster Constabulary for alleged offences of conspiracy to pervert the course of justice; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on 28 January 1988, at column 465.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

European Commission Documents

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many documents published by the Commission of the European Economic Community have been reclassified from the COM series, following representation from Ministers or officials of the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: None. Decisions about the classification of documents are for the Commission. We have not sought to have documents reclassified.

East Timor

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the British delegation to the United Nations Commission on Human Rights will support a move to have the human rights situation investigated in East Timor at their meeting in Geneva in February.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Lady to the reply I gave on 19 January to the hon. Member for Caernarfon (Mr. Wigley) at column 639.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Councillor Mrs. Angela Pink

Mr. Allen: To ask the Attorney-General if he will call for a copy of the report to the Director of Public Prosecutions from the Nottinghamshire police regarding Councillor Mrs. Angela Pink; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: Reports of alleged offences are submitted to me by the Director of Public Prosecutions only if my consent to a prosecution is required or if for some other reason it is considered appropriate to do so.

Public Records Office

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Attorney-General if he will review the current cost of obtaining photocopied pages or microfilm copies of documents released under the 30-year rule and kept at the Public Records Office; if he will seek to institute a reduction in unit costs charged to researchers seeking such Public Records Office information; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The fees and charges payable in respect of photocopies and microfilm of public records open to inspection in the Public Records Office are currently prescribed by the Public Records Office (Fees) Regulations 1987 (SI 1987/444). They are calculated to recover the full cost of the service in respect of each particular reprographic process and are kept under continual review.

Crown Prosecutors

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Attorney-General if he will place in the Library a copy of the code for Crown prosecutors.

The Attorney-General: The code for Crown prosecutors is set out in the annual report made by the Director of Public Prosecutions to the Attorney-General. Copies of the Director's first report were placed in the Libraries of both Houses on 13 August 1987. This was announced in the Official Report on 21 October 1987 at column 743.

Sampson and Stalker Reports

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Attorney-General whether the reports of either Mr. Colin Sampson or Mr. John Stalker to the Director of Public Prosecutions for Northern Ireland recommended prosecution of any members of the Royal Ulster Constabulary with regard to the illegal killings of any persons; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: As is the usual practice with police reports covering criminal investigations, neither the report by Mr. John Stalker nor the report by Mr. Colin Sampson will be published. I remind the hon. Member, however, of the following passage in the statement I made to the House on 25 January 1988:

"In regard to the shooting incidents to which I have referred, the Director has considered all the facts and information ascertained and reported by Mr. Stalker and Mr. Sampson, and he has re-examined the original RUC investigation files. He has concluded that the evidence does not warrant any further prosecution in respect of the shootings which occurred on 11 November 1982 and 12 December 1982 and which have already been the subject of prosecutions. He has further concluded that the evidence does not warrant any prosecution in respect of either the fatal shooting or the wounding that occurred on 24 November 1982. I have considered the Director's conclusions and I agree with them. He has given directions accordingly."—[Official Report, 25 January 1988; Vol. 126, c. 22.]

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Attorney-General whether his statement in relation to the Director of Public Prosecutions for Northern Ireland's decision not to prosecute Royal Ulster Constabulary officers for allegedly perverting the course of justice was based on the findings of inquiries prior to, as well as during, the course of the Stalker–Sampson investigations; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: I refer the hon. Member to my statement to the House on 25 January. The Director considered all the facts and information ascertained and reported by Mr. Stalker and Mr. Sampson, he re-examined the original RUC investigation files and his conclusions were reached in the light of all the facts and information brought to his notice.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Attorney-General whether forensic evidence discovered during the course of inquiries by Mr. John Stalker and Mr. Colin Sampson was made available to the courts during any prosecution of persons for unlawful killing; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: Trials of members of the RUC took place in March 1984 and May 1984. Mr. Stalker was appointed to conduct his investigation on 24 May 1984 and Mr. Stalker's interim report was furnished to the chief constable on 18 September 1985. Accordingly any evidence elicited by the investigation team headed by Mr. Stalker and Mr. Sampson was not available to the courts during the prosecutions referred to.

Michael Tighe

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Attorney-General (1) whether tapes in connection with the killing of Michael Tighe at Ballynerry Road North, Lurgon, are still in existence; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether (a) the tape made by the security forces and (b) a transcript of the tape were made available to Mr. Colin Sampson before his final report was made to the Director of Public Prosecutions for Northern Ireland in respect of the killing of Micheel Tighe; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: As is the usual practice with police reports covering criminal investigations, neither the report by Mr. John Stalker nor the report by Mr. Colin Sampson will be published. Accordingly I do not intend to make any statement on detailed matters of evidence.

Police Officers (Possible Prosecutions)

Mr. Campbell-Savours To ask the Attorney-General if he will specify the precise considerations which led him to inform the Director of Public Prosecutions for Northern Ireland about the nature of the public interest in relation to the possible prosecutions of Superintendent Thomas George Anderson, Superintendent Samuel George Flanagan and Chief Superintendent Desmond Brown for seeking to pervert the course of justice in respect of the alleged suppression of information on an unlawful killing; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: I refer the hon. Member to the full statement which I made to the House on 27 January 1988. I have nothing to add to it either generally or with particular reference to the considerations of public interest (and in particular considerations of national security) which were taken into account, or as to the identity of any person whose conduct was the subject of investigation.

Mr. Martin Macauley

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Attorney-General whether the tapes in connection with the killing of Michael Tighe were made available to the court at the time of the trial of Mr. Martin Macauley; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The evidence before the court at the time of the trial of Mr. Martin Macauley is a matter of public record. The court received no evidence of or from any tape.

Legal Aid

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Attorney-General why information is not available in respect of the amount of legal aid moneys recovered in 1983, 1984, 1985, 1986 and 1987 and paid in respect of a solicitor who at the relevant time did not hold a current practising certificate; and whether he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The information is not available because recoveries of legal aid moneys in the circumstances described are not separately recorded.

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Attorney-General whether he will introduce new procedures designed to ensure that a declaration of certification is made before a legal aid payment is made to a solicitor and that anyone making a false declaration is prosecuted.

The Attorney-General: The Lord Chancellor has asked the legal aid head office to give further details of its procedures and if necessary to review them. I will write to the hon. Member when that review is complete.

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Attorney-General under which heading in the legal aid accounts for 1985-86 are to be found sums recovered from solicitors who at the relevant time did not hold a current practising certificate.

The Attorney-General: Sums are recovered by deduction from subsequent payments to the solicitors concerned. Recoupments thus lead to the amount recorded in the legal aid accounts as "solicitors" charges and counsel's fees being lower than would otherwise have been the case.

Uncertificated Solicitors

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Attorney-General whether he will seek to strengthen the criminal law with the intention of reducing the number of uncertificated solicitors who are acting improperly.

The Attorney-General: I see no reason to do so. Criminal sanctions for an offence under section 20 of the Solicitors Act 1974 are already severe; penalties of imprisonment for not more than two years, a fine, or both may be imposed. Specific offences relating to the commission of certain prohibited acts attract other penalties under the Solicitors Act 1974.

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Attorney-General why he will not take steps to establish a method of complaints against uncertificated solicitors which is more open to scrutiny than the Solicitors Complaints Bureau.

The Attorney-General: I have not seen any reason to do so.

Solicitors Complaints Bureau

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Attorney-General why he will not set up an inquiry into the way in which the Solicitors Complaints Bureau conducts investigations, with respect to its standards of impartiality.

The Attorney-General: I have not seen any reason to do so.

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Attorney-General whether he has ever met Mr. Stringer of the Solicitors Complaints Bureau; and whether he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: I have not met Mr. Stringer.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Education Act 1980

Mr. Rost: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he is willing to consider representations from right hon. Members and hon. Members in respect of proposals made under sections 12 and 13 of the Education Act 1980 at any time up to the date of his formal decision on that proposal being published.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend would encourage hon. and right hon. Members to make representations to him about proposals made under sections 12 and 13 of the Education Act 1980 whenever possible within three months of the date of publication of those proposals. He is, nevertheless, willing to listen to representations after that time. Once proposals have been approved or rejected under those sections, my right hon. Friend has no power to rescind that decision.

Mr. Rost: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether the procedures taken by himself, his Ministers and officials within his Department in arriving at a decision for approval or rejection of a proposal under sections 12 and 13 of the Education Act 1980 are treated as strictly confidential, and do not constitute any decision until he publicly announces such a decision.

Mr. Dunn: Advice from officials to Ministers is normally regarded as confidential. My right hon. Friend is advised that, where a decision in respect of particular proposals under sections 12 or 13 of the Education Act 1980 is communicated to the proposers, the proposals are approved or rejected for the purposes of those sections, irrespective of whether any public announcement has been made.

Mr. Rost: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the procedure he adopts (a) to publish decisions taken under sections 12 and 13 of the Education Act 1980 and (b) to inform all interested parties of such a decision.

Mr. Dunn: Approval or rejection by my right hon. Friend of proposals published under sections 12 and 13 of the Education Act 1980 is conveyed to the proposers concerned. The authority is required to inform local objectors of the decision. Where an hon. or right hon. Member has expressed an interest in the proposal, it is the usual practice of my right hon. Friend to inform the hon. Member of the decision at the same time as it is conveyed to the proposers.

Schools (Opting-out)

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received seeking the insertion of a clause in the Education Reform Bill which would require that, where a school had voted under the opt out provisions to remain under local authority control, a minimum time period should elapse before a further ballot may be held on the same subject; what response he has made; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: No such representations have been received. However, in the interests of minimising disruption to schools, the Government have brought forward an amendment to the Bill in Committee to ensure that no governing body may resolve to hold a ballot if one has been held within the previous 12 months, unless the Secretary of State gives his written consent.

Lancashire County Council (Grants)

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what grants he has allocated to Lancashire county council for 1988-89; what were the allocations for 1987-88; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: Lancashire LEA's allocation for prescribed capital expenditure on schools and further and higher education in 1988-89 is £12·809 million; its allocation in 1987-88 was £5·994 million. Next year's allocation is 113 per cent. higher than this year's, and represents 50 per cent. of its planned expenditure compared with the national average of 39 per cent. In addition, the authority has been allocated £3·298 million for expenditure by governors of voluntary aided and special agreement schools in 1988-89 compared with £0·793 million in 1987-88, which represents an increase of 316 per cent. and is the second highest allocation made.

ENVIRONMENT

Environmental Protection (Funding)

Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those applications made by agencies in the United Kingdom for funding under the European Commission ACE fund to protect the environment; and if he will give the outcome of those applications.

Mr. Moynihan: In the information in the table, successful applications for funding udner the European Community ACE—Action by the Community on the Environment—regulations are marked with an asterisk. Decisions on some projects have had to be deferred pending clarifications of technical points or through lack of funds at the time of consideration.

Planning Applications

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Chelmsford, Official Report, 1 February, column 432, how many of the planning appeals received by his Department from applicants in the Chelmsford area involved planning applications in green belt land, in each of the last three available years.

Mr. Waldegrave: The information is not available exactly in the form requested. The number of planning appeals from Chelmsford borough involving land in the designated green belt recorded as having been decided by inspectors in 1984, 1985 and 1986 was:

Year	Appeals Decided
1984	18
1985	32
1986	35

Disabled People

Mrs. Rosie Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what additional measures he intends to undertake to ensure equal employment opportunities for persons with disabilities to allow for the fact that local authorities will no longer be able to exercise contract compliance on their behalf if the terms of the Local Government Bill remain unchanged; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: None. The provisions of the Local Government Bill do not affect employers' duties under the Disabled Persons (Employment) Act 1944.

River Calder (Pollution)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action is being taken to reduce the pollution of the River Calder in west Yorkshire.

Mr. Moynihan: Most of the River Calder from Huddersfield to its confluence with the River Aire is classified as poor quality (class 3). The Yorkshire water authority is working towards upgrading the river to fair quality (class 2) by the early 1990s. The improvement will largely come about through the completion of major schemes at sewage treatment works in the Huddersfield area on which the authority is planning to spend around £17 million over the next two to three years.

Lancashire

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what grants he has agreed to make to Lancashire county council in 1988-89; what grants were made by his Department to Lancashire in 1987-88; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: On the basis of its estimated spending, Lancashire county council will receive in 1987-88 £317.568 million in rate support grant. For spending at the 1988-89 RSG settlement spending assumption of £644.309 million, the council would receive £337.336 million

The council will also receive in respect of this financial year and 1988-89 payments of gipsy site grant and derelict land grant and small sums under part III of scheduel 15 to the Housing Act 1985. It is not yet possible to say how much the council will receive in these grants in respect of the two years, as payments are made on the basis of claims made to my Department after expenditure is incurred.

Supplementary Report

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the third supplementary report for 1986-87 and the fourth supplementary reports for 1983-84 and 1984-85 for England will be published.

Mr. Ridley: I have laid these supplementary reports —SRs—before the House today. The main purpose of these SRs is to adjust grant to reflect the latest information on each authority's expenditure. The fourth SRs for 1983-84 and 1984-85 make new estimates of the totals of relevant expenditure, and specific grants, and adjust aggregate Exchequer grant, individual authorites grant, grant-related expenditure—GRE—assessments and their liability to grant abatement in the light of audited outturn expenditure in these years. The third SR for 1986-87 makes similar changes in the light of provisional outturn expenditure. However, there was no expenditure guidance issued in 1986-87, so there was no grant abatement in that year. All three SRs make certain other changes to correct errors, reflect boundary changes, and so on.

The SRs have to be approved by the House of Commons. Subject to that, I plan to make the revisions to grants payments to reflect the reports early in April. Copies of the reports and tables showing revised grant entitlement are being sent today to local authoriy associations and to each authority.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

EC (Trade Barriers)

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement about current progress towards removing internal barriers to trade within the European Economic Community.

Mr. Alan Clark: We and our Community partners are making encouraging progress towards the completion of the single market by the target date of 31 December 1992. Over 100 individual measures aimed at removing barriers have been agreed in the last 18 months, 48 of them during the United Kingdom presidency in the second half of 1986. Following implementation of the Single European Act, the increased use of qualified majority voting is likely to speed up the process of decision taking.

Network Services Licences

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) if he will list in the Official Report the names of all the companies and individuals holding general value added network services licences and the dates of issue for each;

(2) if he will indicate the circumstances in which a general value added network services licence can be revoked.

Mr. Butcher: The provision of value added and data services, other than by the public telecommunications operators and their associates, is authorised under a class licence granted to all persons on 30 April 1987. Public telecommunications operators provide services under their main PTO licences. PTO associates are authorised to provide VADS under a separate but similar class licence also granted on 30 April 1987.

The precise circumstances in which the class licence can be revoked are set out in schedule 2 to the licence. In brief the licence may only be revoked in respect of an individual and then only:

(i) if the licensee agrees; or

(ii) if the Licensee has breached the conditions of the licence and refuses to comply with an enforcement order from the Director General of Telecommunications or if the licensee is running an unauthorised telecommunications system; or

(iii) if the licensee becomes insolvent.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Mr. John Bainbridge

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he will take regarding John Bainbridge, who petitioned the House on 9 December 1987.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The matter raised by John Bainbridge in his petition to the House on 9 December 1987 has been considered in accordance with the normal procedures and a decision will be given to him shortly. I shall then write to the hon. Member.

North Yorkshire Constabulary

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has reached a conclusion about his response to the requests from the North Yorkshire constabulary for an increase in their police establishment of 50 officers.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The application by North Yorkshire police authority for an increase in their force establishment is being considered along with applications from other authorities and in the light of advice from Her Majesty's inspectors of constabulary. No decisions have yet been taken.

Fixed Penalty Fines

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Deaprtment (1) how many fixed penalty fines were issued on foreign-registered vehicles for each of the last five years; if he will give a breakdown of the figures between (a) private vehicles and (b) business vehicles; and if he will express the figures as a percentage of the total number of fines;

(2) if he will list, by country of origin, the total number and value of fixed penalty fines for road traffic offences unrecovered, for each of the last five years;

(3) how many of the fixed penalty fines issued on foreign-registered vehicles for each of the last five years were paid; and if he will estimate the cost of recovering such fines that remained unpaid in the first instance;

(4) if he will list, by country of origin, the number of fixed penalty fines issued on foreign-registered vehicles for the last year for which figures are available;

(5) if he will list, by country of origin, the number of convictions for road traffic offences, other than fixed penalty fines, against drivers of foreign-registered vehicles, for the last year for which figures are available; and if he will give a breakdown between (a) private vehicles and (b) business vehicles.

Mr. John Patten: Information on fixed penalty notices issued, the proportion paid, and so on, and findings of guilt at all courts is published annually in the Home Office statistical bulletin "Offences Relating to Motor Vehicles, England and Wales" (tables 3, 6 and 7 of the issue for 1986, number 36/87, a copy of which is in the Library. Information is not collected centrally on the cost of recovering unpaid fines, the country of registration or the type of vehicle involved.

Road Traffic Offences

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list the total number of foreign offenders imprisoned for each of the last five years; and if he will express the figures as a percentage of (a) the total number of prisoners and (b) the total number of foreign prisoners imprisoned for road traffic offences;

(2) if he will list, by country of origin, the total number of offenders imprisoned for road traffic offences for each of the last five years, who were using foreign-registered vehicles.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The readily available information, which is only for 1986, is given in the table, excluding citizens of Commonwealth countries, Pakistan and the Republic of Ireland the recording of whom is not sufficiently reliable for separate estimates of their numbers to be given. No details of the registration of any vehicles involved are held centrally.

Rating Reform

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will introduce legislation to strengthen the provisions of the Data Protection Act in relation to the first and third data protection principles, in the light of the Data Protection Registrar's comments on the community charge; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: No.

Refugees

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State of the Home Department how many refugees are currently seeking political asylum in the United Kingdom; from which countries they originate; how many are in detenion; and what information he has as to which political movements they are members.

Mr. Renton: The latest available information on outstanding applications for asylum relates to 1 October 1987 and is shown in the following table. Delays in the input of data to the computer system means that some applications made before this date do not appear in the table and some applications on which a decision has been taken are included.

There are at present some 53 persons seeking asylum in the United Kingdom who have been detained for more than 14 days. Information regarding the membership of political movements of asylum-seekers is not readily available in the form requested and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Radio Authority

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the new radio authority will have powers to restrict the networking of programmes between local radio stations.

Mr. Renton: The extent to which programmes of interest to a wider audience are distributed between individual stations will be governed principally by the requirement on stations licensed by the radio authority to honour their promises of performance.

Amusement Arcades (Report)

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has received the report on amusement arcades and similar activities from the Gaming Board of Great Britain.

Mr. John Patten: Yes.

Immigration

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people are currently being held in detention under the Immigration Act 1987 (a) pending the outcome of an immigration appeal and (b) under detention for other reasons, at (i) Welford road prison, Leicester, and (ii) all other prisons in Britain.

Mr. Renton: There are currently seven people detained at Leicester prison, under the Immigration Act 1971. Of these one is detained pending the outcome of an immigration appeal.

The main prison service establishment used for immigration cases is Latchmere house where, on 4 February, 94 people were detained under the Immigration Act 1971. Similar information for other establishments, and details of those detained pending the outcome of an appeal is not kept centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

DNA Testing

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to publish the feasibility study on DNA testing; what arrangements he is making to assist those in financial hardship to obtain DNA tests; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: Officials are preparing a report on the pilot trial of the use of DNA profiling in immigration cases. A copy will be placed in the Library as soon as possible. We shall address the related policy issue, including the availability of financial assistance, when the report is available.

Shotgun Licences and Firearms Certificates

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many duplicate (a) shotgun licences and (b) firearms certificates were issued by each police force area in the last year for which figures are available and in the preceding year.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Central Guns Register

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the cost of establishing and maintaining a central guns register.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The recently published White Paper on the review of firearms controls drew attention to the possibility of establishing a national guns register, if on further examination, this seems desirable. I do not now have estimates of the costs which would be incurred in establishing and maintaining such a register.

Stolen Property Index

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the stolen property index is maintained on a sub-division, division or whole-force police area; and whether it is (a) circulated to other police forces and (b) available on request.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand that the stolen property index is maintained on a national basis. Some forces maintain their own index. Details from the index are available to police forces on request but are not available to the public.

Telephone Interceptions

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many wire taps were authorised in 1987 for the purpose of investigating nuisance callers to (a) British Telecom Talkabout and (b) other premium services operating with general value added network services licences.

Mr. Hurd: Any arrangements British Telecom may make for routine monitoring of calls to such services as British Telecom Talkabout are not made under section 2 of the Interception of Communications Act 1985.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Expenditure

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish the proportion of the Overseas Development Administration budget spent on emergency relief, project aid, programme aid, multilateral aid and technical assistance for each year for the last 10 years.

Mr. Chris Patten: Percentages of gross public expenditure on aid spent on these programmes were as follows:

	Multilateral aid	Bilateral aid
		Project aid	Programme aid	Technical cooperation	Disaster relief	Food aid
1977	33·7	22·4	11·7	20·7	0·2	1·2

Some multilateral aid and food aid was for disaster relief.

THE ARTS

Pin-ups

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he will issue instructions for the removal of all offensive pin-ups in all his departmental premises.

Mr. Luce: No form of sexual harassment at work is tolerated by my Department.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Borrowing Requirement

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate for the public sector borrowing requirement for 1987-88.

Mr. Major: The Autumn Statement forecast was for a PSBR in 1987-88 of £1 billion. A revised estimate will be published next month in the Financial Statement and Budget Report.

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the latest indication of Her Majesty's Government's borrowing requirement at the end of the 1987-88 financial year, on present spending plans.

Mr. Major: The Autumn Statement forecast was for a public sector borrowing requirement in 1987-88 of £1 billion. A revised estimate for 1987-88, together with a forecast for 1988-89, will be published next month in the Financial Statement and Budget Report.

NHS Funding

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if, in view of recent representations, he will increase the resources available to (a) the National Health Service and (b) education and training from the totals proposed in his White Paper.

Mr. Major: The White Paper plans show large increases in provision for both health and education. They will be reviewed again in the normal way in this year's public expenditure survey.

National Economic Development Council

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he next plans to meet the National Economic Development Council to discuss economic matters.

Mr. Major: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor plans to meet the National Economic Development Council next year.

Economic Growth

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer to what extent growth in the economy has been reflected in falling unemployment over the past year.

Mr. Major: Strong growth in the economy accounts for the greater part of the fall in unemployment of over half a million over the past year, the largest fall since similar records began in 1948.

Avgas

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he last met representatives of the General Aviation Manufacturers and Trade Association to discuss the duty on Avgas.

Mr. Lilley: My right hon. Friend has not met representatives of GAMTA and nor have I.

BP Sale

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a further statement on the costs of the BP sale.

Mr. Norman Lamont: It is provisionally estimated that the cost of the sale of BP shares in the financial year 1987-88 will be some £114 million. This represented about 2 per cent. of the total proceeds raised for the Government of £5,503 million.

The main categories of expenditure are estimated to comprise:

	£ million
United Kingdom sale
—advisers fees	3
—marketing costs	39
—receiving bank registration	5
—underwriting and selling commissions	36
Overseas sales	31
	114

In addition, the administrative costs of the Bank of England purchase arrangements borne by the Treasury are provisionally estimated to amount to some £1·4 million.

The corresponding spring supplementary estimate for these costs, which is for a token £1,000 and which will be presented shortly, provides for expenditure on expenses of £161,860,000. The difference represents transfers of funds within Government, principally stamp duty and VAT, which are not a cost to the Exchequer.

Gross Domestic Product

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the latest figures for the growth of gross domestic product over the past year.

Mr. Major: Real gross domestic product is provisionally estimated to have grown by 5¼ per cent. in the year to the third quarter of 1987.

Customs and Excise (Aberdeen)

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the total revenue collected by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise in Aberdeen over each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 3 February 1988]: I regret that this information is not available.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions he has held about proposals that Her Majesty's Customs and Excise office in Aberdeen, covering the north and north-east of Scotland, should be closed and its work transferred to Edinburgh or Glasgow.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 3 February 1988]: The office will not be closed. Although overall administrative responsibility for Customs and Excise matters in the north and north-east of Scotland will be transferred to Edinburgh and Glasgow (and Clyde) collections, senior managers will remain in Aberdeen to manage Customs and Excise matters and full services to local commercial and industrial organisations will be maintained.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many civil servants, by grade, are employed at Her Majesty's Customs and Excise office in Aberdeen.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 3 February 1988]: The Aberdeen regional collection of Customs and Excise has a total of 471½ staff, of whom the following grades are located in the town of Aberdeen:

Grade	Number of staff
7	4
SEO	14
HEO	51
EO	104
AO	71
AA	23
Personal Secretary	1
Typist	6
Messenger	2
	278

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to meet staff at Her Majesty's Customs and Excise in Aberdeen to discuss proposals to close that office.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 3 February 1988]: The Customs and Excise office in Aberdeen is not to close. The administrative section will, however, be transferred to Edinburgh or Glasgow as part of a necessary restructuring of the Scottish collections. Staff trade union representatives have been kept advised of the proposals and full discussions are taking place.

SCOTLAND

Parole

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland why prisoners in Scotland are not informed of the reasons for refusal of parole; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The practice of not giving reasons for refusal to grant early release on parole licence has operated since the parole scheme was introduced. The decision on whether an individual should be granted the privilége of parole is taken by my right hon. and learned Friend in the light of confidential advice from the Parole Board for Scotland.

Sheep (Radiation)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what dispensation was given in August 1986 to farmers in the restricted areas, following the Chernobyl accident, to leave their sheep unmarked.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: There was no dispensation to allow unmarked sheep to be moved from the restricted areas except in the case of movement of breeding stock to recognised breeding sales.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many sheep without markings were authorised by his Department to be recalled from auction marts in or around the restricted areas following the Chernobyl accident in August and September 1986.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: None.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on what date marking paint was made available to satisfy the needs of all sheep farmers in the restricted areas of Scotland following the Chernobyl accident in 1986.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Marking paint was available from 13 August 1986.

Prisoners (Solitary Confinement)

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many prisoners are in solitary confinement for disciplinary measures and how many prisoners are in solitary confinement for their own safety, in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Under rule 43 of the Prison (Scotland) Rules 1952, a prisoner may, as a punishment, be confined to his cell for a limited period on the authority of the governor or the visiting committee. This punishment is awarded very rarely and no prisoner is subject to it at present. Under rule 36 of the prison rules, a prisoner may be removed from association, with the authority of the visiting committee or the Secretary of State, in the interests of good order or discipline, or in his own interests. This is not a punishment, and the prisoner has access to normal privileges other than association. At 31 January 1988, 68 adult inmates were being held under this rule.

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has decided the amount of fee remission grant to allocate to schools participating in the assisted places scheme in respect of session 1988-89.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The allocations of fee remission grant for 1988-89 are shown in the table. As in 1987-88, 41 schools will participate.

EMPLOYMENT

YTS

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many places on YTS he plans for the Peterlee and Seaham areas of his Department in the year 1988-89.

Mr. Cope: For 1988-89, a total of 1,105 YTS places are provisionally planned in the local authority district of Easington, which includes Easington, Peterlee and Seaham.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people in the Peterlee and Seaham area of his Department have obtained jobs during or following their period on a YTS scheme.

Mr. Cope: Between April 1986 and July 1987, a total of 41 per cent. of young people who left YTS schemes in the Easington local authority district (which includes Easington, Peterlee and Seaham) were in jobs three months after leaving. Two-year YTS started in April 1986 and so most of those leaving schemes since that date did not complete their training. Results for those completing the two-year course will not be available until the end of this year.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people were employed in manfacturing industry (a) in May 1979 and (b) at the latest date for which figures are available; and if he will express each figure as a percentage of the total of those in employment.

Mr. Lee: The figures for June 1979 (there are no comparable estimates for May) and September 1987, the latest date for which figures are available are given in the following table:

The Civilian Employed Labour Force in Great Britain

	Number
(a) Manufacturing industries
June 1979	7,247,000
September 1987	5,328,000
(b) All industries and services
June 1979	22,480,000
September 1987	24,187,000
(c) (a) expressed as a percentage of (b)
June 1979	32·2
September 1987	22·0

The Civilian Employed Labour Force is the sum of employees in employment and the self employed. The figures are unadjusted for the effects of seasonal variations.

Equal Opportunities

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many of his Department's management training courses include sessions on equal opportunities for women; and what proportion of managers at grade 6 level and above working outside headquarters have received training on equal opportunities for women.

Mr. Nicholls: Most introductory line management training courses include sessions on all aspects of equal opportunities; these cover equal opportunities for women. There are plans to include such sessions in the remaining courses. Other line management courses contain where appropriate either a specific equal opportunities session or a discussion on equal opportunities issues. Overall, 23 courses contain general equal opportunities sessions and there are plans to include such sessions in a further four courses. In addition, three courses contain separate sessions on equal opportunities for women.

Because of their different entry methods and the variety of courses they have attended, it is not possible to identify what proportion of managers at grade 6 level working outside headquarters have received equal opportunities training.

Benefit Claimants

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give, for 1984, 1985, 1986 and 1987, the total number of unemployment benefit claimants allowed to sign quarterly; and if he will give the totals on a similar basis for each unemployment benefit office in Blyth and Cramlington.

Mr. Lee: The numbers of unemployed claimants in Great Britain included in the monthly unemployment count who were allowed to sign quarterly in December 1984, 1985, 1986 and 1987 were 261,466, 291,788, 294,169 and 261,189 respectively. The comparable figures for the Blyth and Cramlington unemployment benefit offices at 10 December 1987 were 418 and 200 respectively. Figures of quarterly attenders are not available below national level for earlier years.

Job Creation

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many more jobs have been created since 1983.

Mr. Lee: There are no figures for job gains and job losses. Between March 1983 and September 1987, the latest date for which figures are available, there was a net increase of 1,449,000 in the size of the employed labour force in Great Britain. The figure has been adjusted for the effects of seasonal variations. The employed labour force is the sum of employees in employment, the self employed and Her Majesty's forces.

Japan (Overseas Visitors)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what initiatives have been taken by his Department to attract overseas visitors from Japan to visit the countries of Britain.

Mr. Lee: Japan is an increasingly important market and determined efforts are directed by the British tourist authiority towards encouraging Japanese people to undertake longer stays in Britain to enable them to visit as much of the country as possible. The 267,000 visitors to the United Kingdom from Japan in 1987 showed a 30 per cent. increase on 1986.

Regional Unemployment

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will outline the measures his Department is undertaking to reduce the regional variations in levels of unemployment in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Lee: My Department co-operates closely with regional policy initiatives to bring help where it is most needed. In particular, our wide range of enterprise, employment and training programmes plays an important part in efforts to encourage local job creation, and give unemployed people the skills and experience they need to get back to work. It is most encouraging that over the past 18 months unemployment rates have been falling fastest in regions such as Wales, the north, and north-west, where unemployment was highest.

Job Training Scheme

Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the number of places available under the present job training scheme; what is the number of places not filled; and how many individuals have obtained credits or qualifications as a direct result of their time on the scheme.

Mr. Cope: The Government have indicated that they were willing to provide resources for up to 110,000 people to be in training on the new job training scheme at any one time.

At the end of December 1987, the latest date for which figures are available there were 24,418 formerly unemployed people participating in the new job training scheme.

Information on credits or qualifications is not yet available. The Manpower Services Commission has commissioned a follow-up survey which will give some information on qualifications. The results should be known in the spring.

Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, when the new job training scheme becomes part of a larger programme, how many places will be available; what is his estimate of take-up, based upon experience of previous schemes; and how many individuals he expects to acquire vocational or certified credits towards qualifications.

Mr. Cope: The new job training scheme will become a part of the new training programme for unemployed adults from September. Details of the new programme are currently under consideration.

Lancashire County Council (Grants)

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what grants have been allocated by the Manpower Services Commission to Lancashire county council for 1988-89; what grants were made in 1987-88; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: The estimated level of payments is provided in the table.

Programme/Scheme	1987-88 £000s	1988-89 £000s
Technical and Vocational Education Initiative	288	[1]280
YTS	1,920	1,759
Work Related Non-Advanced Further Education	3,820	3,845
Old Job Training Scheme	387	[2]260
Community Programme	3,700	[2]1,637
Training Linked to the Community Programme	17	[2]5
Wider Opportunities Training Programme	132	[2]42
Access to Information Technology	3	—
Industrial Language Training Service	99	[2]41

[1] Payment for 1988-89 is still subject to contract.
[2] Estimates for 1988-89 relate to the period April to August only.

We are currently considering proposals from the Manpower Services Commission for the operation of the new adult training programme which will replace the community programme, training linked to the community programme, the old job training scheme, the wider opportunities training programme (and some other programmes) from September 1988.

Estimates for the level of payments for these existing programmes have therefore been made for the period up to the end of August 1988.

DEFENCE

Low-flying Aircraft (Benbecula)

Mr. MacDonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Western Isles on 14 December 1987, Official Report, column 414, he will make a statement on (a) the cause of the incident involving a low-flying United States air force F-111 over Benbecula on 12 September 1983, (b) the height and speed at which the aircraft was flying, (c) information available to him on what disciplinary measures were taken against the aircrew and (d) what revisions were made to instructions to aircrew concerning mock attacks on RAF Benbecula; and if he will place in the Library a copy of the report of the official investigation into the incident.

Mr. Freeman: The incident involving an F-111 aircraft of the United States air force engaged in routine training over RAF Benbecula on 12 September 1983 was investigated fully by the Royal Air Force with the complete co-operation of the United States air force. It is not the practice to make public the findings of such investigations, since their efficient conduct relies heavily upon evidence volunteered in confidence. Appropriate steps have been taken to regulate military flying activity in the vicinity of RAF Benbecula.

Nuclear Warheads

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many nuclear warheads and their delivery vehicles have been withdrawn from Europe as a result of multilateral or bilateral agreements by the United States and Soviet Union since 1958.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I have nothing to add to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Dr. Thomas), on 23 November 1987, at column 36.

Security Services

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the statement by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary, the hon. Member for Kettering (Mr. Freeman) on 26 January, Official Report, column 259, when the hon. Member for Linlithgow may expect to receive a formal and substantive reply to the points raised during the debate on the Army, concerning the legal status of the security services, relations between British intelligence and Australian intelligence in respect of the Whitlam Government, and responsibility for the La Belle discotheque outrage.

Mr. Freeman: A reply will be sent soon.

Lynx Helicopter

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received from Westland plc concerning the announcement of the award of a contract for the new 360 deg. radar to be fitted to the Lynx helicopter.

Mr. Sainsbury: No contract has been placed. However, we are considering representations from a number of propective suppliers including Westland plc.

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects the modernisation programme for the Royal Navy's Lynx helicopter fleet to be completed.

Mr. Sainsbury: The modernisation programme for the Royal Navy's Lynx helicopter will be carried out by a phased conversion programme which it is planned to complete by the mid-1990s.

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total value of contracts so far awarded as part of the modernisation of the Royal Navy's Lynx helicopter fleet.

Mr. Sainsbury: The value of total commitment to date is £83 million.

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what reasons have led to the delay in the announcement of the award of the contract for the new 360 deg radar to be fitted to the Lynx helicopter;

(2) what issues he is considering in deciding on the award of the contract for the new 360 deg radar to be fitted to the Lynx helicopter;

(3) when he expects to announce the award of the contract for the new 360 deg radar to be fitted to the Lynx helicopter;

(4) what assessment he has made of the defence implications of any delays in announcing the award of the contract for the new 360 deg radar to be fitted to the Lynx helicopter.

Mr. Sainsbury: I have nothing yet to add to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Ashford (Mr. Speed) on 16 November 1987 at column 455.

Graduate Engineer Officers

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many engineer officers graduated from training in (a) 1985, (b) 1986 and (c) 1987.

Mr. Freeman: The number of Royal Air Force engineer officers who entered productive service in each year is as follows:

	Number
1985	166
1986	121
1987	189

Pilots

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the present ratio of pilots to aircraft in the Royal Air Force.

Mr. Freeman: Including pilots in all roles, approximately 2·3:1.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Royal Air Force pilots graduated to fly (a) fast jets, (b) multi-engined aircraft and (c) helicopters in 1987.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is as follows: (a) 67; (b) 75; (c) 33.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the present ratio of fast-jet pilots to frontline fast-jet aircraft.

Mr. Freeman: It is not our practice to disclose such details relating to operational aircraft.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many pilots who took premature voluntary retirement in 1987 or who have requested premature voluntary retirement were trained fast-jet pilots.

Mr. Freeman: The numbers of trained fast-jet pilots who in 1987 took, or requested, premature voluntary retirement were 35 and 33 respectively.

RAF Personnel

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Royal Air Force airmen currently serve in each of the following categories: (a) armaments engineering branch, (b) mechanical engineering branch, (c) electrical engineering branch and (d) electronics branch.

Mr. Freeman: As at 1 January 1988, the numbers of trained airmen currently serving in the specified groupings of trades, covering both aircraft and ground support engineering, are as follows:

	Numbers
a. Armament Engineering	3,285
b. Mechanical Engineering	15,880
c. Electrical Engineering	4,436
d. Electronic Engineering	11,554

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Royal Air Force airmen became qualified in 1987 to serve in each of the following branches: (a) armaments engineering branch, (b) mechanical engineering branch, (c) electrical engineering branch and (d) electronics branch.

Mr. Freeman: The numbers of RAF airmen who entered the trained strength in 1987 were:

	Numbers
a. Armaments Engineering	152
b. Mechanical Engineering	632
c. Electrical Engineering	224
d. Electronic Engineering	739

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many Royal Air Force airmen in the armament engineer branch left the Royal Air Force in (a) 1985, (b) 1986 and (c) 1987; and how many of these failed to complete their engagement;

(2) how many Royal Air Force airmen in the electronic engineer branch left the Royal Air Force in (a) 1985, (b) 1986 and (c) 1987; and how many of these failed to complete their engagement;

(3) how many Royal Air Force airmen in the electrical engineer branch left the Royal Air Force in (a) 1985, (b) 1986 and (c) 1987; and how many of these failed to complete their engagement;

(4) how many Royal Air Force airmen in the mechanical engineer branch left the Royal Air Force in (a) 1985, (b) 1986 and (c) 1987; and how many of these failed to complete their engagements.

Mr. Freeman: The numbers of airmen in each of the specified groupings of trades who left the RAF in each of the last three years, together with the numbers of those who failed to complete their engagements, are as follows:

Grouping of Trades	1985 Total Outflow	1985 Failed to Complete Engagement	1986 Total Outflow	1986 Failed to Complete Engagement	1987 Total Outflow	1987 Failed to Complete Engagement
Armaments	161	92	147	85	122	63
Mechanical	858	394	921	436	850	380
Electrical	247	98	258	110	208	103
Electronic	676	303	702	333	571	246

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many engineer officers left the Royal Air Force in (a) 1985, (b) 1986 and (c) 1987; and how many of these failed to complete their engagement.

Mr. Freeman: The numbers of engineer officers who left the Royal Air Force in each year were as follows:

	Total Outflow	Failed to Complete/ Engagement
(a) 1985	110	84
(b) 1986	132	95
(c) 1987	139	93

INF Treaty

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) whether Her Majesty's Government were consulted before the inclusion in the intermediate nuclear forces treaty of the clause permitting the re-use and repackaging of fissile material and components from the warheads of Pershing II and ground-launched cruise missiles;

(2) whether he had been consulted or has any knowledge of the United States Government's intention to use fissile material and components from the warheads of Pershing II and ground-launched cruise missiles withdrawn under the terms of the intermediate nuclear forces treaty for use in other nuclear weapons intended for European deployment.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The Government were fully consulted by the United States Government throughout the negotiation of the INF treaty, which is specific to the elimination of missiles, launchers, support equipment and facilities. It contains no express provision governing the future use of fissile materials. The warheads for the Pershing II and GLCM missiles to be withdrawn under the INF agreement are, like the missiles themselves, wholly the property of the United States Government and the use of the nuclear material they contain will be entirely a matter for the United States Government.

Stinger Missiles

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the threat to Royal Navy Lynx helicopters on the Armila patrol from Iranian gunboats equipped with Stinger missiles.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The range of threats to our naval forces in the Gulf is kept under constant review, but it would not be in the interests of their security to reveal our assessment of such threats.

Helicopters (Gulf Duty)

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) whether all Royal Naval helicopters currently on deployment in the Gulf are equipped with passive decoys against Stinger missiles; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether all Royal Naval helicopters currently on deployment in the Gulf have armaments capable of destroying Boghammer raiding craft; and if he will make a statement;

(3) whether Sea Skua is capable of destroying Boghammer raiding craft; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Royal Navy helicopters serving with the patrol are provided with equipment relevant to the range of threats they face in carrying out their operational tasks. It would not be in the interests of the safety of our helicopters and their crews to define the specific capabilities of individual aircraft.

Pensions

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will estimate the cost of bringing the pensions of those who retired from the armed services between 1976 and 1978 into line with those who have retired since; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Pensions currently in issue to retired members of the armed forces vary with each year of retirement as a result of periodic changes in rates of pay and annual adjustments under index-linking arrangements. There is, therefore, no satisfactory basis for making the estimate requested.

Trident

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) pursuant to his answer of 1 February, Official Report, column 444, whether United Kingdom Trident warheads will be reattached to missiles by United Kingdom personnel at the United States Trident facility in King's bay, Georgia; and if he will make a statement;

(2) pursuant to his answer of 1 February, Official Report, column 444, whether any British warheads will be stored at the United States Trident facility at King's bay Georgia; and if he will make a statement;

(3) pursuant to his answer of 1 February, Official Report, column 444, if he will estimate how many British military and civilian personnel will be employed at the United States Trident facility at King's bay, Georgia.

Mr. Sainsbury: As has been stated previously, the United Kingdom-designed and built Trident warhead will at all times remain in United Kingdom hands. These warheads will be mated to and demated from United Kingdom Trident missiles at RNAD Coulport exclusively. No United Kingdom Trident warheads will therefore be transported to, or stored or handled at the United States facility at King's bay, Georgia by any personnel. It is not planned that any United Kingdom staff will be permanently employed at King's bay.

TRANSPORT

Road Haulage Permits

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many of the applications for European Community multilateral road haulage permits to be submitted by 31 December 1987 were successful; and how many successful applications originated in (a) England, (b) Scotland, (c) Wales and (d) Northern Ireland.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There were 189 applicants for the extra 125 multilateral permits. Hauliers based in England obtained 107, in Scotland three, in Wales four and in Northern Ireland eleven. These were additional to the United Kingdom's 1987 quota of 902 permits.

Carlton PSV

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will undertake an urgent inquiry into the financial standings of Carlton PSV before he allows further sales of National Bus Company holdings to proceed, especially in relation to Crewe and Nantwich.

Mr. David Mitchell: I have received no proposals from the National Bus Company for further sales to Carlton PSV; I have no reason to think that any inquiry is necessary.

Horne Report

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement concerning the current position of his Department in relation to recommendation 67 of the report of Professor Horne and his committee on the liaison between highway authorities and public utilities.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Government's response to the Horne report called for negotiations between local authority associations and the National Joint Utilities Group on reommendation 67 which relates to diversions of services made necessary by highway authorities' works. Negotiations started late. Good progress has since been made in working out a code of practice; related financial issues are also currently under discussion.

I hope that the negotiations will be completed within the next four to five months. We shall take the results into account in preparing the legislation required to implement the Horne report.

Public Transport Policies

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how his Department seeks to develop public transport policies within given travel-to-work areas, concomitant with population changes within those areas.

Mr. David Mitchell: In London it is the responsibility of London Regional Transport and the British Railways Board to provide a secure public transport service in response to changes in demographic and other relevant factors and in accordance with principles approved by the Secretary of State. Outside London, responsibility rests with the local authorities concerned to supplement local commercial services in accordance with their general public transport policies.

Herald of Free Enterprise

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if his Department has had any communication with the International Maritime Organisation secretariat concerning possible breaches of (a) the international maritime dangerous goods code and (b) the 1974 international convention for the safety of life at sea in regard to the known cargo inventory of the Herald of Free Enterprise when it sank at Zeebrugge.

Mr. David Mitchell: No. It is not a requirement under either the code or the convention for breaches of regulations to be reported to the International Maritime Organisation's secretariat.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has concerning the exact cargo inventory carried on the Herald of Free Enterprise ferry when it sank at Zeebrugge in March 1987.

Mr. David Mitchell: The Department has a copy of the manifest for the last voyage of the Herald of Free Enterprise which indentifies all the goods-carrying vehicles on board and details the contents of their loads. None of the goods disclosed on the manifest were of a type prohibited from carriage on passenger vessels.

Lancashire County Council (Grants)

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what grants he has allocated to Lancashire county council for 1988-89; what allocations were made in 1987-88; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Transport supplementary grant allocated to Lancashire county council is £4,683,000 for 1988-89 and £6,375,000 for 1987-88.

Grant is paid at 50 per cent. of accepted expenditure. The lower grant in 1988-89 results primarily from the fact that expenditure on some important major schemes accepted for grant is coming to an end. One new major scheme was accepted for 1988-89 with expenditure in the year of £1·4 million. Adjustments of £1·5 million were made to reflect lower than expected expenditure on some aspects of the county's programme in previous years.

A grant of around £7,000 in 1987-88 has been approved under section 272 of the Highways Act 1980.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Social Security Reform

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish a table showing the levels of gross earnings in April at which (a) a single householder, (b) a married couple, (c) a married couple with two children aged four and six years and (d) a single parent with one child, aged three years, will lose housing benefit, assuming full take-up of family credit, average rent and rates and other assumptions, as in his reply to the hon. Member for Sunderland, North (Mr. Clay) Official Report, 1 December 1987, column 566.

Mr. Scott: On the basis of illustrative assumptions about the level of rents, rates and tax allowances from April 1988, informaion about the levels of gross income at which entitlement to housing benefit will cease is set out in the table.

	(1) Assumed tax allowance per year £	(2) Assumed rent per week £	(3) Assumed rates per week £	(4) Total gross weekly income at which housing benefit runs out £	(5) Gross income in Column 4 made up of Gross wages £	Child benefit £	Family credit £
Single Householder (aged 25-59)	2,505·00	15·94	6·67	75·20	75·20	—	—
Married Couple (one over 18, both under 60)	3,925·00	17·82	7·50	107·20	107·20	—	—
Married Couple (one over 18, both under 60) with two children aged 4 and 6	3,925·00	19·12	8·02	129·41	91·00	14·50	23·91
Single Parent (over 18) one child aged 3	3,925·00	17·82	7·50	104·30	54·00	12·15	38·15

Notes:
1. The tax rate is assumed to be 27 per cent.
2. The tax allowance for the Single Parent consists of the single person's tax allowance and the additional personal allowance.

Thames Health Regions

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the revenue derived from services to private patients by hospitals in each of the four Thames health regions in the last year for which figures are available; and how this compares with (a) five and (b) 10 years ago.

Mrs. Currie: Following is the information requested:

Income from charges to private patients[1]

	Per annual accounts £000	At 1986-87 prices £000
North West Thames Region
1976-77	4,250	10,425
1981-82	7,946	10,161
1986-87	5,965	5,965
North East Thames Region
1976-77	3,270	8,021
1981-82	6,395	8,178
1986-87	8,837	8,837
South East Thames Region
1976-77	3,138	7,697
1981-82	6,906	8,831
1986-87	6,592	6,592
South West Thames Region
1976-77	1,454	3,567
1981-82	2,889	3,694
1986-87	2,621	2,691

Note:
The figures for the earlier years have been expressed at 1986-87 prices by the use of the Gross Domestic Product deflator.

NHS Patients (Statistics)

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what proportion of in-patients in National Health Service hospitals develop infections or other medical conditions after they have entered hospital as a patient.

Mrs. Currie: The only such condition for which statistics are currently centrally available is for the post-operative infection. In 1984 the estimated percentage of in-patient cases with a diagnosis of post operative infection, for all RHAs, was 0·7 per cent. A figure for 1985 will be available shortly and I will write to my hon. Friend when it is to hand.

Invalid Care Allowance

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when Mrs. Ingrid Joan Gorman of 14 Allerton Grove, Birkenhead, will receive the invalid care allowance which she applied for in December 1986 under reference No. 071904.

Mr. Scott: Mrs. Gorman's claim was decided on 28 January and she should receive payment within the next seven days. I regret that processing of the claim took much longer than is usual and I am writing to the hon. Member.

Benefits

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will set out in tabular form the number of (a) claimants and (b) dependants claiming housing benefit; and if he will give comparable data on the numbers claiming at the introduction of the scheme.

Mr. Scott: Housing benefit was fully introduced in April 1983. The number of people receiving housing benefit in the autumn of 1983 was 6,970,000, and in the autumn of 1986 was 7,180,000. We do not collect centrally the number of dependants.

Mentally Ill People

Mr. Irving: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services which regional health authorities have assigned funds to bridge the transition to community-based services for the mentally ill from their own resources; and when these funds were first established.

Mrs. Currie: The following regional health authorities operate bridging funds for achieving the tansition to community based services for mentally ill people.

Regional Health Authority	Financial year of starting
Trent	1985-86
Yorkshire	1984-85
South-East Thames	1985-86
North-East Thames	1985-86
North-West Thames	1987-88
South-West Thames	1984-85
West Midlands	1987-88
East Anglian	1983-84
North Western	1984-85
Mersey	1987-88

Bridging funds are not the only financing mechanism for achieving such a change. Other regions have adopted different arrangements.

"A Child in Mind"

Mr. Higgins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will arrange for hon. Members to be able to obtain copies of the Louis Blom-Cooper report, entitled "A Child in Mind," on a Green Card from the Vote Office.

Mr. Newton: I regret that I am unable to do so, as this is not a departmental or Her Majesty's Stationery Office publication. However, I have arranged for copies to be placed in the Library.

District Health Authorities

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will consider addressing a meeting of chairmen of district health authorities in England and Wales to discuss current problems affecting the National Health Service.

Mrs. Currie: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State regular meets the chairmen of regional health authorities. They, in turn, are in close contact with their district health authority chairmen, whose views can thereby be conveyed to Ministers. In addition, I and my ministerial colleagues attend meetings of district chairmen with their regional chairman in the regions whenever possible.

Income Support

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services to what extent the introduction of income support will affect families with children whose breadwinner is not in work.

Mr. Scott: The information is set out in the "Impact of the Reformed Structure of Income-Related Benefits" which was published at the time of the uprating statement on 27 October 1987. Table 2A shows that 880,000 claimants under pension age who have children will have an increased entitlement and 270,000 will be unaffected by the change. Because of transitional protection no one in this group will experience a drop in total benefit income at the point of change. A copy of this document is in the Library.

Family Income Supplement

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what effects he expects the abolition of family income supplement to have on the income of families with children whose breadwinner is in work.

Mr. Scott: Family income supplement will be replaced by family credit, and we estimate that this new benefit should help more than twice as many families as family income supplement does at present. Almost all will receive more from family credit than from family income supplement, had it continued. Further details appear in tables 3A and 3B of "Impact of the reformed structure of income related benefits", October 1987, copies of which are available in the Library.

Departmental Offices (Staffing)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he intends to change the levels of staffing at his Department's offices in view of the changes in the social security regime in April; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The results of the annual local office recomplementing exercise for the 1988-89 year are expected to be announced in March 1988. These will take account of a number of factors including procedural changes arising from the implementation of income support and social fund.

Correspondence

Sir Geoffey Finsberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when the hon. Member for Hampstead and Highgate will receive a substantive response to the letter sent on 23 November 1987 to the Minister for Social Security and the Disabled about his constituent Mr. Duff and the attendance allowance requested for his wife.

Mr. Scott: I replied to my hon. Friend yesterday.

Compensation Payments

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if the arrangements with regard to the £8 compensation payments being made to pensioners with respect to the miscalculations of the retail prices index will provide that those pensioners who receive their benefits in the form of two concurrent books will receive two £8 payments, and those who have only one book will receive only one payment.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if claimants receiving more than one allowance will be eligible to receive the £8 payment in respect of each allowance being received; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member and my hon. Friend to my reply to the hon. Member for Dumbarton (Mr. McFall) on 4 February 1988.

Drivers (Eye Tests)

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his estimate of the level of charges for compulsory eye tests for motor vehicle drivers required to raise a sum equivalent to the sum expected to be raised by charging for eye tests under the Health and Medicines Bill, and if he will provide figures for tests at one year, two years and three year intervals, respectively.

Mr. Newton: The Health and Medicines Bill does not provide for revenue to be raised by charging for National Health Service sight tests. It proposes to limit the free NHS test to certain groups. Any charge for tests for those in other groups will be for those providing them to determine.

Coventry (Doctors Deputising Service)

Mr. John Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what information he has on the Coventry doctors deputising service's extra availability for heavily deprived areas;

(2) what information he has for each of the last five years for the spending on the Coventry doctors deputising service and the deputising usage rates for each family practitioner committee;

(3) what information he has as to the proposed 30 per cent. cut in the Coventry doctors deputising service; and on whose instructions the decision was taken.

Mr. Newton: Within the framework of the Department's guidance issued to family practitioner committees, policy on consent to use is a matter for individual FPCs to determine taking into account local conditions which may be modified for different parts of their area. I regret, therefore, that information on levels of usage is not readily available centrally. Nor is information held centrally on GPs' expenses specifically incurred for deputising services.

As far as Coventry is concerned, I understand that the FPC has no plans to cut levels of consent by 30 per cent. and that the needs of deprived areas are taken into account in deciding permitted levels of use by individual practices.

Medical Negligence

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has any plans, in the light of the Opren case, to propose amendments to the law relating to medical negligence.

Mr. Newton: We have no plans to amend the law in the light of the Opren case, still before the court, where allegations of negligence and liability have been neither admitted by the defendants nor determined by the court. Under the relevant provisions of the Consumer Protection Act 1987, which come into force on 1 March 1988, it will no longer be necessary for an individual to prove negligence in order to establish liability in a case where a court is satisfied that a defect in a medicinal product caused personal injury.

Private Nursing Homes

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will introduce legislation to empower community health councils to inspect private nursing homes to which National Health Service patients are discharged; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: Community health councils were set up to advise on the operation of the National Health Service in their districts. Community health councils have a statutory right to visit NHS hospital premises. Private nursing homes are outside the NHS and a statutory right to visit these does not exist. However it has been agreed with representations of the private health sector that CHCs should have access to appropriate parts of premises where NHS patients receive services under contractual arrangements. We have no plans to introduce legislation.

Medicines (Information)

Mr. Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what proposals he has to improve information about medicines.

Mr. Newton: I have placed in the Library a copy of a consultation package which has been issued on information about medicines, and which is being made widely available to professional, consumer, and industrial organisations.

The aim is promoting the safer use of medicines by improving information available to the public, doctors and pharmacists. In particular, it is proposed to require clearer label warnings and instructions, more information about composition, and manufacturer site identification. As required by S129(6) of the Medicines Act 1968, the next step is to have the views of representative organisations before making regulations.

Psychogeriatric Patients

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the numbers of psychogeriatric patients in the central Nottinghamshire health authority area for each year from 1979 to 1987 inclusive.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 15 January 1988]: Patients being treated for the psychiatry of old age (psychogeriatrics) may be seen in mental illness or psychiatric wards. Local practice varies and central data may therefore be misleading. The hon. Member may wish to write to the chairman of Central Nottinghamshire health authority for the information.

National Health Service (Funding)

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what extra revenue would be raised for the National Health Service if the weekly contribution from those in work were raised to its 1962-63 level of 17·2 per cent. of the National Health Service budget; and to what level weekly national insurance contributions would have to rise to meet this level of funding.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 21 January 1988]: An increase to 17·2 per cent. in the proportion of National Health Service net spending in Great Britain funded by the NHS contribution would have involved an extra £715 million being met from this source in 1987-88. The proportion of net spending funded by general taxation would have fallen correspondingly to 79 per cent. of the total. Such a change, if applied equally to employees and employers, would have required class 1 contribution rates in each case to be 0·2 per cent. higher.

Hospital Building

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if there are any plans for new hospital developments in the Nottingham, central Nottingham and Bassetlaw district health authority areas.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 1 February 1988]: The table gives details of major schemes over £1 million in total cost included in Trent regional health authority's larger schemes building programme over the strategic plan period to 1993-94. Individual district health authorities are responsible for capital development below this sum and the hon. Member may wish to approach the chairman of the DHAs concerned for information about these. The following schemes are currently in progress:

	Estimated total cost £ million	Currently estimated completion date
Bassetlaw Health Authority
Bassetlaw DGH phase 2	6·69	April 1990
Central Nottinghamshire Health Authority
Ashfield local hospital phase 1	[1]0·61	August 1988
Mansfield Victoria local hospital phase 1	[1]0·78	August 1988
Newark local hospital phase 1	[1]0·47	May 1988
Nottingham Health Authority
Sherwood hospital phase 4	1·13	January 1989
Nottingham general hospital—conversion of Trent wing	1·05	October 1988

The following schemes are at the detailed planning stage:

	Estimated total cost £ million	Currently estimated completion date
Bassetlaw Health Authority
Bassetlaw DGH phase 2A	4·8	1992
(The funding of this scheme remains subject to formal RHA approval).
Central Nottinghamshire Health Authority
Dukeries local hospital phase 1	[1]0·30	1988-89
Kings Mill hospital, Mansfield, phase 3	20·6	1991
Ashfield local hospital, phase 2	6·15	1992
Mansfield Victoria local hospital, phase 2	2·16	1992
Nottingham Health Authority
Nottingham city hospital, extension to X-ray department	5·0	1991
Nottingham city hospital, ESMI assessment unit	1·5	1991
Nottingham city hospital renal unit, and Nottingham city hospital, radiotherapy centre	8·0	1992
Rushcliffe local hospital	4·26	1992

The following schemes are also included in outline in the Regional Strategic Plan and remain subject to detailed planning:

	Estimated total cost £ million	Currently estimated completion date
Bassetlaw Health Authority

Infant Mortality

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the six health authorities with the highest percentage of post-neonatal deaths for each year since 1975.

Mrs. Currie [pursuant to her reply, 26 January 1988, c. 219]: The full information requested can be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, readily available figures for regional health authorities, and for district health authorities are shown in the tables.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Register of Interests

Mr. Madden: To ask the Lord President of the Council when the latest issue of the Members' Register of Interests is to be published; how many right hon. and hon. Members have submitted entries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wakeham: The Register of Members' Interests was laid before the House on 8 December 1987 and published on 28 January 1988. As to the number of right hon. and hon. Members who have registered their interests, I refer the hon. Gentleman to the first report of the Select Committee on Members' Interests (H.C. 199).

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Farm Woodlands Scheme

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many farmers have so far expressed an interest in applying for grants under the proposed farm woodlands grant scheme.

Mr. Gummer: As the Farm Land and Rural Development Bill is still before Parliament and as the subordinate legislation will need to be made when the Bill has received Royal Assent, we cannot launch this scheme until later this year. It would therefore be premature to try to estimate the likely level of interest. There have, however, been an encouraging number of general inquiries.

Pigmeat MCAs

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will estimate the annual cost to the Exchequer of the existing European Communities monetary compensatory amounts paid on pigmeat.

Mr. MacGregor: Expenditure on monetary compensatory amounts is fully funded by the Community budget to which the United Kingdom's contribution is about 20 per cent. before abatement by the Fontainebleau mechanism. However, the available figures do not show expenditure on pigmeat MCAs separately, and therefore no estimate can be made of the cost to the Exchequer of such expenditure.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish the estimated level of public expenditure planned for pigmeat monetary compensatory amounts between now and fiscal year 1992-93.

Mr. MacGregor: United Kingdom MCAs are paid as subsidies on imports and charged as levies on exports. Because of Community arrangements designed to simplify MCA administration, many transactions involving United Kingdom MCAs are handled in other member states. Moreover, United Kingdom provision figures do not identify pigmeat mcas separately. For these reasons, it is not possible to provide the answers sought.

EEC Export Refunds

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to ensure that European Community export refunds more accurately and quickly reflect changes in international currency exchanges.

Mr. MacGregor: The Commission is responsible for operating the export refund arrangements, and does so in conjunction with the various commodity management committees. We press for modifications whenever these are required by altered circumstances.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 126

SESSION 1987–88

25th January-5th February 1988

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc, between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instrument etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Mr Speaker and his deputies are brought together under the heading Speaker's rulings and statements.

Other contributions by Mr Speaker and his deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Money res = money resolution, Com = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
